[Text] Beirut, August 22 (XINHUA) -- Palestinian resistance fighters have begun their withdrawal group by group from Beirut. It means that the fifth Middle East crisis, which has lasted for over 70 days, is drawing to an end and that the situation in the Middle East is undergoing a change.

Israel's massive invasion of Lebanon to force the Palestinian guerrillas to withdraw from Beirut was a long-designed war action with the aim of helping the United States push its strategy of resolving step by step the Middle East issue. Israeli Minister of Defence Sharon has openly declared that Israel's military actions had greatly helped the United States win superiority over the Soviet Union in the Middle East.

The Israeli authorities have repeatedly stated that the objectives of their invasion of Lebanon were the withdrawal of the Palestinian forces from Beirut and the Syrian troops from Lebanon, and the establishment of a powerful government in Lebanon which would sign a peace treaty with Israel. Working in concert with Israel, the United States has repeatedly stated that all foreign forces should withdraw from Lebanon and a powerful Lebanese government should be established.

The Israeli aggression against Lebanon has made it more imperative to seek a just solution to the Middle East issue. Arab countries are planning to convene an Arab summit to discuss the eight-point Saudi proposal on the settlement of the Middle East problem. Yasir 'Arafat, chairman of the Executive Committee of the Palestine Liberation Organization, has also declared that his organization accepts all U.N. resolutions on the Palestine issue and the proposed mutual recognition between the PLO and Israel. This positive stand of the PLO has created a reasonable basis for a comprehensive and just solution to the Middle East issue.

What merits attention now is whether the U.S. authorities will face reality and recognize the legitimate rights of the Palestinian people after the fifth Middle East war. So far, the United States still refuses to recognize the Palestine Liberation Organization and insists that the PLO first accept the U.N. Resolution 242 and recognize Israel. As a condition for direct negotiation with Palestine, this position shows that the United States still has no intention to recognize the legitimate rights of the Palestinian people.

Israel's temporary superiority can press the PLO armed forces to withdraw from west Beirut but cannot solve the Palestinian problem, still less eliminate the revolutionary cause of Palestine.

PLO leader Yasir 'Arafat recently pointed out that the Palestinian people had proved with their heroic struggle that a just cause could never be eliminated. The peace-loving countries and people in the world all stand by the Palestinian people and sympathize with or support their cause. To achieve a just settlement of the Middle East issue, the legitimate rights of the Palestinian people must not be ignored. Otherwise, the turmoil that has lasted in the region for over 30 years will continue.

LU DINGYI CITES RECTIFICATION AS CRITICISM METHOD

[Speech by Lu Dingyi [7120 1353 0001]: "On Criticism and Self-Criticism"]

[Text] Whenever there are differences of opinion between party members and between cadres, the problem can always be solved if we can properly carry out criticism and self-criticism among them. Last year, at the sixth plenary session of the CPC Central Committee, we unanimously adopted the resolution on certain historical problems, criticizing Chairman Mao's mistakes and making a correct appraisal of his achievements and errors. This was really a job well done and also a good example of correctly carrying out criticism and self-criticism.

There are two methods, or rather two lines, of criticism and self-criticism.

The first method can be summed up as "ruthless struggle and merciless blows." This is the method Wang Ming and Kang Sheng borrowed from the Soviet Union. This method was repeatedly adopted during the rule of the Wang Ming line, in the "rescuing movement" in Yanan, and in the "Cultural Revolution." The common characteristics of these cases are to turn criticism among the comrades into blows at the enemy, to wantonly frame up comrades and to exaggeratedly criticize comrades. In order to criticize others, Wang Ming fabricated many "lines." Many "spies" were created in the "rescuing movement." And many "capitalist roaders" were created in the "Cultural Revolution." The common comment concerning the comrades' self-criticisms was "not thorough enough." Those who made self-criticisms were out of luck. The result of such a practice was: first, there was no inner-party democracy and the system of democratic centralism was destroyed; second, the movement of elimination of counterrevolutionaries was enlarged; third, worship of individuals gained group; fourth, bad people got to power; and fifth, the party degenerated.

This wrong method of "giving a final verdict with one stick" seemed very "straightforward," "thorough" and "satisfactory" at first. However, it did in fact lead to the subjugation of the party and the country.

Another method is the method of rectification [zheng feng 2419 7364] which was put forth by Chairman Mao during the Yanan rectification movement in 1942. It is necessary, by means of study, to unfold criticism and self-criticism, clarify our understanding, distinguish between right or wrong, and unite our comrades.

With regard to criticisms launched by the comrades, we must adopt a comradely approach, stress reasoning and seek truth from facts. We must oppose trumping up charges and exaggerations. We must allow the comrades to reply to the charges.

We must welcome the comrades' self-criticisms and must also wait patiently. We must be strict with ideological criticism and be lenient in taking disciplinary actions. We must uphold the principle of "curing the sickness to save the patient" and not "curing the sickness to kill the patient." "We must achieve unity on a new basis by means of criticism and self-criticism, starting from the desire for unity."

In the initial stage, the method of the Yanan rectification movement did not seem "straightforward," "complete" or "satisfactory" enough. However, reality later proved it to be very successful, and it has achieved an unprecedented unity in the party. A nationwide victory was obtained 4 years after the seventh party congress. The result was beyond anticipation.

The rectification movement completely isolated Wang Ming, leaving only Wang and his wife together, both of whom were reluctant to admit their mistakes. Comrade Bogu later became an "April 8th martyr." Comrade Zhang Wentian later cooperated with Chairman Mao. His ideas proposed during the Lushan meeting were correct, but he suffered prosecution during the "Great Cultural Revolution." Comrade Wang Jiaxiang made greater achievements and supported Chairman Mao during the Zunyi meeting.

He did not do anything wrong when he was director of the central liaison department but he was later dismissed on the grounds that he had promoted "the liquidation of struggle in its relations with imperialism, the reactionaries and modern revisionism, and reduction of assistance and support to the revolutionary struggle of other peoples" before the "Great Cultural Revolution." This was an unjust case. All these comrades have made sincere self-criticisms, and improvements were later reflected in their actual practice. Generally speaking, those who had been deceived by Mifu and Wang Ming were doing quite well after the rectification movement.

It is necessary to particularly mention here that Comrade Zhou Enlai set a very good example of making self-criticism. He seriously examined and resolutely corrected all kinds of mistakes, and also took responsibility for questions for which he was not liable. Apart from making self-criticisms inside the party, Comrade Zhou also made numerous self-criticisms among people outside the party. This has not infringed upon the lofty prestige of Comrade Enlai. On the contrary, his sincerity and confidence have enhanced his prestige.

What I would like to particularly mention is that Comrade Zhou Enlai was our model for making self-criticism. Once he made mistakes, he made self-criticisms and corrected them. Although he had nothing to do with some mistakes, he was held responsible for them. He made self-criticisms on various occasions not only inside the party, but also outside the party. This never impaired Comrade Enlai's lofty prestige. On the contrary, because he treated people with absolute sincerity and placed full confidence in them, his prestige was enhanced.

At that time, even those comrades who had always opposed Wang Ming's line also made self-criticisms, saying that they had shortcomings and mistakes because they had blind faith in the Communist International. They pledged to learn from Chairman Mao, carry out investigation and study and follow the work style of seeking truth from facts.

In this unprecedented way, the unity of the party was promoted.

Stalin committed mistakes with regard to the problems of the Chinese revolution. However, because he made self-criticisms and corrected his mistakes in practice, he still enjoyed high prestige in China.

"Men all make mistakes. It is good as long as they can correct their mistakes." This is a truth.

During the period of the Yanan rectification campaign, the principle "strict ideological criticism and lenient disciplinary measures" was correct. How strict was the criticism? We thoroughly exposed mistakes so that those who made them were shocked. After that we cured their sickness. How lenient were our disciplinary measures? They were so lenient that we persuaded deputies to elect Wang Ming as a member of the party Central Committee at the 7th and 8th party congresses. Facts have proved that what we did never harmed the party's cause. The period of the 7th and 8th party congresses was the "golden age" of our party.

The conditions of the "Great Cultural Revolution" were not entirely the same as those of Wang Ming's line. Some comrades did commit mistakes and counterrevolutionaries such as Lin Biao, Jiang Qing and others stirred up trouble. The methods to handle these matters were still complicated. Comrade Deng Yingchao said: During the "Great Cultural Revolution," counterrevolutionaries punished revolutionaries. What she said was right. The party Central Committee pointed out that "three kinds of people" should not be used. Those who are still used should be removed from their posts. Such a practice is also correct. Although we still encounter difficulties and obstructions, we should carry out this task resolutely.

At present, some comrades do not dare to make criticisms and self-criticisms. They are not all to blame for this. This was a "reaction" which occurred after the "Great Cultural Revolution." It will eventually disappear and we should accelerate its disappearance. Our party needs criticism and self-criticism. If we keep on "good terms with everyone at the expense of principle," the party's life will be vulgarized and our party will not have good prospects.

When Chairman Mao was carrying out the struggle against the mistakes of Zhang Guotao's line, he also pursued the principle of "clarity in ideology and unity among comrades." Finally, Zhang Guotao was so isolated that he fled. Even his orderly was unwilling to follow him. Later we allowed his wife to join him. When we were exposing and criticizing Zhang Guotao's mistakes, Comrade Xu Shiyou and others were detained once. Chairman Mao said that Zhang Guotao was sent to the fourth front army by the central authorities. Comrades working under him listened to what he had said. They were not all blamed for this. It was the central authorities who should bear the responsibility. Chairman Mao personally met Comrade Xu Shiyou and asked him what he would do. Comrade Xu Shiyou said that he would return to his home village to make revolution. Chairman Mao replied: You had better stay and work with us so that we may continue the revolution together. Comrade Xu Shiyou was persuaded to do so and afterward made a number of contributions.

Now the party is prepared after the 12th party congress to carry out a rectification campaign. The method to be employed, however, must be that used in 1942, and not the method of "brutal struggle and merciless blows," so that the whole party will be united as it has never been before.

RENMIN RIBAO HAILS STUDENTS' IDEOLOGICAL STUDIES

[Article by De Min [1795 3046]: "A Good Momentum"]

[Text] As we greet the 12th party congress, we have seen some material saying that the enthusiasm of a number of Beijing City university students in studying Marxism-Leninism-Mao Zedong Thought is higher than a few years back, and that their faith in communism is also stronger than at that time. Over 1,000 students at Qinghua University have registered to attend summer courses in Marxism-Leninism, 300 percent more than originally planned. By now the students of various faculties have voluntarily formed over 100 study groups. They say with pride: "Young people willing to fight for communism have come together again."

This is good momentum! Does Marxism-Leninism-Mao Zedong Thought actually have any attraction for young people of the 1980's? For some time now certain comrades have been doubting this, and some people even cried in alarm that a "crisis of faith" had occurred among young people. Looking at this fine momentum among young people now, it shows that these worries are unnecessary; moreover, even if the faith of certain young people in Marxism-Leninism has wavered, it is certainly not the case that such a situation cannot be changed.

Analyzing this fine momentum in studying Marxism-Leninism, we find two outstanding features:

First, these young people have clearly defined aims in study. They are not just reciting some Marxist-Leninist phrases by heart in order to show off; they are not aiming at treating Marxism-Leninism as a stepping-stone to the pursuit of private interests; and still less are they regarding Marxist-Leninist phrases as weapons for punishing people. Instead, they study in order to understand China and the world, analyze the complex social phenomena they face, and give themselves a guide for making ideological distinctions. In contrast to certain young people in the past, they are not satisfied with accepting readymade conclusions and do not like eating stuff chewed by others. They themselves want to boldly leap into the ocean of the truth of Marxism-Leninism-Mao Zedong Thought to test the depths and shallows and find out what it is all about.

Secondly, these young people pay attention to comparisons and distinctions when they study. They have absorbed the lesson of being cheated by counterfeit goods during the "Cultural Revolution," and do not lightly believe things and follow blindly. They read Marxist-Leninist books; and they also browse through non-Marxist-Leninist and even anti-Marxist-Leninist books, and distinguish between true and sham science by making comparisons. Some of them even first study existentialism and pragmatism, but when these fashionable goods of Western philosophy are unable to extricate them from perplexity and emptiness, they turn to Marxism-Leninism and derive real knowledge and deep insight from it. Marxism-Leninism mastered in this way is relatively sound, and relatively capable of withstanding the challenges of all kinds thought trends in society.

These two special features abound with the characteristics of the 1980's. They are the products of certain historical conditions and the results of the moves of the 3d plenary session of the 11th Central Committee to bring order out of chaos and carry out radical reforms. This momentum in the study of Marxism-Leninism is different from the upsurge in study in the 1950's. The "mass study movement" comprising stuff such as "daily study," and "seeking instructions in the morning and reporting back in the evening" was in fact nothing more than a covert religious ceremony with evil intentions; it was blasphemy of Marxism-Leninism-Mao Zedong Thought. The upsurge in study in the 1950's was valuable. Young people at that time were relatively pure, and famed as "a sheet of blank paper." Since they were as pure as a sheet of blank paper, it was relatively easy to imbue them with Marxism-Leninism-Mao Zedong Thought; and because they were as pure as a sheet of blank paper they were also fragile and brittle and apt to believe things lightly. It cannot be said that there was no definite inherent link between the study upsurge of the 1950's and the crazy "battle of quotations" during the "Cultural Revolution." Having traversed a tortuous path, history has now produced a new momentum. Compared with that of the 1950's, the thinking of young people of the 1980's is much more complex and they are also much more mature. Their study and thoughts on Marxism-Leninism will certainly be much more profound than that of the young people of the 1950's. This is to be expected.

An important task facing the party organizations at all levels is, how to adroitly guide action according to the circumstances and ensure that this upsurge of study that has appeared develops in a sustained, more extensive and deeper way. A very important point here is that it is essential to correctly sum up the positive and negative experiences in leading young people to study Marxism-Leninism over the past 30 years. It is imperative to refrain from indulging any more in issuing compulsory orders and in formalism. Instead, we must properly create new study methods and organizational forms in light of the characteristics of young people of the 1980's

CHEN YUN CITED ON REINFORCING PARTY SPIRIT

[Article by Fu Zhong [0265 6945]: "Strive To Reinforce Party Spirit -- After Reading Comrade Chen Yun's Speech"]

[Text] In May of this year, while commemorating the 40th anniversary of the publication of Comrade Mao Zedong's "Talks at the Yanan Forum on Literature and Art," the important speech "On the Question of Two Tendencies Among the Party's Literature and Art Workers" made by Comrade Chen Yun in March 1943 was republished, and it touched my heart deeply. This speech made a thorough Marxist analysis on the two tendencies of "elitism" and "arrogance" which existed in the minds of some of the party's literature and art workers, hitting the mark with sincere words and earnest advice. Rereading this speech today helps us to understand the present and gives me valuable insights as well. At present, I think, this speech not only exercises its powerful effect in educating the party's literature and art workers, but is also of great guiding significance in enhancing the communist awareness of all party members and in strengthening their tempering of party spirit.

In his speech, Comrade Chen Yun hoped that the party's literature and art workers would first of all treat themselves as ordinary party members, and not cultured people different from others. This is indeed a very important issue of principle, because our party is a unified and fighting vanguard of the proletariat, not a "union of all circles." Although every party member has his own work in society, he is also a fighter in the struggle for communism under the party's leadership and must have tough party spirit. Like the Communist Party members on other fronts, the party's literature and art workers must not be exceptions on this important issue of principle.

Let us make a review. When Comrade Chen Yun delivered this speech, the whole party was conducting a rectification campaign to clear away the influence of the Wang Ming line and establish Mao Zedong Thought, which integrates the universal truth of Marxism-Leninsim with the concrete practice of the Chinese revolution, as the guiding thought of the whole party, thus vigorously strengthening ideological consciousness and the understanding of party spirit of the vast number of cadres (including cadres in the literature and art field), particularly those leading cadres at middle and high levels. As a result, the party's unity and fighting power was greatly raised and various aspects of work proceeded victoriously along the correct road. However, just as Comrade Chen Yun pointed out, there were indeed some among the party's literature and art workers who, due to their previous experience of working separately, receiving less instruction from the party and doing a bad job in integrating themselves with the workers, peasants and soldiers, still had the two defects of "elitism" and "arrogance." If these two defects were not rectified promptly, it would have been harmful to the party's literature and art cause. It was precisely aiming at this state of affairs that Comrade Chen Yun's speech touched the essence of the problem from a strategically advantageous positon and made the literature and art workers realize the necessity and urgency of overcoming this erroneous tendency. This prompted the literature and art workers to integrate themselves with the new era of the masses by going to the countryside and joining the armymen in accordance with the spirit of the "Talks" and opening up a new road of developing literature and art.

Here, we must see Comrade Chen Yun's leadership skill of using criticism as a weapon to educate the cadres and push forward the party's cause. To criticize the two tendencies of "elitism" and "arrogance," he did not enumerate phenomena and exaggerate facts. Instead, he adhered to seeking truth from facts and taught with skill and patience. Treating phenomena as a guide in understanding problems and then grasping the internal connection and essence of the problems, he made complete and profound analyses so as to make people understand why "elitism" and "arrogance" were wrong, understand their roots and understand how to conscientiously be determined to overcome them. Undoubtedly, this leadership skill of Comrade Chen Yun of convincing people by reasoning deserves our study.

Some comrades may say that there are only these two defects of "elitism" and "arrogance" which are minor mistakes of no importance. This is a completely wrong view. The "elitism" and "arrogance" which Comrade Chen Yun criticized are wrong tendencies against party spirit. This wrong idea always sees an individual in his relationship with the party and the masses in an incorrect light, and treats them wrongly. It is quite obvious that one cannot become a genuine ordinary party member and a qualified Communist Party member with tough party spirit if one has this shortcoming.

Party members engaging in literature and art work must resolve this problem well and party members engaging in other work must also resolve this problem well. Ordinary party cadres must also do a good job of resolving this problem, and in particular, so must party cadres at middle and high levels. At present, we must pay attention to those problems which were resolved in the past, and we can never relax in regard to these, even in the future. Therefore, Comrade Chen Yun's speech is of universal and far-reaching educational significance.

Whether one has a proper relationship with the party, the masses and the general situation has much to do with one's attitude toward one's personal merits and mistakes. At the party's national congress held in 1945, Comrade Chen Yun went a step further to make a thorough exposition on how to treat merits and mistakes from the viewpoint of historical materialism. This part of his speech was published this year, and it was entitled "Stress Truth, Not Face." He pertinently pointed out that the reason why we were powerful and had made achievements lay "first, in the people, second, in the party and third, in the individuals." If we have a better understanding on this, we will put our individual status in an appropriate position at all times and will never be conceited. Also, we wil remain modest and maintain communist purity. This is because, as Communist Party members, we must do our work well according to different assignments. This is the way to "perform our own duty for the party and the people; failing to do it well means that we neglect our duty and are disqualified." Therefore, we must use the weapon of self-criticism to conscientiously overcome shortcomings and improve our work. This is a manifestation of party spirit as well as an expression of treating our own merits and mistakes from the viewpoint of historical materialism. The practices of "claiming merits and shifting mistakes," and "being delighted when merits are mentioned and being resentful when demerits are mentioned," which Comrade Chen Yun criticised, are the manifestation of lacking party spirit and going against historical materialism.

Our party's glorious tradition and fine style were seriously damaged and people were confused ideologically in distinguishing right from wrong during the 10 years of chaos when the Lin Biao and Jiang Qing counterrevolutionary cliques were in power. At a time when we are clearing away their poisonous influence, these two important speeches of Comrade Chen Yun are really good medicine for bringing order out of chaos and driving out evil practices.

Good medicine tastes bitter, but it cures sickness. Both "leftist" and rightist mistakes are sickness. The tendency of bourgeois liberalization which exists in the minds of some literature and art workers of our party is sickness; so is the tendency of "elitism" which exists in the minds of some cadres of our party. They are the results of invasion and erosion by the ideology of the bourgeoisie, and feudalist and other exploiting classes. Sickness has many forms, but they will have the same root of individualism. Whether it was the practice of "elitism" "self-importance" and "being proud of one's merits" in the past or the "liberalization" and "elitism" at present, they are all closely associated with individualism. Undoubtedly, no matter what banner it may uphold or how elegantly it may be garbed, individualism is something absolutely nonproletarian, is incompatible with communism and goes against the proletarian world outlook. Marx and Engels said that when taking part in the proletarian movement, people of other classes "must first of all not bring in any remnant of bourgeois or petit-bourgeois prejudice, but should master the proletarian world outlook unconditionally." ("Selected Works of Marx and Engels," vol 3, pp 373-374) This principle remains very important even today. Whether it is the vices one had before one joined the party or the nonproletarian virus one is afflicted by at the moment, we must resolutely get rid of them by using the proletarian world outlook and Communist Party spirit. If we allow it to exist, it means we are giving a free hand to the virus in impairing the healthy body of the party. This is absolutely impermissible.

The unconditional mastering of the proletarian world outlook is closely linked with vigorously strengthening the tempering of party spirit. Every comrade must always pay attention to this problem. No matter what work we do or what position we hold, we must never neglect this fundamental problem and slacken off. On the contrary, the greater the achievements we make in our work and the more important the positions we hold, the higher the demands we must set on ourselves in maintaining political unanimity with the party Central Committee, in earnestly studying Marxism-Leninism-Mao Zedong Thought, in strengthening organization and discipline, in adhering to the ideological line of seeking truth from facts and in removing the "leftist" and rightist interference.

We must closely link ourselves with the masses, carry forward the fine tradition of plain living and hard struggle, fight against "elitism" and "liberalization" and effectively resist the corrosion of nonproletarian ideology. As long as the comrades of the whole party, particularly the leading cadres, carry out the above conscientiously, we will be as Comrade Chen Yun said: "Our comrades never harbor any evil intentions. They are practical and realistic, free from individualism. They can withstand an army 100,000 or even 1 million strong. This is an invincible force."

There is no doubt that we will be able to achieve this under the powerful leadership of the party Central Committee. Thereby, our party and the construction of the material civilization and socialist spiritual civilization of our country will illumiate the whole of China and the whole world with brilliant and grandiose radiance.

[Text] Beijing, 23 Aug (XINHUA) -- The State Council recently promulgated "The Provisional Regulations Governing Price Control" and issued a circular asking provincial, regional and municipal people's governments and State Council ministries, commissions and offices to seriously implement it.

The State Council circular says: Commodity price has a direct bearing on social production and the people's livelihood. It has been our country's consistent policy to ensure basic price stability. The "Regulations" are an important decree governing price control work. All localities and related departments should, in accordance with the guidelines of the "Regulations" and their actual conditions, set up and perfect their price control offices and strengthen price control and supervision.

The circular urges all localities to commend and give encouragement to units and individuals who implement the country's price principles, policies and regulations and who observe price discipline in an exemplary way, and to sternly deal with those who violate price discipline in accordance with the law. It urges them to conduct price control work in a way that will promote the development of production, increase commodity flows, stabilize the people's livelihood and ensure the smooth progress of socialist construction.

The "Regulations" stipulate: Following the principle of bringing into play the supplementary, regulatory role of the market in a planned economy on the basis of socialist ownership and in light of the different degrees of impact of the various commodities on the national economy and the people's livelihood, three different price forms have been adopted. They are: prices fixed by the state, prices fixed by the enterprises within the range set by state stipulations and trade fair prices. State-fixed prices shall be the dominant form.

The "Regulations" stipulate: The state shall implement the policy of unified leadership and differentiated control over price work.

The principles, policies, laws and regulations, as well as plans for commodity price shall be drawn up and approved by the State Council.

The prices of industrial and agricultural products, transportation and communication charges, noncommodity charges and material handling charges of primary importance shall be fixed by the State Council commodity price bureau and by State Council departments responsible for those products. The prices of industrial and agricultural products, transportation and communications charges and noncommodity charges of secondary importance shall be fixed by the commodity price office and responsible departments of the local people's governments. Industrial and commercial enterprises have the right to fix prices of other industrial and agricultural products and noncommodity charges within the framework of state policies and regulations.

On the control of industrial and agricultural products, the "Regulations" stipulate: Farm and sideline products of the first and second categories must be bought and sold at state fixed prices.

The State Council shall decide which products sell at a higher price for the above quota portion and which products receive price subsidies. The scope of such commodities and the extent of price increases and subsidies set by the State Council shall be observed. No localities or departments are allowed to change them without authorization.

The framework set by the State Council for the scope, pricing and price control of farm and sideline produce bought or sold at negotiated prices shall be observed. No localities, departments or enterprises are allowed to expand the scope or increase the negotiated prices.

Prices for commodities sold at rural and urban peasant markets are to be set by consultation between sellers and buyers within the framework of state policies and regulations. State commercial departments should, in a planned manner, buy or put on sale commodities in order to regulate prices at peasant markets.

State-priced heavy industrial products, regardless of whether they are produced under state plans or are within the production quotas, shall be sold and bought at state-fixed prices. Their prices are not negotiable. State Council regulations shall be followed when fixing temporary factory prices, local factory prices and coordinated prices [xie zuo jia 0588 0155 0116] for certain prices.

State-priced textile products and handicrafts, regardless of whether they are produced under state plans or are within the production quotas, shall be bought and sold at state-fixed prices. Their prices are not negotiable. The provincial, regional and municipal people's governments shall decide the scope and make a list of small commodities in the third category of textile products and in the handicraft category for pricing through consultation. Industrial and commercial enterprises shall then fix the prices of these small commodities through consultation in accordance with the pricing policy.

For industrial products to be bought and sold at floating prices, price control departments and departments responsible for those particular products shall decide the scope of the commodities and the extent of floating according to their price control authority. Enterprises shall observe the scope and the extent set by these departments.

The prices of new products shall be fixed in a way that will promote their development and use. During the period of exploratory sales, the enterprises shall fix prices on the basis of the production cost and by consulting the prices of similar products. For the record, it shall then file the prices with the price control department and the department responsible for those particular products. The exploratory sales prices of important new products shall be approved by provincial, regional or municipal price control departments. The period of exploratory sales shall be 1 year and shall not exceed 2 years at most.

The "Regulations" stipulate that the price departments or the business departments concerned may act on their price control authorities and set minimum protective prices for the purchase of certain farm and sideline products in remote, mountainous and minority nationality areas and set maximum limits to the selling prices of certain manufactured goods.

Commodities purchased by individual workers from state-owned industrial and commercial enterprises and collective enterprises are sold at retail prices prescribed by the state. Goods produced from raw and semifinished materials supplied by the materials departments may be sold at prices according to quality in reference to similar products produced by state-owned enterprises. Farm and sideline products purchased at negotiated prices, small commodities of the third category, light and textile industrial products and small commodities of handicraft products may be sold at prices individually determined according to relevant state regulations.

Prices of imported and exported commodities, prices of commodities of enterprises using Chinese and foreign investment, and foreign enterprises and prices of commodities supplied to foreigners, overseas Chinese and compatriots from Hong Kong and Macao are all under the control of these regulations unless otherwise stipulated by the state.

With regard to price control for communications and transport, as well as fees charged for noncommodities, the "Regulations" stipulate that passenger and freight transport charges by railways and civil aircraft, transport charges by pipeline, passenger and cargo charges by enterprises directly under the Ministry of Communications for water transport, port dues as well as postal and telecommunications charges must be controlled by regulations of the State Council, the state price bureau or the relevant business departments under the State Council according to their respective price control authorities. Localities, departments, enterprises and institutions may not change the prices and charges without authorization and may not levy additional fees.

Charges to tourists, rents for civilian houses, room charges in hotels, guesthouses and hostels, medical charges, tuition and other fees of middle and primary schools, charges for park and cinema admissions, charges for baths, haircuts and photographs, and charges for other repairs and services related to the people's daily life must follow standards stipulated by price control authorities. The localities, departments, enterprises and institutions must enforce the prescribed standards and may not change the standard charges or add new items without authorization or lower service quality.

The standard fees for service and repair trades and nonmotorized transport services operated by indivual workers may be determined through discussions by the individual workers' associations, or negotiated by the suppliers and receivers.

"The Provisional Regulations Governing Price Control" also contain specific rules on questions concerning price supervision, rewards and punishments.

CHINA DAILY: HONGQI DISCUSSES ECONOMIC IMBALANCE

HK250222 Beijing CHINA DAILY in English 25 Aug 82 p 4

[Report on article in Hongqi by Chen Peizhang and Jiamg Zhenyun: "Time Has Come To End Economic Imbalance"]

[Text] What is the relationship between accumulation and consumption? What problems remain unsolved?

In 1979 the party Central Committee decided to adjust the national economy. One important decision was to change the distribution of national income, to reduce gradually the percentage going to capital construction (the accumulation fund) and to increase the percentage going to consumer goods (the consumption fund). In 1978 the accumulation fund had reached 36.5 per cent, third highest since the founding of the People's Republic. After the adjustment, it dropped to 28.3 per cent in 1981.

In the distribution of the accumulation fund,the portion spent on productive capital construction (factories and the like) has been reduced, while the portion spent on non-productive construction has been increased considerably.

Of the total investment for capital construction in 1981, the proportion that went into production goods fell to 58.8 per cent from 82.6 per cent in 1978. Or expressed the other way around, the proportion of non-productive construction investment — that is, for directly satisfying the people's material and cultural needs — rose from 17.4 per cent to 41.2 per cent. The proportion going to housing alone rose from 7.8 per cent to 25.5 per cent.

In productive construction investment, the ratio between light and heavy industries has also been adjusted, The proportion going to light industry rose from 6.1 per cent in 1978 to 10 per cent in 1981, while that going to heavy industry fell from 50.9 per cent to 40.3 per cent.

Adjustment of the ratio between accumulation and consumption has improved the life of both urban and rural people.

Because of the rise in state purchasing prices of some farm produce and sideline products, coupled with the practice of paying more for over-quota production, the income of peasants has greatly increased, which has cost the state 48,100 million yuan in the last three years.

In addition, the state has remitted some rural taxation, which cost it 7,800 million yuan.

These two things combined have meant a gain in income of 55,900 million yuan for the peasants, an average of 70 yuan each.

In the cities, most factory and office workers have seen their wages rise. With more than 26 million people employed, the bonus system widespread and workers receiving a subsidy to compensate for foods price increases, the total wages of factory and office workers in 1981 were 44 per cent more than in 1978. Despite the climbing prices of certain goods, the average worker's purchasing power has risen 12 per cent since 1978.

Two factors show how the people's living standards have risen: the increases in aggregate sales of consumer goods and the growth of savings deposits.

Consumption

But new problems concerning the ratio between accumulation and consumption have arisen and need to be solved urgently.

First, nearly all of the newly-increased national income has been used for consumption. From 1979 to 1981, the usable amount of national income has increased 87,400 million yuan, of which 87,100 million has been spent on consumption. Necessary as it is, we have to admit that a part of the consumption fund has been increased blindly, including some over-quota farm prices and some industrial bonuses.

Second, despite steady improvements in the national econpmy, state revenue has dropped. In 1981, the total output value of industry and agriculture rose 180,000 million yuan, whereas the state's revenue decreased 11,700 million yuan. The main cause was a reduction in profits turned over to the state, In the last two years, the state has had to borrow money from local administrations and enterprises.

Third, all kinds of subsidies for improving people's lives and promoting industrial and agricultural production have been on the increase.

Subsidies

In 1981, subsidies to the people, both urban and rural, averaged 32 yuan per head -- a total of 31,600 million yuan.

We should be concerned that subsidies have become a heavy load on the state, making it impossible to amass enough funds for much necessary construction.

All these problems have resulted from misapplying some aspects of the present economic system, from the irrationality of the pricing system, and from hastiness in adjusting accumulation and consumption rates. Above all, haphazard use of accumulation funds and economic inefficiency have been basic causes.

In solving these problems, these measures should be taken:

-- State revenues should be increased in order to guarantee construction of major state projects. The ratio between the income of the state, local administrations and industrial enterprises should also be adjusted, with an increase in the funds amassed by the state and with proper consideration to the needs of local enterprises.

-- Accumulation funds must be spent wisely so as to achieve good economic results. In recent years, funds allocated for capital construction have been cut remarkably, while projects constructed with funds from local enterprises and from bank loans have both been allowed. The latter types of projects based on self-collected funds should be brought into line with state planning. There should be overall balance in spending and overall planning.

-- The state's accumulated funds must be spent on major projects, particularly on energy resources and transportation. Local and enterprise construction funds should be spent mainly on technological improvement of enterprises.

-- State subsidies should be reduced. A practical way to do this is to change the losses of some enterprises into profits and to enable most of the enterprises to increase their profits.

-- Consumption must be increased by raising the people's income.

COLLECTIVE AGRICULTURAL ECONOMY REPORTED IMPROVED

[Excerpts] Beijing, 23 Aug (XINHUA) -- Statistics provided by the State Statistical Bureau show that with the implementation of the various economic policies in our country's rural areas and with the establishment of various production responsibility systems since 1978, the trend of falling economic results from expenditures of the collective agriculture has reversed and is rising.

Since 1956 the net income per 100 yuan of expenditure of our country's collective agricultural economy had dropped continually, reaching its lowest point in 1977 with a net income per 100 yuan of expenditure of 181 yuan. In 1978 the situation began to change for the better and the net income per 100 yuan of expenditure rose to 186.7 yuan. In 1981 the net income per 100 yuan of expenditure was 218.4 yuan, an increase of 37.4 yuan in net income and 20.7 percent in economic results over 1977, and 31.7 yuan and 17 percent respectively over 1978.

Since the implementation of various forms of production systems in the rural areas throughout the country in 1978, peasants' investments in production have increased rapidly in order to gain increased incomes. In 1978 the production expenses of the basic accounting units in rural areas throughout the country amounted to 35.78 billion yuan. In 1981 this increased to 39.24 billion yuan, up 3.46 billion yuan. With increases in other expenditures, the expenses totaled 42.742 billion yuan in 1981, or 10.7 percent over that in 1978. Now, every peasant is trying to obtain the best economic results with the smallest investment. They have raised the land utilization rate; no longer apply excessive fertilizers and pesticides; take good care of farm implements; save energy and work more conscientiously in plowing, sowing, hoeing and harvesting. This has brought two results: 1) output and output value have increased rapidly; and 2) waste has been greatly reduced. The rapid output increase and reduced waste have quickly increased the economic results from expenditures.

HU YAOBANG INSPECTS NORTHERN PROVINCES, REGIONS

[Text] Beijing, 24 Aug (XINHUA) -- At a recent meeting with Daqing cadres, Hu Yaobang, chairman of the CPC Central Committee, said: Daqing is a dazzling pearl in our country's socialist modernization drive. It is a symbol that the Chinese people have the aspirations and abilities to build a powerful socialist country. In the new historical period, Daqing should carry forward its fine tradition, make new contributions and continue to march ahead of the Chinese worker class.

Between 13 and 21 August, Comrade Hu Yaobang successively visited Qiqihar City, Harbin City and Keshan County in Heilongjiang Province; Baicheng City in Jilin Province and Hulun Buir League and Jirem League in Nei Monggol Autonomous Region. He visited factories, coal mines, pastoral areas, scientific research units and production brigades; talked with workers, cadres, scientific and technical personnel and commune members; visited agricultural households under contract for specialized production lines and listened to briefings by leading comrades of provinces, cities, prefectures (leagues) and counties.

On 18 August he went to Daqing, visited oil wells, the 300,000-ton ethylene integrated chemical works now under construction and other projects and spoke to more than 1,800 cadres of the oilfield.

In his speech, Comrade Hu Yaobang pointed out: In the past 20-odd years, Daqing's cadres and workers have produced 610 million tons of crude oil creating a wealth of more than 57 billion yuan for the country. It is the enterprise that has made the greatest contributions in the whole country. The party and the people will never forget this. Our descendants should not forget either. What is more important is that Daqing is an example proving that the Chinese people have high aspirations, wisdom and the ability to build their motherland into a modern, powerful, socialist country. The party and the people will always remember and think of Ironman Wang and other comrades who gave their lives in building Daqing. The party and the people will also remember and respect the comrades who have worked for and made contributions to Daqing's construction whether they have retired or are still at their work posts.

Comrade Hu Yaobang pointed out: The meritorious services of the Daqing people have been recorded in history, but Daqing's workers and staff members will not rest on their glorious history.

He earnestly hoped that the Daqing workers and staff members would outstandingly fulfill three great fighting tasks from now on. First, they should continue to make high quality contributions to the country. In addition to ensuring high yield and stable crude oil production, they should simultaneously try to expand the scope of secondary exploration, increase reserves, do a good job in processing crude oil at a high level, ensure the success of the 300,000-ton ethylene integrated chemical plant and build Daqing into a comprehensive industrial and mining area with the combined development of the petrochemical industry, agriculture and light industry with emphasis on the first. Second, they should carry forward Daqing's fine tradition and attain a higher ideological consciousness, a higher scientific and technical level, a stronger sense of organization and discipline and still higher aspirations than they displayed in the 1960's and the 1970's. Third, they should turn Daqing into an industrial base with a clean and beautiful environment, safe and convenient facilities for the people and, based on the efforts of workers and staff members, increase output, explore more production possibilities and quickly raise their income.

While conducting investigations in various localities, Comrade Hu Yaobang discussed quickening the pace in developing agricultural and pastoral production. He pointed out: It is necessary to have a wide field of vision and suit measures to local conditions. While paying attention to grain production, efforts must be made to think of more plans for developing forestry, animal husbandry, sideline production, the fishery and processing industries. There are vast and lush grasslands in Heilongjiang and Nei Monggol. It is essential to fully use this resource to more vigorously develop animal husbandry. Particular efforts must be made to raise more milch cows and appropriately develop small scale and scattered processing industries for dairy products. This calls for no significant investments and will make peasants and herdsmen become well-to-do even more rapidly. Not only will grain production not be hampered, the consumption of food grain is expected to gradually drop following the development of livestock breeding and gradual changes in the people's diet.

Comrade Hu Yaobang highly praised the system of responsibility with contracts for specialized production. In Qiqihar where he heard fears expressed by those households which have signed contracts for specialized production in breeding milch herds that later "their tails may be cut off," he encouraged them, saying: "Boldly carry out your work!" In Hulun Buir League he saw peasants and herdsmen living scattered throughout the vast region. In such an area, it is also necessary to organize mobile, specialized households for marketing and procuring products. With permission, those specialized households are commissioned to procure scattered local and animal products, and also market the various types of manufactured goods needed by peasants and herdsmen. Conducive to promoting a commodity economy, this practice will serve local agricultural and pastoral production as well as the livelihood of peasants and herdsmen.

While meeting with the leading cadres in Heilongjiang Province, Harbin City and those of the Songhuajiang Prefectural CPC Committee and the PLA units stationed in the prefecture, talking to the leading cadres in Baicheng Prefecture, Jilin, and those in the nine cities and counties in the prefecture, and inspecting the Yiminhe and (Hulinhe) coal mining areas, Comrade Hu Yaobang repeatedly stressed the paramount importance of investigation and study at the grassroots. He said: Only by attaining rich perceptual knowledge, particularly a host of firsthand information at the grassroots, can one possibly acquire scientific and realistic rational knowledge and arrive at correct decisions. If one does not carry out investigations and study, only stays in the house to listen to briefings and handles affairs in a crude, careless and specious manner, he will either endlessly dispute over trifles or arrive at wrong conclusions. This is a conspicuous manifestation of the unhealthy party style at present. He also said: During the years of the revolutionary war, many of our senior commanders personally checked frontline terrain and gathered information of crucial importance for war. This fine tradition must be brought into full play in the new period. We should not ask our old comrades who are old and physically weak to do so. However, all comrades under 65, particularly those who are under 55 and at various leading posts, should work hard to achieve this goal.

Comrade Hu Yaobang also discussed the issue of promoting middle-aged and young cadres. He said: In addition to the fact that leading cadres must go down to work at the grassroots, it is also necessary to help promote young and competent cadres to leading posts. Only by achieving these two aspects, will our cause flourish. Old cadres must also regard the work of promoting young, competent cadres to leading posts as the greatest and most glorious historical task. Old cadres' merits and achievements will not be forgotten. We must make the proper arrangements for taking good care of them. Young cadres must closely unite with and rely on the masses at all times, and humbly and sincerely learn from these fair-minded, selfless old comrades.

When Comrade Hu Yaobang arrived in Paicheng Municipality, a forum was being held by old cadres who had either retired or were on convalescence leave in Kaicheng Prefecture to exchange their work experience. Comrade Hu Yaobang was very pleased to meet these old cadres who had either retired or were on convalescence leave. He greeted them and asked about their living and physical conditions. With great emotion, these old cadres told him that as long as they live, they would act according to the instructions and demands of the party Central Committee, do whatever they can to benefit the people and society, and contribute their remaining efforts to the cause of the party.

JUSTICE MINISTER INTERVIEWED ON NEW LAWS

[Text] Beijing, August 23 (XINHUA) -- Of the 300 laws and regulations issued by China in the past few years nearly 250 concern economic development, according to Liu Fuzhi, minister of justice, in a XINHUA interview here today. Around 150 more economic regulations are now being drawn up, he added.

The minister described the improved legislation as part of the efforts to strengthen the socialist legal system and ensure the smooth progress of the country's modernization programme.

Some of these new laws and regulations were approved by the National People's Congress or its Standing Committee. Most of them were formulated by the State Council or ministries and departments directly under the State Council.

These new laws and regulations help maintain social order, consolidate the political stability and unity and deter criminal and economic offences, the minister said.

The minister said the draft of the revised constitution which is now being discussed by the people throughout the country stipulates: "All organs of state and peoples armed forces, all political parties and public organizations and all enterprises and institutions must abide by the constitution and the law. No organization or individual shall enjoy privileges that transcend the constitution and the law." That is to say that the leadership and all activities of the Chinese Communist Party in the country's political life should be conducted within the scope of the constitution and the law. The constitution and the law reflect the unity of people's will. The stipulations provide that principal leaders of the country including the chairman and vice-chairmen of the National People's Congress Standing Committee, chairman and vice-chairman of the People's Republic of China and premier and vice-premiers and state councillors may be re-elected but shall not serve more than two consecutive terms. The rights of citizens are inseparable from their duties, and prescribed by the constitution.

The minister also listed the following facts to demonstrate the continuous improvement of the country's legal system:

-- Many veteran legal workers have returned to their original posts and a large number of young people have been trained. The total now numbers more than one million.

-- With the restoration of some institutes and departments of political science and law which were closed during the "Cultural Revolution", the country now has had four such institutes and 22 departments which train some 4,000 professional legal workers each year. Many law schools, training classes and short-term courses train additional legal personnel.

-- The systems of lawyers and notary public have been restored and expanded. There are now more than 2,000 law advisory offices, 10,000 professional and part-time lawyers and more than 1,000 notary public offices throughout the country.

-- Traditional people's mediation has been strengthened. The whole country now has a total of more than 800,000 grass-root mediating committees with nearly 5 million mediators. They have dealt with a dozen times more civil disputes than civil cases of first instance handled by the basic people's courts.

-- Publication of a dozen or so periodicals and journals specializing in law throughout the country, including the journal CHINA LEGAL SYSTEM, which is available abroad, in addition to those published by localities.

ZHANG JINGFU ON EQUIPMENT MANAGEMENT, COAL

Economic Commission Meeting

[Excerpts] Beijing, 23 Aug (XINHUA) -- The State Economic Commission held a meeting today to hear reports on equipment management. Hao Jianxiu, minister of textile industry, made a report entitled "Rely on Science and Technology To Develop Production in Textile Industry," and Zheng Shuangxi, vice president of the maintenance society under the China Engineering Society, delivered a report entitled "On the Role and Urgent Task of Equipment Management in the Drive for the Four Modernizations."

Yuan Baohua, vice chairman of the State Economic Commission, presided over the meeting. More than 2,000 persons attended the meeting including Hu Juewen, vice chairman of the NPC Standing Committee; Hu Ziang, vice chairman of the CPPCC National Committee; leading cadres in charge of equipment of industrial and communications departments under the State Council; as well as leading cadres in charge of equipment and responsible persons of some key enterprises in Beijing and Tianjin.

Addressing the meeting, Zhang Jingfu, state councillor and chairman of the State Economic Commission, said: Bringing the role of existing enterprises into full play is an important matter which deserves our attention in economic construction. As a result of construction undertaken over the past 30-odd years since the founding of the PRC, our country now has 380,000 industrial enterprises with fixed assets valued at 400 billion yuan. This is an important material foundation for the four modernizations. However, owing to the damage caused in "the 10 years of turmoil," the equipment of many enterprises in our country has fallen into rather serious disrepair. There are also many problems in equipment management. Effective measures should be taken to solve such problems in connection with the current enterprises consolidation.

Zhang Jingfu set six requirements for strengthening equipment management and maintenance:

First, it is necessary to strengthen leadership and put equipment management in a correct relationship with production activities. The industrial and communications departments under the State Council and all provincial, municipal and autonomous regional economic commissions should strengthen their equipment management organizations and assign leading comrades to take charge of work in this regard.

Second, in equipment maintenance, it is necessary to uphold the principle of "putting prevention first and paying equal attention to maintenance and planned overhaul."

Third, it is necessary to carry out technical transformation and equipment renewal in a planned and systematic way in connection with equipment overhaul in order to improve the technical operation and production efficiency of equipment.

Fourth, equipment building departments should do a good job in providing technical service and in producing and supplying spare parts.

Fifth, a good job should be done in managing and using funds for equipment overhauls.

Sixth, on the basis of conscientiously summing up our country's experiences in equipment management, we should learn from other countries' advanced experiences in this regard and work out as quickly as possible a set of rules and methods for equipment management suited to our country's conditions.

Coal Transport Systems

[Text] Beijing, August 24 (XINHUA) -- China is improving railway and other transport facilities to get more coal out of Shanxi Province, China's biggest coal producer, according to a senior State Council official.

Zhang Jinfu, state councillor and minister in charge of the State Economic Commission, said today that in 1985, 112 million tons of coal will be transported out of the province, which, in 1981, produced 130 million tons, or one-fifth of the national output. In 1982, 80 million tons of coal will be transported from Shanxi, he said.

Speaking while being briefed on a national communications conference being held in Beijing, Zhang Jingfu pointed to the necessity of speeding up construction projects including railways and port facilities.

Work is underway to turn the railway from Fengtai on the outskirts of Beijing through Shacheng to Datong, a major coal-producing city in Shanxi Province, into an electric railway so that the amount of coal the railway is able to handle will increase from 40 million tons to 60 million tons a year. The project is scheduled for completion in 1984, according to the national communications conference.

Electrification projects are also being undertaken or about to start on a number of other railways, including the Taiyuan-Yangquan section of the Taiyuan-Shijiazhuang railway. Taiyuan and Shijiazhuang are provincial capitals of Shanxi and Hebei and Yangquan, a large coal center famous for its quality fat coal.

Construction is in full swing on the Beijing-Qinhuangdao double-track, electric railway specially for transporting Shanxi coal. Qinhuangdao is an important port in north China. The coal wharf there is being revampted to handle, upon completion of the project at the end of 1985, an annual average of 48 million tons compared with 17 million tons now.

ZHANG TINGFA SPEAKS AT AIR FORCE CONGRESS

[Report: "Speaking at the Air Force Congress of Advanced Elements in Promoting Spiritual Civilization, Zhang Tingfa Stresses the Need To Educate Cadres and Fighters With Communist Ideology"]

[Text] There has been an atmosphere of study in the air force units since spiritual civilization was promoted. This has effectively speeded up the cultivation of talented people and promoted the revolutionizing, modernization and regularization of the units. This was announced on 16 August by Comrade Zhang Tingfa, the commander of the PLA Air Force, at the air force congress of advanced elements in promoting spiritual civilization.

Comrade Zhang Tingfa said: The building of socialist spiritual civilization has greatly kindled the enterprising spirit of the cadres and fighters to strive to make progress and to study in order to make themselves into useful people. Through various channels and by adopting various methods, they seize time to study politics, military affairs, science and cultural knowledge, as well as professional skills. More than 500,000 cadres and fighters in the air force have participated in scientific and cultural study classes. A large number of cadres and fighters have actively enrolled in television universities, spare-time evening universities, universities using publications as the medium of instruction and various kinds of correspondence schools. At present, more than 34 percent of cadres at army and divisional levels and 45 percent of cadres at regimental level have received training in colleges and universities. Cadres involved in technological work are also trained in colleges and universities and are developing in the direction of "coordination." The intellectual and professional levels of cadres working in government organs, troops, colleges and universities, research institutions and plants have significantly improved. A large number of top professionals and technicians have emerged and they have scored some results. This fine atmosphere of study has not been seen for many years.

In his report, Comrade Zhang Tingfa pointed out. In promoting socialist spiritual civilization, the air force must attach a high degree of importance to educating cadres and fighters with communist ideology. We must integrate the existing situation and our tasks with the actual thinking of the force and adopt various methods to launch communist ideological education, organize cadres and fighters to study Marxism-Leninism-Mao Zedong Thought, incessantly enhance their political and ideological understanding, foster lofty communist ideals, stress ethics, and observe discipline so that they will fear neither hardship nor death. At the same time, we must improve cadres' and fighters' scientific, cultural, technological and strategic levels so that they will skillfully control and handle the modern weaponry and form themselves into a powerful combat force. Our existing knowledge is insufficient to promote modernization and there are many problems that we do not understand or do not thoroughly understand. Moreover, the existing knowledge is already outdated. Therefore, we must assiduously study science and cultural knowledge and endeavor to gain professional proficiency.

NAVY COMMANDER YE FEI SPEAKS AT NAVY CONGRESS

[Text] At the opening ceremony of the first naval congress of advanced elements in promoting socialist spiritual civilization, Commander Ye Fei made a report entitled: "Fight for Communism to the Bitter End." Carrying out the activities of building socialist spiritual civilization, the report pointed out, is the "five stresses and four beauties" among the civilians and the "Four haves, three stresses and three stresses and two fear-nots" in the forces. Comrade Deng Xiaoping put forth that the main content in building spiritual civilization is having an ideal and moral integrity, being cultured and observing discipline. The core of the "four haves" drive is having an ideal, a communist ideal. The phrase "raising consciousness" is often mentioned by us. But, what kind of consciousness is it? It is communist consciousness. Only with high consciousness, communist moral integrity and communist ideals, will there be a conscientious observance of strict discipline. Such a force is invincible. Therefore, the core of building spiritual civilization is having an ideal. This ideal is none other but the ideal of communism.

It was mentioned in the report that there currently exists within the party and in society an erroneous idea which holds that communism is a remote utopia and it can not be seen or touched. In other words, it holds that communism has not yet been tested by practice. After making a brief review of the practice of communism in the whole world, Comrade Ye Fei pointed out that communism is not merely a social system. It is a theory of scientific socialism as well as a movement. Since the publication of the "Manifesto of the Communist Party", a work written by Marx and Engels, the creators of scientific communism, communism has been taking shape. It has undergone constant practice and developed in this continuous practice. Communism has been proved as a truth through the test of practice in the international communist movement. How can one say that it has not yet been tested by practice?

When talking about the glorious road our party has taken in the struggle for communism Comrade Ye Fei said in his report that what we did in the past, such as carrying out land reform, expropriating local tyrants and distributing land were all for the purpose of building a socialist society and this is the only way to communism. Later on, the Japanese imperialists invaded us and we fought against them. Resisting the Japanese aggressors was for national emancipation as well as for building a socialist new China and fighting for communism. Since the founding of new China in 1949 and through the socialist transformation, the socialist system has been completely established for more than 30 years and we have made great achievements in the socialist revolution and socialist construction.

He further pointed out: At present some people only care about the "five large pieces," such as a TV set and sewing machines. Without a great ideal, they do everything for money. If this spiritual status is not changed, it will be impossible for us to realize the four modernizations and our socialist society may even collapse. Therefore, we must pay attention to this problem and widely and deeply carry out the activities of building socialist spiritual civilization so as to make everyone become a person with an ideal, with morality, with culture and with discipline. He emphatically pointed out that it is impossible for us to establish a modern army without modern military equipment. However, will it be enough if we have modern equipment only? All the modern equipment must be handled by people. Therefore, in addition to modern equipment, it is all the more necessary to have high political consciousness if we want to build a powerful navy with modern fighting ability. This high consciousness is none other than communist consciousness.

In conclusion, the report said that we are carrying out the construction of the four modernizations at the moment, but our final goal is the realization of communism. If communism cannot be achieved by this generation, the next generation must make continuous efforts. With the continuous efforts made by one generation after another, communism will certainly be achieved.

RENMIN RIBAO REPORTS ON PLA NAVY CONGRESS

[Feature by RENMIN RIBAO reporters Yan Wu [7051 0710], Xiong Zhengyan [3574 6927 1750] and Li Xueyin [2621 1331 1377]: "Take Off, Flood-Dragons on the Sea -- Notes on the Navy Congress of Advanced Elements in Promoting Spiritual Civilization"]

[Text] A huge eye-catching streamer with the slogan -- "Build up a powerful navy with modern combat effectiveness" -- hung across the middle of the meeting place for the navy congress of advanced elements in promoting spiritual civilizations. This slogan was the inscription that Central Military Commission Chairman Deng Xiaoping wrote 3 years ago when he inspected some navy units.

Dressed in navy uniforms, more than 600 representatives came to the meeting place full of heroic spirit. During the meeting, they exchanged their experience in an extensive manner and carried out warm discussions which centered on strengthening the construction of spiritual civilization and speeding up the realization of the goal that Central Military Commission Chairman Deng Xiaoping put forth in his inscription.

I

The speech given by the representative of the advanced collective crew of No 105 warship brought the imagination of the people to the vast and swollen ocean and displayed the heroic bearing of the "pioneer" ship in our navy. This warship is the first new-type guided missile destroyer designed and made in our country. It is equipped with an "eye" to peep into all the activities of its targets in the sky, on the surface and under the surface, an "ear" to hear what is happening on the seabed 10,000 meters deep and a "brain" with "electronic nerves" which can compute automatically, display major factors and give fighting directives. This ship can be compared to a "scientific fortress" moving on the sea.

The No 105 warship is assigned to heavy tasks of testing the equipment for the People's Navy's new-type warships. The first trial voyage of this ship, the first trial firing of its guns and the first target practice of its missiles..all these aroused the sailors to recall the past when in old China we had nothing to defend our sea territory and were so backward that we always took beatings. Thereby they realized the tremendous responsibility on the shoulders of the crew of the "pioneer ship." Their lofty ideals and high awareness have caused them to perform scene after scene of magnificent real life dramas on the vast ocean and open up one by one bright new avenues. Look!

A force 10 wind was blowing and "Pioneer" started its sea voyage. Sometimes it sailed swiftly in the direction of the wind and sometimes, it forged ahead against the waves and wind. Suddenly its engine was switched off and it began to drift and be tossed at will by the raging waves. More than 10 kinds of naval operations were consecutively tested and a large amount of valuable data was collected during these tests.

The awe-inspiring ship was sailing in top gear and the furious wind was heaping waves like snow hills. Suddenly, the commander ordered: "Reverse the ship!" The main engine which was revolving at nearly 1,000 rpms, suddenly changed direction. It jerked violently and "bang, bang, bang," it made a loud noise. Thus the mighty power system of the warship underwent a severe test.

The target practice of our country's first set of surface-to-surface missiles began. All the automatic parts operated quickly and in a moment, everything was ready. The sailor pushed the button gently and the missile hissed away in smoke and fire and accurately hit the target.

On the vast sea stretch of our motherland, the sailors on board the No 105 warship coordinated with the research workers and completed more than 1,000 tests, among which were dozens of major highly difficult items that had never been carried out in our country. In the light of their own practical experience, the commanders and fighters put forward more than 1,000 rationalization and improvement suggestions and made significant contributions to the development of this new-type warship.

The speech was repeatedly interrupted by enthusiastic applause and people hailed the "pioneering" spirit on the No 105 warship.

II

In diving technology using saturated helium and oxygen, our country lagged behind the world standard by 20 years. Research fellow Gong Jinhan made determined efforts to catch up and organized people to cooperate in making a breakthrough. As a result, the research work has been greatly promoted and in a few years, we have become ranked among the advanced countries in the world. Accurate nautical charts are a must in guiding the navigation of modern warships at sea. Chart-maker Zhang Haiyang concentrated on carrying out research at his drawing table and successfully achieved more than 10 reforms by inventing advanced apparatus and instruments and thus doubled the drawing speed and accuracy.

The People's Navy already has its first generation of shipborne aircraft pilots who have mastered the complicated skill of taking off and landing on ships in a period that is only one-third of the length of time that foreign pilots take to master such a skill. This has surprised foreigners.

When Marshal Ye Jianying visited the navy fleet, he called on the navy to "make vigorous efforts to catch up with the advanced world standard. Only by making vigorous efforts can we catch up." The deeds of the many people who attended the meeting and what they have achieved in modernizing the navy are all the triumphant results of their vigorous efforts in making every minute count for the progress of the navy.

Bang, bang. Submarine mines blew up and lines of water columns towered to the sky. This was a scene from the mine sweeping performance of a fleet of minesweepers on the vast sea. The equipment and technology of the fleet are all brand new. All the mines that had blockaded the port were turned into smoke as soon as the minsweepers had ploughed the mined area.

The man who invented this new equipment and technology is Li Huaquan, a young chief professional worker in a certain unit. When, in order to put an end to our backwardness in minesweeping, he proposed to make a breakthrough in the difficult research problem by synchronous minesweeping which we had failed to solve for a long time, some people were amazed and asked him: "How much of the ABC's have you learned? It is better to wait patiently. When our country has greatly developed our electronic technology, this difficult problem will be solved in due course." Could he wait patiently? In his speech at the meeting, he gave a resolute answer, saying: "Our country has a very long coastline and a vast offshore sea area, therefore, the antimining struggle in future wars will be very fierce. We will suffer if we are backward and only by making vigorous efforts to catch up can we gain the initiative."

Victory belongs to those who dare to pioneer. Li Huaquan diligently read books as if he had a thirst and hunger for reading and repeatedly practiced. Knowledge -- the gold key -- finally helped him to rapidly open the door leading to success.

Tears filled their eyes when they attentively listened to the speeches of the advanced representatives. Some of these advanced representatives have fostered the lofty aspirations to "regard working at sea as their ideal and to devote their youth to working at sea." For months and years, they wandered on the sea, in spite of storms, giving up their comforts and family life. Others have plunged into the research work so wholeheartedly that time and again they swooned with tiredness in their laboratories and testing grounds, but when they came to, they patted away the dust on their clothes and continued their work. Still others even muttered with their last breath, "let me go back, I haven't fulfilled my task...."

The speech given by Hu Ruiyun, a "model diver" and "national shock worker on the new Long March," brought the imagination of the audience to the seabed which was full of changes and dangers. During the first half of 1981, our navy, for the first time, carried out trial diving with helium and oxygen, in the South China Sea at a depth of 140 meters. Under the water, every 10 meters deeper means 1 atmosphere more pressure; thus, at a depth of 140 meters, the pressure on a di er is 15 atmospheres, including the atomospheric pressure on the surface of the water. His life will be in danger if he is to a slightest degree careless. The test began. In April, there were huge waves on the South China Sea. Hu Ruiyun dived downward clad in a diving apparatus that weighed over 200 jin. When he reached a depth of 120 meters, his mouth felt dry, his head was dizzy and his lips became numb. At that moment, all his indisposition and the possible danger would have been quickly removed, if only he had reported to those on the surface that he did "not feel well." However, the test would have been interrupted. Therefore, Hu Ruiyun endured all the sufferings and dived downward to the depth of 140 meters according to the test schedule. At that depth, he fulfilled the planned task of scientific research and remained submerged for over 8 hours, which set a new record in our country for duration of regular diving with helium and oxygen.

During the meeting, we visited a veteran officer of the Chinese navy, who was full of vigor despite his white hair. He was Deputy Navy Commander in Chief Deng Chaoxiang, former captain of the Kuomintang frigate "Chongqing." Deputy Commander in Chief Deng had been in the navy for 68 years and he was a witness to the history of the Chinese navy. Having compared the diametrical difference between the two periods of over 30 years each and especially having seen the abundant achievements at this meeting, he said with excitement, "since we have scored so many material achievements in modernizing our navy and since we have a backbone rank with such a high standard of spiritual civilization, we will surely realize the goal that Central Military Commission Chairman Deng Xiaoping put forth in his inscription, if only we develop and popularize our achievements in the construction of both material and spiritual civilizations."

A new page of the history of the People's Navy has already been turned. The vigorous development of the activities in building up spiritual civilization is an inestimably great motive force to make our navy take off. Take off, flood-dragons on the sea!"

YANG SHANGKUN CALLS FOR STRONG MODERN ARMY

HK240727 Beijing HONGQI in Chinese No 15, 1 Aug 82 pp 6-10

[Article by Yang Shangkun: "Build a Strong Modern Revolutionary Army -- In Commemoration of the 55th Anniversary of the Founding of the Chinese People's Liberation Army"]

[Text] Since the founding of the Chinese People's Liberation Army in 1927, it has experienced a career of 55 years of glorious fighting.

Party leaders, including great Marxist and proletarian strategist Mao Zedong, Zhou Enlai, Liu Shaoqi and Zhu De rendered indelible services to the founding and development of the PLA. As the 55th anniversary of the founding of our army draws near, all commanders and fighters of the army, while recalling the past eventful years, cherish with boundless feelings the memory of proletarian revolutionaries of the older generation who bent their backs for the cause of liberation of the people of all nationalities throughout the country until their dying day and of innumerable revolutionary martyrs.

Just as the resolution unanimously approved by the 6th Plenary Session of the 11th CPC Central Committee pointed out, the Chinese revolution was victorious mainly because we relied on a people's army led by the CPC; an army of a completely new type and enjoying flesh-and-blood ties with the people, to defeat a formidable enemy through protracted people's war. History has proved that without such an army, the people would have nothing and it would have been impossible to achieve the liberation of our people and the independence of our country.

Today, the people of the whole country are pleased to see that the PLA -- a people's army -- has undergone new development and improvement in the new historical conditions, developing from a purely land force into a composite force that includes air and naval forces and other technical branches. Apart from being equipped with excellent conventional weapons produced by China itself, we also possess sophisticated strategic weapons such as atomic and hydrogen bombs and LRBM's for self-defense. It can be predicted that on the basis of the further development of the national economy, the degree of modernization of the PLA is sure to be further enhanced.

It is gratifying to note that in recent years, especially since Chairman Deng Xiaoping presided over the work of the Military Commission of the CPC Central Committee, new major progress has been made in PLA building and in various aspects, such as military, political and rear service work. Under the leadership of the CPC Central Committee and its Military Commission, the whole army has conscientiously studied and implemented the various principles and policies of the party. The army has paid special attention to implementing the guidelines of the 3d and 6th Plenary Sessions of the 11th CPC Central Committee, guiding the troops to more conscientiously uphold the four basic principles and unifying the ideas on the basis of the basic conclusion of the "Resolution on Certain Questions in the History of Our Party Since the Founding of the PRC." While constantly eliminating the influence remaining from the "leftist" guiding ideology, the whole army has resolutely repudiated and overcome bourgeois liberalization and other erroneous ideological tendencies so that the troops' political consciousness and understanding of policy have been markedly raised. The various PLA units have extensively launched an activity of building socialist spiritual civilization centering on having ideals, paying attention to morality and observing discipline. A large number of new people of the Lei Feng type have emerged. Quite a few PLA units have penetratingly conducted patriotic education characterized by the principle that state interests are above everything. This has played a marked role in heightening the sense of national self-respect and pride and in understanding the superiority of China's socialist system. In the struggles to resist natural disasters in some areas of the country, the numerous cadres and fighters have, with their own practical actions, fulfilled the aim of army building -- wholehearted service to the people -- and forged closer links between the army and government and between the army and people. The various activities, such as building the army on a regular basis and conducting military and political training, have improved sense of discipline and organization and have effectively raised combat effectiveness. The military exercises successfully held in north China and in a few other areas have marked our army's step forward in improving the capability of concerted operations among various branches of the armed forces and in employing the means of modern warfare.

Vigorously supported by the broad masses of the people, our army has triumphantly fulfilled the tasks of defending our coastline and frontiers, the tranquility of our motherland and the four modernizations drive. The victories in battles of self-defense at the Fakashan and Koulinshan Mountains have added new glories to the 1 August army flag. All this has proved that the PLA created and led by the CPC and armed with Mao Zedong Thought is a completely trustworthy powerful people's armed force with fine training and strong combat effectiveness. The cadres and fighters of the army are most obedient to the party and people and go wherever the party directs them. The commanders and fighters fight where there is greatest hardship and danger. This PRC armed force, that belongs to and is loyal to the people, is like a steel great wall reliably defending our people's peaceful labor and socialist modernization.

Recalling the 55 years of the army's history, one could say it is a history of processing from small to big, from weak to strong, and from "millet plus rifles" to the building of a modern revolutionary army. Under the guidance of Mao Zedong Thought, we attach importance to the decisive role of the human factor in war, but we never overlook the important role of weapons. We lay stress on defeating with inferior equipment an enemy equipped with superior weapons and we constantly strive, where objective conditions permit, to improve the army's capability of fighting modern warfare and push forward army building. As far back as during the infant period of the Red Army, Comrade Mao Zedong pointed out: "We oppose efforts to halt the Red Army at the old stage and strive to develop the Red Army to a new stage." In the early period of the war of resistance against Japan, when there was an extremely great disparity in strength between the enemy and ourselves, Comrade Mao Zedong pointed out in "On Protracted War": "The reform of our military system requires its modernization and improved technical equipment, without which we cannot drive the enemy back across the Yalu River." Later, on many occasions, he again said: The Chinese army should also gradually be provided with modern technology, equipment and specifically military attainments. The great foresight of the party leader and the unflagging revolutionary drive of the numerous cadres and fighters ensured that, even under extremely difficult conditions, our army always made every effort to improve the combat capability of the troops. In those years, when the poorly-equipped worker and peasant Red Army, hemmed in by massive enemy troops, succeeded in seizing from the enemy the first radio transceiver, they took good care of it and, after assidously learning how to operate it in a very short time, employed it in directing operations on the battlefront. When many fighters were still fighting with indigenous rifles, broadswords and spears, our army simply and thriftily set up an artillery school with the few guns we seized from the enemy. As far back as in the liberation war period, our army already had its own aviation school and armored troops. These scenes of assiduously doing pioneering work remain fresh in our memory as if they were before us now. Our army has always refused to be self-satisfied and conservative or to halt its efforts at the intitial stages but instead, where the objective conditions permit, fully bring into play the subjective initiative in an effort to guide the army building to a higher stage. It is still necessary for us to constantly promote this extremely invaluable revolutionary drive in the new historical period.

Lenin said: "When an army is not prepared to master all weapons and all forms and methods of struggle the enemy has possessed or may possess, this act is considered stupid by everybody else."

Modern military science and technology are changing with each passing day. Since the fruits of the world's latest science and technology are extensively applied in war, a whole series of changes has taken place in the forms of war, strategy, tactics and military organization. Many unprecedented newsituations and special features have appeared in modern warfare. Hence, in an international situation in which the danger of war still exists, we must greatly step up the building of a modern national defense and raise the army's modern combat capability to a new level. When reviewing the troops taking part in military exercises somewhere in north China, Deng Xiaoping, chairman of the Military Commission of the CPC Central Committee, more explicitly pointed out: It is necessary to build our army into a strong, modern and regular revolutionary army. With full confidence, the comrades of the whole army are unremittingly fighting for the realization of this great goal along with the people throughout the country.

At present, under the guidance of the 3d Plenary Session of the 11th CPC Central Committee, the work of readjustment, restructuring, consolidation and improvement is being continuously carried out on the economic front and marked achievements have been scored. Following the Central Committee's unified guiding principle on carrying out system reforms, the PLA is right now working hard to readjust, reorganize and restructure itself and advance toward the great goal of revolutionization, modernization and regularization.

In the course of readjusting and restructuring the army, it is imperative to build the troops into a revolutionized and modern crack force in accordance with the requirements of modern warfare. Comrade Mao Zedong said: "That the troops are valued for their quality, not their number, is still a principle of army building in the future." During the arduous years of the anti-Japanese war, our party rigorously practiced the policy of better troops and simpler administration, reduced the number of noncombat personnel and lightened the burden of the people. This resulted in speeding up the victorious course of war. In the early period of the founding of the PRC, we carried out the policy decision of reducing the number of armymen and improving the quality of the army so that it was possible for our army to establish various branches and thus strengthened the combat effectiveness of our army. Although the specific conditions were slightly different in various historical periods, the principle that troops are valued for their quality and not their number still holds good. Now peoplehave come to realize that the trial of strength in a war manifests not only in the number of soldiers but, more importantly, in modern weapons and equipment and in people's capability to operate modern equipment. With the swift development of modern science and technology, there isindeed a tremendous increase in the power of weapons. Following improvement in the level of modern weapons, equipment and the command system, it is entirely possible to appropriately reduce the number of soldiers. Just as Comrade Deng Xiaoping said: A reduction and not an increase in manpower is a sign of modernization. It can thus be seen that practicing the policyof better troops is not a negative or stagnant policy but a positive and advanced one. The policy of better troops is a correct and scientific policy which conforms to the specific features of modern warfare and the law of development of modern military affairs.

By a crack force, from the major aspects, we mainly mean the following three demands: 1) There must be people with high political awareness, advanced military thinking and relatively high scientific and cultural accomplishment, and all readjustment and restructuring measures must be beneficial for discovering, selecting and promoting talented people and for making the cadre force revolutionized, younger and moreknowledgeable and specialized. 2) There must be excellent modern weapons and equipment. 3) There must be organic integration of men and arms, which means that there must be strict training and scientific formation.

After a period of arduous efforts by the comrades of the whole army, our army will be a crack force with keen wits and capable administrative structure, agile command, excellent equipment, fine training, quick reactions, high efficiency, and very powerful combat effectiveness, and be a hand-picked force that cannot be toppled or defeated. It will be a sharp sword defending the socialist motherland.

Human factors still play a primary role in modern warfare. However, it is necessary to understand human factors in an all-round way. They include not only human courage, consciousness and the spirit of sacrifice but also human wisdom, and talent as well as mastery and application of science, culture and technology. All modern equipment, even such high-tech equipment as electronic calculators, reconnaissance satellites and spaceships, should also be operated by man. No precision and advanced weapons can hit the targets with unfailing accuracy. Of these, the scientific and technological levels of the operators are very important factors. The political consciousness of the PLA is undoubtedly first-rate in the world. In the future, it is still necessary to regard political work as the lifeline of our army, strive to build socialist spiritual civilization and conduct patriotic education centering on loving the party, the socialist motherland and the people's army in order to raise the political quality of our army to a new level. It should be noted, however, that the scientific, cultural and technological level of our cadres still fails to keep abreast of the requirements of modern warfare. If we fail to speedily change this state of affairs, we shall not be able to skillfully master and proficiently operate more up-to-date equipment, let alone bring its efficiency into full play. Therefore, an urgent question confronting us is to vigorously step up the work of making our cadres master intellectual knowledge. The status and role of science, culture and technology in army building is becoming more and more important and outstanding. In particular, the intensive application of science in modern weapons and the ever-changing progress of modern science such as electronics, laser, infrared rays and spaceflight have made it necessary for us to study new knowledge and new technology and to arm ourselves with modern scientific knowledge. There is the importance of knowledge on the one hand and the deficiency of knowledge on the other. This is an acute contradiction. Quite a few comrades understand the importance and urgency of solving this contradiction. At the beginning of this century, Lenin wrote a commentary entitled "The Fall of Port Arthur." This famous article vividly described and penetratingly elaborated the defeat suffered by the czarist Russian army in its war against the Japanese army. Lenin pointed out that although czarist Russia had squandered hundreds of millions of rubles on the purchase and building of splendid waships, in view of the fact that both the officers and soldiers proved "uneducated" and "backward" and "that there were no people with the necessary technical knowledge to utilize the latest achievements of military engineering," the military might of czarist Russia "proved to be a sham" and those expenditures "proved to be antiquated and utterly useless." All this shows how important scientific and cultural knowledge is to the modernization of the army. It is hoped that our cadres, particularly the leading cadres, will attach great importance to this increasingly urgent problem. From now on they should regard it as a matter of great strategic importance, concentrate their efforts on it and make sure that the scientific and cultural appearance of our army will change considerably in the coming years.

The CPC Central Committee recently decided that in the coming 5 years or so, all cadres working in the central party and government institutions should at least reach senior middle school level culturally and middle vocational school level professionally and that there should be a considerable number of people who have university level. From now on, cadres who do not come up to the stipulated level cannot be transferred to the central party and government institutions; the existing cadres who do not come up to the stipulated level should manage to reach this level within a stated time through study and rotational training. This guideline is likewise applicable to our army. Moreover, as far as the needs for army building are concerned, we should act more quickly and do better.

Both men and arms must excel in building a crack force. In the context of requirements for opposing a future war of aggression, we still lag behind in weapons and equipment. We must at all times carry forward the army's fine combat traditions and establish strong confidence and resolve in defeating with inferior weapons an enemy armed with superior weapons. Under the conditions of national economic capabilities, we must also step up national defense scientific research work, strive to improve our arms and equipment and reduce our discrepancies in this respect to the minimum. In his article "On the Ten Major Relationships" Comrade Mao Zedong pointed out: "We are stronger than before and will be stronger still in the future. We will not only have more planes and artillery but atom bombs too. If we are not to be bullied in the present-day world, we cannot do without the bomb." What Comrade Mao Zedong predicted has initially come true. We will certainly be able to equip our units with newer weapons as our national economy and military science and technology develop. With further improvement in the level of modernization, the long-tested PLA will be like a tiger that has grown wings and will be in a better position to defeat all aggressors who dare to launch a war against us. Workers, peasants and the comrades in scientific, technological, educational and various other circles in our country will exert themselves and, in their own respective posts, make more contributions to the modernization of national defense and the people's own army.

Arms, including all modern arms, are only potential fighting force, they can only become actual fighting force when closely integrated with men. Apart from strict training, this also requires scientific formation. It takes a lot of learning to more scientifically and rationally form the army according to the requirements of modern warfare. At present, a great many countries attach great importance to the study of military systems. Following new developments in modern warfare, military formation has also appropriately been reformed. For example, since World War II, some countries have abolished cavalry units and established air defense forces and strategic rocket forces; some countries have changed the "three three system" of the ground forces into the "five mass system [wu qun zhi 0063 5028 0455]" and some countries have increased electronics confrontation show that military formations should adapt to the objective situation in the way that people change their clothes according to changes in season. We must broaden our vision of breaking away from the fetters of the force of habit and daring to conduct reforms and be promoters of reforms.

The most important thing in the scientific formation of the armed forces is to strengthen their synthesis. Without the synthesis of the various branches of the armed forces, there would be no modernization and it would have been impossible to adapt ourselves to modern warfare. For a considerably long historical period, our army has chiefly relied on a single branch of the armed forces in fighting and a lot of comrades have been familiar with infantry. However, in order to direct a combined operation of various branches of the armed forces, it is still necessary to study assiduously and conscientiously. Reviewing the history of our army, we have already taken two steps, the first step consisting of concentrating only on infantry, and the second of independently developing various branches of the armed forces. We should now take a third step, which is to better strengthen the synthesis of the various branches. Since the founding of the PRC, we have established various branches of the armed forces, such as the air force, navy, artillery troops, engineer troops and armored troops, but they basically formed a system of their own and we have not been able to organically combine them together either in system, training or administration. If this state of affairs continues to exist, it will be difficult to adapt to the needs of modern warfare.

Comrade Ye Jianying has summed up the characteristics of modern warfare as: three-dimensional warfare, combined warfare, and general warfare. As we understand it, what is referred to as three-dimensional warfare is that as soon as a war breaks out, the enemy is sure to come simultaneously from the sky, land and sea and fight both at the front and in the rear.

What is referred to as combined warfare is that war has developed from operations by a single branch of the armed forces or small-scale and limited-range concerted operations in the past to large-scale, extensive-range and complete combined warfare. What is meant by general warfare is that war is not only a trial of military strength but also a general trial of strength of various war factors, such as politics economy, science, technology and diplomacy. These special features of modern warfare fully show that it is imperative to strengthen the synthesis of the army, practice combined operations by various branches of the armed forces and bring into full play their overall might; it is imperative for armymen and people throughout the country to make concerted efforts and launch a people's war under the modern conditions in order to defeat the enemy. We must therefore greatly step up composite training. Every commander, especially the commanders of composite forces must be familiar with the capabilities of all types of weapons and learn how to employ the various technical branches of the armed forces in coordination. At the same time they must also understand, as much as possible, other branches of knowledge related to war. We must further change the idea of having just one branch of the armed forces and establish the concept of composite warfare. This is a profound change. Lenin said: "In our practical life there are both the feature of extraordinary courage and the mentality of fearing extremely small changes." We should not be afraid of, but should be bold in, making reforms. We should actively support all reforms that are conducive to the strengthening of synthesis.

In making readjustment and reforms, it is necessary to take into consideration not only peacetime but also wartime and do a good job of linking peacetime with wartime. In doing everything, such as what is to be initiated, what is to be reformed, what is to be readjusted and how should we do our work in order of importance and urgency, it is necessary to have war preparedness in mind for this helps us to be always alert and ready to strike at the enemy who dares to invade us. Political and ideological education must be geared in such a way that it ensures the fulfillment of readjustment as well as educates the troops to firmly foster the idea of war preparedness. We should also further step up work on the militia and do a good job of the reserve service and mobilization systems. If the enemy dares to invade us, we shall engulf it in the boundless ocean of the people with people's war under the modern conditions.

Fewer troops and simpler administration are always interrelated and go hand in hand. In order to have crack troops it is imperative to have simpler administration. It is imperative to improve work style in order to achieve the goal of improving work efficiency and command capability. It is necessary to implement the principle of integrating centralized and unified leadership with division of responsibility, put responsibility systems on a sound basis, reduce the number of command levels, and further define the scope of responsibilities of leading organs at all levels. Leading organs at the higher levels should chiefly understand developments and have a good grasp of policies. Principal attention should be paid to grasping problems related to policies, implementing the policies and principles laid down by the CPC Central Committee and its military commission, conducting investigation and study, summing up experiences and supervising and speeding up fulfillment of assigned work. We should not take on the detailed routine work that should be handled by the institutions at the lower levels for this will not only make it difficult for us to do our work well but will also be unfavorable to bringing into play the initiative of the lower levels. It is also unfavorable to overcoming bureaucratism, routinism and the methods of working in a handicraft manner and to improving work efficiency. We advocate that leading cadres at various levels should, within the scope of their duties, be bold in taking responsibility and work boldly. If a person is responsible for the work, he should be responsible for it to the end. We should change the past phenomena, such as nuclear definition of duties incumbent to each person or post, inexplicit division of labor, multiple command levels, mutual shift of responsibility, the travel of documents from one department to another, long delays in making decisions and passing on difficulties to the leadership.

We should consult others on our own initiative on all matters that should be consulted and we should independently, responsibly and on our own initiative solve well the problems that we can solve.

Comrade Mao Zedong pointed out: "Having a clear understanding of China's national condition is a fundamental basis for having a clear understanding of all revolutionary problems." Just as all things in the world have both their general and specific characteristics, army building in various countries of the world has its general characteristic, but it also has its own special characteristics. It is necessary for the economic construction to suit our national conditions, and it is also necessary for army building to suit our national conditions. China has the biggest population in the world. It has a vast territory, long coastline and highly different natural conditions. It is necessary for us to conscientiously study modern military theory and foreign military experience. At the same time, it is all the more necessary for us to conscientiously study our national conditions, learn and study the application and development of Mao Zedong's military thinking in modern conditions, study the integration of people's war with modern conditions and seek an army system that suits China's specific features and the principles of various types of army building. It is necessary for us to inherit and carry forward the fine tradition of our army, constantly study new developments, solve new problems and push forward our army building in a down-to-earth manner.

Today, the great task of achieving the four modernizations in our great socialist motherland is calling on us. Stepping on the land of our motherland and bearing the expectations of the people, the workers' and peasants' Red Army, the Eighth Route Army and the new Fourth Army in those years boldly and heroically headed for the battlefield in seeking liberation. In order to build our army into a strong, modern and regular revolutionary army, let us learn from the example of the older generations and, under the leadership of the CPC Central Committee and its military commission, advance bravely.

NATIONALITIES OFFICIAL REVIEWS ACHIEVEMENTS

[Text] Beijing, August 24 (XINHUA) -- China's areas of minority nationalities have made tremendous achievements in the economic and other fields in the past four years, according to an official of the State Nationalities Affairs Commission here today.

In an interview with XINHUA, the official attributed the achievements to application of the line and policies laid down at the Third Plenary Session of the 11th Central Committee of the Communist Party of China held in December of 1978.

During these years the party's policies on nationalities have not only been restored and implemented but also developed in some fields, he said.

He listed some achievements:

-- Better application of policies on regional national autonomy. In recent years, China has established one autonomous prefecture and eight autonomous counties, thus bringing the number of autonomous areas to 107 (namely, five autonomous regions, 30 autonomous prefectures and 72 autonomous counties or banners). A large number of minority cadres have been trained (with a population of some 60 million, the minority nationalities now have 1.03 million cadres of their own). The autonomous areas enjoy more autonomy in implementing the party and state policies according to their specific conditions.

-- Use of flexible economic policies and enthusiastic support from the central government and other provinces and municipalities have contributed to big progress in the economy of minority areas. In the Xinjiang Uygur Autonomous Region, industry has developed from a dozen small and simple factories in 1949 to over 4,000 modern enterprises.

-- Education of minority people has greatly developed: In the past few years, large numbers of primary and secondary schools as well as 10 institutes for nationalities have been restored. So far, students of minority nationalities in various schools of the country number 9.7 million. The teaching of minority languages has also been resumed in minority areas.

-- Special organizations in charge of nationalities affairs (such as nationalities affairs commissions of various provinces, municipalities and autonomous regions) have been restored and are being strengthened.

-- The Communist Party's policies on nationalities have been made widely known throughout the country. Large numbers of minority people who were falsely and wrongly accused during the "Cultural Revolution" have been rehabilitated, and relationships among nationalities has been improved.

The official said that because of historical reasons, the minority areas were held back economically and culturally. This situation was aggravated by Lin Biao and the gang of four's disruption during the "Cultural Revolution."

In recent years the party Central Committee has attached great importance to the work on nationalities. He recalled that Chairman Hu Yaobang had said the work in minority areas must be done well as regards the economy and building unity. The chairman said, "The Han nationality cannot do without the minority nationalities, and vice versa."

The Nationalities Affairs Commission official also recalled that the party Central Committee had convened several meetings and worked out some documents specially on work in Tibet, Xinjiang, Inner Mongolia and other minority areas. In the spring of 1980, Hu Yaobang, Wan Li and other leaders made an inspection tour of Tibet.

He said that the party committee and the Peoples Government of the Tibet Autonomous Region have recently worked out a plan for economic development. The plan says that by 1983 the average per capita income of the Tibetan peasants and herdsmen should be 220-230 yuan; by 1985, 280-300 yuan; and by 1990, 400-500 yuan. He said that in 1981 the figure had reached 200 yuan, or a 57 percent increase over 1979.

The region has been given power over an increasing spectrum of internal affairs in the past few years. The regional peoples congress standing committee has in the past two years enacted or approved nine decrees, including modifications to China's marriage law and criminal procedural law.

Agriculture and animal husbandry have done well for two consecutive years and a diversified economy has been restored and developed. The production of such daily necessities as highland barley, butter, beef and mutton has increased by a big margin. The output value of the regions national handicrafts in 1981 was 2.2 times that of 1979, hitting an all-time high.

Tibet is now the only area among 29 provinces, municipalities and autonomous regions of the country that provides free medical treatment and free film shows for all peasants and herdsmen and free education for all children.

Statistics show that in the past two years, the region has received more than 1.04 billion yuan in subsidies from the central government, accounting for 98 percent of the regions budget. Large amounts of commodities needed by the Tibetans are transported from other parts of the country.

Some special economic policies have been instituted in Tibet. Taxes on agriculture and animal husbandry are exempted for five years (from 1980 to 1985) and those on collectively-owned industrial and commercial enterprises and individual businesses are suspended for three years (from 1980 to 1983).

The official said that these measures adopted by both central and Tibet regional governments are aimed at giving Tibet a start and help people there raise productivity and improve their life.

JIANGSU SCORES ACHIEVEMENTS IN FINANCIAL WORK

OW201250 Nanjing Jiangsu Provincial Service in Mandarin 2300 GMT 18 Aug 82

[Excerpts] Since the convocation of the 3d Plenary Session of the 11th CPC Central Committee, the various financial and trade departments in Jiangsu have resolutley carried out the policy of readjustment, restructuring, reorganization and upgrading; implemented the series of policies and plans laid down by the party on financial matters; achieved a balance in handling financial affairs and extending credits and loans; and stabilized commodity prices on the market.

During the past 3 years, Jiangsu has greatly reduced its expenditures and increased its revenues, by bringing about steady increases in revenue income. Compared with 1978, Jiangsu's expenditures in 1981 decreased by 16.2 percent while the amount of profits handed over to the government increased 17.94 percent.

The province has exerted strenous efforts to meet needs in the fields of culture, education, science and public health. Funds allocated for promoting culture, education, science and public health, which accounted for 17.54 percent of total expenditures in 1978, rose to 31.66 percent of total expenditures in 1981.

The province has vigorously supported agriculture. During the past 3 years, the province has increased purchase prices for farm and sideline products while reducing or remitting rural taxes. As a result, peasants' income rose by 6.5 billion yuan in the past 3 years, reflecting an increase of 43 yuan in annual per capita income. During the past 3 years, the province has allocated 300 million yuan in support of poor brigades, 140 million yuan to combat natural disasters and for various types of relief work, 130 million yuan to prevent flood and combat drought and 100 million yuan to help development of rural enterprises.

At present, staff members and workers in the field of finance and trade throughout the province are working with tremendous zeal at their respective posts, trying hard to score fresh achievements to greet the forthcoming 12th National CPC Congress.

LABOR PROTECTION TERMED POOR IN JIANGSU

OW211115 Nanjing Jingsu Provincial Service in Mandarin 2300 GMT 19 Aug 82

[Excerpt] Comrade Hong Peilin, standing committee member of the Jiangsu Provincial CPC Committee and vice governor of Jiangsu, addressed a provincial meeting of directors of prefectural and municipal labor bureaus and other departments and bureaus on 16 August.

He pointed out: The leading cadres at all levels should not only talk about production safety; they should take vigorous action to ensure it. In the second half of 1982, the whole province should firmly do a good job in labor protection and production safety to improve the backward situation of production safety in Jiangsu.

Comrade Hong Peilin analyzed the poor condition of production safety in Jiangsu's industrial, communications and capital construction departments in the first half of 1982. He also analyzed the following causes for the increasing accidental deaths and injuries and for the repititive accidents in some enterprises under those departments:

1. With the mentality of sharing food from the same big pot, those who should be responsible for an accident do not take any responsibility. They do not think that the accident concerns their personal interests or those of the plant manager.

2. Some persons with a narrow view of small production do not believe in science.

3. Some persons with a bureaucratic work style pay no attention to labor protection. When an accident happens, they shift the responsibility onto others.

4. Safety regulations have not been amplified nor strictly and properly enforced. Those in charge of production safety do not know how to insure production safety or do not have the power to enforce safety rules and regulations.

5. Some accidents have not been seriously handled or have not been handled at all.

SHANGHAI SHIPBUILDING INDUSTRY BEGINS TO RISE

HK230545 Beijing ZHONGGUO XINWEN SHE in Chinese 0831 GMT 20 Aug 82

[Text] Shanghai, 20 Aug (ZHONGGUO XINWEN SHE) -- This year, Shanghai has started to build 54 ships of various kinds, the total tonnage reaching 326,000 tons, an increase of over 30 percent compared with last year. Of the 54 ships, 21 ships amounting to 250,000 deadweight tons are for export, an increase of 29 percent over last year.

In 1982, Shanghai has completed and handed over to users 67 ships of various kinds, totaling 250,000 deadweight tons, an increase of 14 percent over last year, and an all-time high. Of these completed ships, 8 amounting to 160,000 deadweight tons are for export.

Not long ago, the newly established China Shipbuilding Company and the Ministry of Communications agreed that during the Sixth 5-Year Plan, the Shipbuilding Company will build in the country 234 ships totaling 2.5 million deadweight tons for the ministry. It is reported that the building of half the total deadweight tonnage is going to be undertaken by the Shanghai shipbuilding industry.

Since undertaking the business of shipbuilding for export, more than 220 groups comprising 650 foreign businessmen have come to Shanghai to hold trade talks on building 132 ships of 51 types. At present, contracts for 62 ships of 587,000 tons have been signed, of which 11 ships will be completed this year. Shanghai has undertaken the production of 67 percent of the total number of ships for export in the whole country. It has now handed over 14 ships to customers. There are 6 ships totaling 43,600 tons that are still in the process of discussion or for which agreements have been signed. Contracts have also been signed with foreign businessmen for the production of 48 mechanical and electrical items and instruments produced for ship use.

Shanghai's shipbuilding capacility is over 40 percent of that of the whole country. During the past 30 years, Shanghai has designed more than 800 types of ship itself, more than 400 of which have been put into production. Some 5,600 ships totaling approximately 3 million deadweight tons have already been built.

The ships for export built by Shanghai include oceangoing bulk freighters of 36,000 and 27,000 tons, oceangoing multipurpose freighters of 16,000 tons, container ships of 12,300 tons multipurpose freights of 4,400 to 6,400 tons and also tugs, class fiber pleasure boats, and so on. All these have reached international standard and are praised by foreign businessmen.

NANFANG RIBAO STRESSES WORK ON INTELLECTUALS

[Commentator's article: "It Is Essential To Solve Practical Problems When Investigating Work on Intellectuals"]

[Text] Since the beginning of March this year, our province has made a general investigation on the work on intellectuals in accordance with the spirit of a relevant circular of the CPC Central Committee. Through this investigation, many things and problems have been discovered. Some problems have been tentatively tackled with certain results. However, looking at the whole province, we find the work is being carried out unevenly. The provincial CPC committee and government recently adopted six concrete measures for doing work on intellectuals better, stressing solutions to practical problems and avoiding making a token gesture, or doing work superficially.

Since the smashing of the "gang of four," the CPC Central Committee has correctly reappraised intellectuals, clearly pointing out that intellectuals make up part of the working class and are a reliable force which is just as important as others in the cause of building socialist modernization. However, due to the remnant influences of "leftist" thinking, some leading comrades still lack understanding on the status and role of intellectuals in the new historical period. They have not yet overcome their ignorance of and prejudice against intellecuals. They have paid inadequate attention to implementing the relevant policies formulated by the party since its third plenary session. They are still far from fully trusting intellectuals politically, giving them a free hand in their work, and taking care of their livelihood. This has hindered intellectuals from giving full play to their enthusiasm. It must be noted that the number of intellectuals in our province at present is not too great; rather, it is too small. They are unable to meet the needs of developing the socialist cause either quantitatively or qualitatively. Figures for 1980 showed that for every 10,000 people of our country there were 13 university students; our province had only 8.2, ranking 22d in the whole country. Meanwhile, for every 10,000 people of the country there were 2.8 technicians on the national industrial and communications fronts; our province had only 1.76, ranking 26th. The situation has not changed much in the past 2 years. Therefore, through the recent investigation of work on intellectuals, it is of great significance for leaders at various levels to deepen their understanding of the intellectuals' role and give more leadership to the work on intellectuals.

At present, while investigating work on intellectuals, emphasis must be placed on resolving practical problems. The districts and units which have made only a token gesture must seriously fulfill the work. The thinking that "too much" has been done in implementing policies on intellectuals does not meet the actual leadership. Leading comrades of the party and government at all levels must participate in the work and help to tackle practical problems which might be solved through efforts. Special attention must be paid to solving practical problems in the work and life of middle-aged intellectuals. The directive of the CPC Central Committee points out: One of the major criteria for measuring the work of one district or one unit is to see whether the enthusiasm of intellectuals has been fully aroused and whether their ability has been fully displayed with good results. We must carry this out resolutely.

SPECIAL POLICIES, FLEXIBLE MEASURES AID GUANGDONG

[Report by XINHUA correspondent Qi Xiu]

[Excerpts] Guangzhou, 18 Aug (XINHUA) -- Since the central authorities decided to implement special policies and flexible measures in Guangdong Province, the province's economy has grown in an all-round way, the market is brisk, and the masses' livelihood has improved.

The masses praise the good policies of the party saying that they have brought a "golden age" to Guangdong. On 15 July 1979 the CPC Central Committee and the State Council issued a document on the implementation of special policies and flexible measures in Guangdong and Fujian Provinces. The decision included four main points: 1) implementing a system under which the provinces assume full responsibility for their financial and foreign exchange management; 2) "emphasizing local interests" in drawing up provincial plans; 3) setting up the Shenzhen, Zhuhai, Shantou and Xiamen Special Economic Zones on a trial basis; and 4) giving the provinces greater power in examining and approving economic activities with foreign countries.

In the past 3 years, due to the implementation of the special policies and flexible measures, Guangdong's total industrial and agricultural output value reached 37.08 billion yuan in 1981, an increase of 23.8 percent over that in 1978, or an average annual increase of 7.4 percent since 1978. The growth of the light industry was particularly fast with a 42.9 percent increase in output value from 1978 to 1981.

Foreign trade grew even more rapidly. Foreign trade procurement totaled more than 4.8 billion yuan in 1981, a 100 percent increase over that in 1978. Exports of goods originating from Guangdong totaled more than $2.1 billion in 1981, more than double that in 1978. The province's foreign trade has grown more in the last 3 years than in the previous 30 years.

In the past 3 years, the province has signed 13,872 contracts with foreign and Hong Kong firms, brought in and put to use more than $550 million in foreign investment, and earned as much as $200 million in processing charges.

In the past 3 years, the province has imported more than 70,000 sets of equipment -- many of which are of advanced levels of the 1970's -- valued at $170 million. Guangzhou city has imported a total of $39 million worth of new equipment, new technology and new techniques to equip the textile, printing and dyeing, knitting, electronics, plastics and other trades, greatly changing the production and technical outlooks of these trades.

In deciding to implement special policies and flexible measures in Guangdong, the central authorities pointed out: "The development of economic activities with foreign countries will inevitably bring corrosion, the influence of capitalist ideas and the bourgeois life style." Since the beginning of this year, Guangdong Province has launched a struggle to deal blows at serious criminal activities in the economic field on the one hand and, on the other hand, summarized the experience over the past 3 years in implementing the policy of opening up to the outside world, enlivening the domestic economy and overcoming shortcomings in work so that the economy of the province will develop even more soundly.

GUANGXI INSPECTS WORK CONCERNING INTELLECTUALS

HK200348 Nanning Guangxi Regional Service in Mandarin 1130 GMT 18 Aug 82

[Summary] The Guangxi Regional CPC Committee recently held a report meeting on inspecting work concerning intellectuals. The report meeting stressed: "Correctly understanding the role and functions of intellectuals in the course of the four modernizations and eliminating the influence of leftist ideology and the prejudice against intellectuals are some of the main ways to solve the problems existing in work concerning intellectuals. CPC committees at all levels must further strengthen leadership, and inspection groups and offices at all levels must be responsible for doing this work to the end. It is necessary to do a good job in implementing the party's policy on intellectuals and strive to do very well in training first-class people of ability."

Those attending the report meeting were responsible comrades of Nanning, Liuzhou, Guilin and Wuzhou Municipalities and the organization departments of the Liuzhou railroad bureau; leading comrades of Beihai Municipality, Guangxi Normal College and (Hongmao) mining bureau; and leading members of the group to inspect work concerning intellectuals. At the report meeting, the participants reviewed the situation and exchanged experiences in inspecting work concerning intellectuals, analyzed the situation and looked into work for the next stage.

Xiao Han, secretary of the regional CPC committee; Zhang Shengzhen, standing committee member of the regional CPC committee and director of the organization department; and Liao Lianyuan, director of the united front work department of the regional CPC committee, attended, listened to reports and spoke at the meeting.

On behalf of the office of the group of the regional CPC committee to inspect work concerning intellectuals, (Du Jiangning), deputy director of the organization department of the regional CPC committee, delivered a speech, reporting on the situation in inspecting work concerning intellectuals in the region and putting forth views on future work. (Pan Ku), vice chairman of the regional science and technology committee, spoke on training science and technology personnel.

The meeting held that party organizations at all levels in the region have attached importance to work concerning intellectuals. At the beginning of April, all units at the regional level and all prefectures, municipalities and counties established inspection leadership groups and work organs in succession. They also set up inspection groups which comprise some 3,600 people, to carry out inspection work. The number one and number two men in many units have personally done this work. In the course of inspection, many leading comrades have actively made friends with intellectuals and universally carried out heart-to-heart talks. They have further deepened their understanding of work concerning intellectuals and have solved a large number of problems.

"In the wake of the gradual implementation of the party's policy on intellectuals, intellectuals have felt even more the concern and warmth of the party and their mental outlook has undergone a relatively great change. They have worked hard to promote themselves. They want to make progress politically and are devoted to their work. They have contributed toward the four modernizations in our region."

The meeting pointed out: "There is still a very big difference between inspection work in our region and the requirements laid down by the documents of the central authorities. As far as the leaders are concerned, not very many of them have truly, actively and spontaneously grasped this work. Judging from the majority of units, although they have discovered problems and solved some of them, they have only just begun to truly and thoroughly solve problems. We have come to see in the course of inspection that the existing problems of some units cannot be reliably solved because of an objective reason. However, some problems, to a very great extent, cannot be solved because of a subjective reason. A fairly large number of comrades have insufficiently understood the role and functions of intellectuals in the course of the four modernizations. They have not deeply understood the party's policy on intellectuals. A very small number of comrades still have very serious leftist prejudices. For example, some fear that if we now praise intellectuals too highly, they will get cocky.

Some hold that it is unfair to look after intellectuals too much. Some others hold that as intellectuals have many defects, they can only be employed and cannot be trusted, and so on. In the course of inspection, party organizations at all levels must regard these problems as major problems and must solve them. We must advocate that leading cadres go down to listen directly to the intellectuals' reactions and see the real situation in their ideology, work and livelihood. We must seriously criticize and help individual leading cadres who oppress and discriminate against intellectuals. Some must be organizationally readjusted. We must determine whether or not importance is attached to work concerning intellectuals. This is one of the important signs measuring whether or not party organizations at all levels earnestly embark on the four modernizations and shift the strategic key point." The meeting looked into work which we must do well: We must strengthen leadership, solve problems on implementing policies, actively absorb intellectuals into the party and select outstanding specialized and technical cadres for leadership groups. We must do well in assessing technical titles of specialized and technical personnel, train people of ability and solve intellectuals' livelihood problems.

Radio Commentary

HK200600 Nanning Guangxi Regional Service in Mandarin 1130 GMT 18 Aug 82

[Station commentary: "Heighten Understanding and Thoroughly Solve Problems"]

[Excerpts] For 4 months the whole region has carried out inspection work concerning intellectuals. Many departments and units have achieved relatively good results. However, although some units have conducted inspection, they have not looked into and successfully solved the problems discovered after inspection. What are the reasons? Some people said that the problems, such as the livelihood problem, have existed for some time among intellectuals. These problems have also universally existed in the course of readjusting the forces of cadres and workers. If we solve the problems of intellectuals, the cadres and workers may complain. It is not easy to handle these problems.

Of course, regardless of the intellectuals, the standards of living of those cadres and workers are, on the whole, not very high. Perhaps, we can say, they all may have this difficulty or that difficulty. The party and the government can see this. However, at present, our country is relatively poor and its financial and material resources are limited. It is impossible to overcome all difficulties at the same time. We can only overcome them by stages, in groups and in order of importance. At present, the workload of intellectuals is relatively heavy. The party and the people expect them to make even greater contributions toward the four modernizations. If we do not create the best conditions possible for their work and livelihood, how can we expect them to be devoted to their work? If we clearly explain this reason to the masses, they will not complain.

At present, units which have not carried out inspection work well enough, particularly units which have not solved problems well enough, must heighten their understanding, correct their attitude and try hard to catch up. They must ensure that they will do this work well from start to finsih. Regarding irrational and impractical demands, we must do well in educational and explanatory work. In a word, regarding the problems which are put forth in the course of inspection, we must give a definite reply to them. We must emphasize solving problems. By so doing, we can win the confidence of intellectuals, fully inspire their enthusiasm and bring their role into play in the four modernizations.

HENAN'S LIU JIE ON EXPECTATIONS FOR CADRES

[Article by Liu Jie [0491 0267], first secretary of Henan Provincial CPC Committee: "Several Expectations for Middle-Aged and Young Cadres"]

[Text] In the past 2 years, Henan Province has promoted a number of outstanding middle-aged and young cadres at or above county level to leadership posts.

At present, we are trying in every way to promote more healthy growth for these cadres while they themselves are also trying to find the way to faster development. Here, I would like to put forth several expectations for middle-aged and young cadres.

1. We must strengthen the party spirit. No matter what their posts, party members and cadres must keep one basic issue firmly in mind -- that "I am a Communist Party member" and must set demands on myself in accordance with the criteria for party members. No matter what circumstances we work under and no matter what difficulties are confronting us, we must adhere to our aspiration of struggling for the communist cause and of unreservedly and wholeheartedly serving the people. There is one thing we must handle with meticulous care: The middle-aged and young cadres are promoted to leadership posts because the cause of the party demands this. This is the task handed over to us by the party organization, and the cadres are not promoted because they are someone's favorite. It is very wrong if somebody says that "I was promoted by so and so." This is in fact a manifestation of the decadent feudal concept that "a gentleman is ready to die for his friends" and that one should repay "the debt one owes to somebody who understands him and has treated him well." It is also very wrong for someone to say that so and so is promoted because his former superiors and old acquantances have given him an important assignment. In promoting cadres, our party has always acted in accordance with the principle of the democratic centralized system and the decision is made by party organizations. The promotion of cadres is not determined by one or two cadres. The newly-promoted middle-aged and young cadres must at all times bear in mind that they are cadres fostered by the party, and that they must be responsible to the party rather than to one or two people.

2. We must improve the art of leadership. Now that the middle-aged and young cadres have some leadership experience and have assumed new leadership positions, they have come into contact with more people and their scope of leadership has increased. When confronting this new change, some comrades are not good at handling the overall situation. To deal with the situation, they should probe into the regulations of leadership work as often as possible. They must pay attention to keeping informed about the firsthand information and must not rely on the secretaries for every matter or rely on the processed materials reported by the subordinate levels. We must study Comrade Mao Zedong's "On Practice" and pay attention to investigations and research. Experiences have proven: that leadership work will succeed only if we conform to the objective law; otherwise, we will be rebuffed. On this issue, we must never act "on impulse." All comrades must continue to study on the original basis and incessantly improve their art of leadership. Most of the recently promoted middle-aged and young cadres are students of natural sciences. In guiding the four modernizations, we must, first of all, have some ideas on the party's policies and use the policies to bring the socialist initiative of the people into full play. Some comrades say: My part is technology and policies have nothing to do with me. How can they say this?

For example, how can we promote only agricultural technology without knowing something about the production responsibility system? Even in scientific and technological departments, we must study social sciences so as to do a good job in leadership work.

To be a good leader, one must correctly handle the relations between the professional and the nonprofessional. We must rely on the original profession as a basis and rapidly develop ourselves in relevant fields to meet the needs. If some comrades specialize in their professions and are not suitable for overall leadership work, we must let them remain in their original posts and make the best of their talents. There is also the problem of organization and leadership in scientific research. A chief engineer of a plant might not be specialized in all kinds of technologies; he must organize technicians of different fields to work in close coordination. In short, in carrying out leadership work, one must have the ability to handle different situations and must be good at organizing forces of various fields to carry out the work.

It is correct to learn the leadership methods from the old cadres. However, we must analyze our own past experiences and those of others, and distinguish the good leadership methods from the bad ones. We must not learn the vague and general methods of leadership, and the hesitant and impulsive leadership work style. The middle-aged and young cadres must not only inherit the fine traditions, but must also try their best to bring forth new ideas and integrate the fine old traditions with the new historical characteristics so as to meet the demands of the new historical period.

3. We must foster a good work style. Some young cadres have "made agreements with themselves on a three-point law" and are on guard against the attack of unhealthy trends. This is very good. However, it is impossible to thoroughly discard attacks, and at the slightest negligence, people might be more of a hindrance than a help. Some people may be genuinely and sincerely concerned about you; however, there are people who are more of a hindrance than a help. In fostering a good work style, we must be modest and cautious. Some people might make a hullabaloo and regard themselves as infallible. This is not good. What we mean by modest is that we must conform to reality and reflect reality. When one is hypocritically humble and obsequious, one is not genuinely modest. When the young cadres assume their new posts, they receive much encouragement and very little criticism. Perhaps this is because they are, in a way, better than others. However, it does not mean that they are perfect and without faults. They must often seriously criticize their own shortcomings.

HEBEI RIBAO STRESSES DIALECTICS IN ECONOMIC WORK

[Commentator's article: "We Should Stress Some Dialectics in Economic Work"]

[Text] On the basis of a 5.5-percent increase in its industrial output value, Shijiazhuang Municipality achieved a further increase of 7 percent in its industrial output value for the first half of this year over the same period last year. The realized profits increased by 10.4 percent over the same period last year, which was a higher rate of increase than that of the industrial output value. The costs were lowered by 1.3 percent, that is, by more than 11 million yuan, and the total losses suffered by the enterprises in which losses were incurred fell by 35.8 percent. This was a new achievement that we scored as a result of implementation of the 10 policies for building up our national economy and as a result of the shift of the emphasis of our economic work onto raising economic returns. This achievement marked the fact that the industrial production in Shijiazhuang Municipality had embarked on a new route of sound speed and great returns. This fact has enlightened people in many aspects, the most important of which is that the leading persons, in carrying out economic work in industry, agriculture and commerce, should all master the dialectical relations between speed and economic returns and use material dialectics to guide economic work.

Like all other phenomena in society and the natural world, economic work is also a unity of opposites that contradict and condition one another. Speed and economic effect are a pair of mutually contradicting and mutually conditioning opposites in economic work. If we pay attention only to speed and neglect economic effect, we will achieve an inflated speed, which, being accompanied by excessive stock of unmarketable products and scrap and by waste of raw materials, is, in actual fact, a low speed. On the other hand, if we pay attention only to raising economic returns and neglect speed, it is difficult for us to actually achieve great economic returns. Therefore, in a sense, to practice leadership over work is to achieve unity of speed and economic returns by constantly exposing and solving the contradictions between them. In the past, because of the influence of the "leftist" guiding ideology, some comrades often neglected economic returns while they were paying attention to speed. This tendency took on various different forms in the fields of industry, agriculture and commerce. For example, in the agricultural field, we neglected costs while seeking high speed and our efforts resulted in the emergence of a large number of highly-productive but poor production teams; in the industrial field, we neglected economic effect while seeking a high output value; as a result, the excessive quantities of industrial products caused our commercial departments to be in trouble, gave rise to the malpractice of overstocking in our warehouses and inflated the financial income of the state; in the commercial field, we neglected lowering the costs of circulation while seeking excessive turnover and this reduced our profits and even gave rise to losses. In the past, we indeed did many such foolish things in seeking false fame and getting actual evil and this has provided us with profound lessons. The reason the industrial production in Shijiazhuang Municipality was able to enbark on a new route of sound speed and high returns in the first half of this year lay in the fact that the people there continuously eliminated the "leftist" guiding ideology, made great efforts to overcome metaphysics and persisted in acting according to economic laws. It was often their metaphysical thinking that was to blame for the fact that in practice some comrades went against objective laws. Dialectics is the common law governing society, nature and thinking; therefore, if one goes against dialectics, one also goes against the basic law governing economic work.

The solution to the contradictions of the opposites of speed and economic returns is conditioned by the respective characteristics of the various economic departments and by how they solve the respective contradictions in these departments.

In order to achieve a sound speed and a high economic effect, the various departments should study their own respective contradictions. The reason the industrial production in Shijiazhuang Municipality was able to embark on a new route of high economic effect and sound speed also lay in the fact that the people there proceeded from the actual conditions of their industrial production and paid attention to raising the economic returns both in their enterprises and for society, that they paid attention to the use value as well as the value of their products, that they paid attention to practicing conservation as well as to increasing production, that they paid attention to increasing income by means of increasing output as well as by means of reducing costs and that they paid attention to the long-term effect as well as the immediate effect of their work in their enterprises. The unity of the above-mentioned five contradictions naturally enabled the production to embark on a new route of sound speed and high economic returns. The opposites in these five contradictions, though they contradict one another, are not bound to be separated from one another. On the contrary, under certain conditions they will promote each other's development. These conditions can be called the points that unite these respective opposites. If we strive to create these conditons and grasp these points, we will be able to make the contradictory opposites promote each other's development. Shijiazhuang Municipality conscientiously changed the composition of the products and shifted from producing low-grade products to producing high-class products, from producing products that need little processing to those needing much processing, from producing unmarketable products to producing marketable products and from producing goods for the domestic market to producing goods for the foreign market. Thus they ensured that their enterprises could carry out their production normally, that their products were marketable and thay they could thus satisfy both the factories and the commercial department. For example, they reduced the production of polyester and cotton blend fabrics because these fabrics were unmarketable and the stock of these fabrics was slow-moving. They shifted to producing pure cotton fabrics and some kinds of polyester and cotton fabrics for export. Low-grade white spirits were also unmarketable; therefore, they shifted to producing beer, which was in short supply. In this manner they solved the contradiction between the economic results of the enterprises and those of society. By paying attention to quality and by increasing the output of fine-quality products and the products in short supply, they also solved the contradiction between value and use value. They shifted from paying attention solely to production to learning the skills in making research into their products and developing new products, learning production skills and technology and learning the skills of marketing and servicing the customers. The above are only a few examples. For all the contradictions in our various economic sectors which affect the steadiness of the speed and the raising of the economic effect, there are the points that unite their respective opposites and that have their respective special features. If, through making efforts, we find these points, we will be able to make the opposites of these contradiction promote each other.

In practice, some comrades often did their economic work in the manner of paying attention to one aspect of the contradiction and neglecting the other aspect of the contradiction. As a result, they sought an inflated speed and neglected the economic returns. What was the cause of this malpractice? The basic cause was tht they failed to clearly understand the aim of socialist production. The work of all the socialist economic sectors is centered on a basic aim, namely, to ensure the continuous improvement of the material and cultural livelihood of the people. The reason why an inflated speed is undesirable lies in the fact that it gives rise to the production of some unmarketable products or some products of poor quality which can serve only as useless stock and scrap and cannot facilitate the improvement of the material and cultural livelihood of the people. All the economic workers who are working under the leadership of the CPC are the servants of the people and normally, it is not difficult for them to understand the aim of socialist production.

Why have some comrades, then, acted for a long time in a foolish manner that runs counter to the aim of socialist production? One of the reasons is that they blindly seek the fulfillment of their task. In so doing they set their responsibility to the upper-level organizations against their responsibility to the people. Thus, they pay attention only to fulfilling the tasks that the upper-level leading organizations have assigned them and disregard the quality, costs and marketability of their products. A second reason is that they fail to take into account the situation and interests of the whole country. As a result, they pay attention only to the economic effect in their own enterprises and neglect the socioeconomic effect of their products. They do not mind whether their products are of any use value, as long as these products bring profits to their enterprises. These are all malpractices that a conscious member of the proletariat should not commit. This has profoundly shown that material dialectics is a proletarian philosophy and in order to master it and use it in our economic practice, we should foster the idea of serving the people wholeheartedly, always keep in mind the aim of socialist production and do all our work around this aim. This demands that in organizing the leading groups in our enterprises, we should pay attention to ideological construction and continuously eliminate nonproletarian ideology in order to enable all those who lead economic work to consciously apply dialectics in guiding their economic work.

This year's situation of economic work in our province is good. On the agricultural front, we have overcome a prolonged drought and achieved an increase in our summer harvest. The autumn crops are doing satisfactorily. During the first half of this year, we fulfilled more than half of our task for the year in our industrial production. However, judging by the economic effect in our industrial production during the first half of this year, we fell short of the national standard in some aspects, such as the quality of our products, the consumption of raw materials and energy and the ratio of profits transferred to the state. These are still our weak points. Moreover, some of the previously marketable light industrial products have become unmarketable and lie uselessly in our storerooms. Therefore, in order to embark on the new route of high economic effect and steady speed, we should make arduous efforts in the latter half of this year. We should see that where we fall short of the national standard, we have great potential to tap. Therefore, as long as we actually guide our economic work in accordance with dialectics and tap our potential, we can be sure that our province's economic work will embark on the new route of steady speed and high economic effect.

CHIANG CALLS MEETING ON FINANCIAL PROBLEMS

OW241411 Taipei CNA in English 1338 GMT 24 Aug 82

[Text] Taipei, Aug 24 (CNA): President Chiang Ching-kuo Tuesday summoned Premier Sun Yun-hsuan and economic and financial officials for a meeting on related problems in the country.

After hearing respective reports from the officials, President Chiang gave the following instructions:

-- As economic stagnancy has affected government tax revenues, various government units should restrain spending to help balance the budget. On the other hand, the government's planned public investments must get timely attention in accordance with the national policy so as to give assistance to the development of private industry.

-- To meet conditions for future advancement of local industries, government agencies must make thorough review of the current approach to the development of science and technology and work out better ones. Private investments in research and the development of science and technology should also be encouraged to help stabilize the foundation for future growth in the economy.

-- In the wake of the prolonged economic recession, the government has taken a series of measures to help relieve problems of the traders and industrialists during the past year. And they have brought good results. To effectively control the situation as the economy is turning to the better at home and abroad, government agencies should give a hand to private entrepreneurs, encouraging them to make new investments and modernize facilities. Such help would raise productivity and drive the competitiveness of domestic products, speeding the recovery of the country's economy.

-- During past decades, private entrepreneurs contributed greatly to local economic achievements. In the years ahead, there will be many a difficulty in carrying out national development programs. The government will do its best to create the proper climate for more civic investments, and finally, to attain mature national industrialization.

WEN WEI PO REPORT ON 12TH CPC CONGRESS

["Newsletter From Beijing" by Cheng Hsiang [4453 5046], a WEN WEI PO correspondent stationed in Beijing: "The Attention-Grabbing 12th CPC Congress" -- part 1]

[Text] The 7th Plenary Session of the 11th CPC Central Committee announced that the 12th CPC Congress will open on 1 September. Since the founding of the CPC, this is the first time that it has announced in advance the opening date of a congress. This announcement has been well received by foreign diplomats and foreign correspondents stationed in Beijing.

According to them, the announcement shows: 1)The CPC has lifted more and more restrictions and has changed the "mysticism" left over by the past underground party. This is a sign of gradually regularizing the country's political life. 2)The CPC's current situation is unprecedentedly stable. Changes made in the lines, organization and personnel matters since the party's third plenary session have been widely supported and will be affirmed, consolidated and developed at the 12th party congress. Under this kind of situation, CPC leaders are full of confidence, thus announcing the opening date of the congress.

The report that the 12th party congress will soon be opened has drawn the attention of and evoked discussions within diplomatic circles here. They have focused their attention on the following questions:

First, will the correct line and the leading group which have been gradually formed since the third plenary session continue to exist and become the political line and the new leading group of the 12th party congress?

Second, will China's major political and economic reforms carried out since the third plenary session continue so as to establish a Chinese-style socialist political and economic system?

World opinion is particularly interested in the aforesaid two questions. This is not accidental. China has entered a new stage of socialist construction since the third plenary session. The promotion of socialist construction requires a domestic political situation of stability and unity, a peaceful international environment and an expansion of international exchanges in all fields. Since the third plenary session, China has become more and more prosperous and stable day by day, and the tension of the world East Asian region has been relaxed to a certain extent (for example, the establishment of Sino-U.S. diplomatic relations, the signing of a Sino-Japanese peace treaty, the nine-point proposal and the self-defensive counterattack against Vietnam have all been conducive to promoting peace. As China has had more and more economic contacts with various countries, East Asian and Southeast Asian countries and regions have been capable of maintaining relatively high growth rates and global economic recession. The relatively high growth rates maintained by Hong Kong, Taiwan and Japan are evident examples. Their expansion of direct and indirect trade relations with the mainland have an important bearing on their relatively high growth rates.) These are unarguable facts. Therefore, international circles hope that the line of the party's third plenary session (also known abroad as the "line of Deng Xiaoping") will be further developed at the 12th party congress.

China has entered the stage of large-scale reform since the party's third plenary session. The range and depth of this reform are unprecedented since the founding of the PRC.

China hopes that through this large-scale reform the supreme powers can be transferred peacefully and safely, the state's line, guiding principles and policies will achieve long-term stability, and the situation will no longer exist in which the policies and regulations of an organization shift with the change of the person in charge. China also hopes that through this large-scale reform, it can eliminate some blocks in its systems that fetter the development of the productive forces. Judging from the history of the international communist movement, we can say that ever since the formation of the ruling party by the communists, two issues (namely, the peaceful and safe transfer of supreme power and the economic system's elimination of blocks that fetter the development of productive forces) have not yet been fundamentally settled. Following the party's third plenary session, China has been energetically studying ways to carry out reforms so as to establish a Chinese-style socialist political and economic system. Therefore, everyone is interested in the measures to be adopted by the 12th party congress for intensifying the reform.

Reviewing developments in various fields since the party's third plenary session on the eve of the 12th party congress is therefore quite a help in forecasting the 12th party congress. In the following part, this correspondent will review the formation and development of the new line of the party's third plenary session and the political and economic reforms that correspond with the line.

HU QIAOMU ON SAVING CULTURAL REVOLUTION MATERIAL

HK240919 Hong Kong MING PAO in Chinese 24 Aug 82 p 5

[Special dispatch from Beijing: "Hu Qiaomu Gives Instructions on Crash-Rescuing Materials on the Cultural Revolution"]

[Text] Hu Qiaomu, secretary of the CPC Central Secretariat, put forth, to the party history research department, the task of crash-rescuing materials on the Cultural Revolution.

The claim that Mao Zedong "himself mobilized and led the great proletarian Cultural Revolution" was in reality totally repudiated by the "resolution on historical questions" passed at the 6th Plenary Session of the 11th CPC Central Committee last year. Since then, all relevant central and local departments have started to destroy materials on the cultural revolution one after another. This runs counter to the Marxist spirit and does not conform to historical materialism. Therefore, Hu Qiaomu gave instructions and demanded that the CPC history research department crash-rescue materials on the Cultural Revolution, sort them out and check the data.

Feng Wenbin, vice principal of the central party school and chairman of the central party history material collection committee transmitted Hu Qiaomu's instructions at the educational forum on CPC history held by the national party school system. He said: If we do not crash-rescue materials on the Cultural Revolution now, the aged will be leaving us soon and, by the time we want to collect the materials, it will be too late. As historical materialists, the internal chaos of the 10-year Cultural Revolution is an indispensable part when compiling CPC history.

In his instruction, Hu Qiaomu said: It is time that we started to pay attention to the questions of the "Great Cultural Revolution" and place them on file for investigation and prosecution. Questions such as: What was Wuhan's "million bold warriors?" What was "the criticism of Lin Biao and Confucius" all about? What were the causes, consequences and results of the many historical incidents during the "Great Cultural Revolution" and the Lin Biao and Jiang Qing counterrevolutionary cliques? How did the revolutionary people start to combat them? Materials on the course of these historical incidents and problems must not be destroyed. We must start to collect them right now.

Hu Qiaomu said: The "Great Cultural Revolution" finished 5 years ago and 5 years is not a short time. After another 5 years, I am afraid there will be fewer and fewer people who actually know what happened during the "Great Cultural Revolution." In compiling the party history, we must let our descendents know about the bitter experience and take warning from it.

INTERNATIONAL COMMUNIST RELATIONS DISCUSSED

OW201456 Beijing in Russian to the USSR 1800 GMT 12 Aug 82

[Text] Dear Soviet radio listeners: Beginning in 1980, the Communist parties of Italy, Spain, Greece, France and the Netherlands began sending delegations to visit our country and to meet CPC leaders. For its part the CPC sent its delegations for reciprocal visits or to take part in the congresses of these communist parties. Joint efforts led to the renewal of the temporarily severed ties between the CPC and West European communist parties and to the development of relations between them in new historical conditions.

This event is not insignificant in the international communist movement. On 7 June, during a meeting with Henk Hoekstra, chairman of the Netherlands Communist Party, Hu Yaobang, chairman of the CPC, once again stated: The CPC is prepared to develop relations with the communist parties of different countries on the basis of independence, full equality, mutual respect and noninterference in each other's internal affairs. Guided by precisely these four principles, the CPC renewed and is developing its relations with a number of West European communist parties.

Today we have invited Hung Po, editor of our "International Affairs" rubric, to briefly tell you about the four principles in relations between communist parties:

[Hung Po] The four principles for developing relations between communist parties proposed by the CPC -- the principles of independence, full equality, mutual respect and noninterference in each other's internal affairs -- are important principles in the international communist movement. Marx and Engels, the founders of scientific communism, required that the working class of different countries develop the spirit of internationalism in the struggle against the international bourgeoise for the revival of mankind.

At the same time, they were in favor of the working class and parties of different countries solving questions of their countries' revolutions themselves. During the First International, Marx, touching on the question of the economic liberation of the working class through workers unified by their international workers comradeship gaining political power, noted: But the working class of the country itself must choose the way of securing this power. The International will not take upon itself to dictate anything on this question and it is doubtful that it will even give advice.

It follows that the teachers of the proletarian revolution have always been in favor of the parties of different countries solving the questions of their countries' revolutions themselves. Thus the relations between communist parties in the international communist movement must be those of equality and cooperation. Here the relationship between a leader and a subordinate does not exist. One party does not have the right to dictate to another and interference in the internal affairs of another party is intolerable.

The history of the international communist movement shows that tactics which would allow one party to dictate to and control another and to place it in a subordinate position would bring only disaster to the international communist movement.

The CPC, which is against the baton of a patriarchal party, has profoundly realized this and therefore proudly stands for states and parties -- be they large or small -- being equal. This has been shown in practice. Only in the presence of equality can relations of mutual respect and trust between communist parties be established.

[Question] There are people in the international arena who regard their own experience as unique and that naturally they should become the lode star of the world's revolutionary movements. If somebody does not act as they would have them act, they are attacked as a nationality party. Comrade Hung Po, are such views and conduct correct?

[Answer] Of course not. Any communist party that combines Marxism-Leninism with the concrete activities of its country will be able to find the correct revolutionary path, and only Marxists, Leninists communists and the people of a given country can determine whether the revolutionary path in that country is the correct one through their own revolutionary experience. Even mistakes made by them in their country's revolution can only be corrected by that country's party and people, which cannot be replaced by any other party.

Take the CPC: Having generalized experience and tasks and having learned lessons from different situations, it has combined Marxism-Leninism with the concrete experience of the Chinese revolution, firmly tread the path of surrounding cities with rural areas and above all, after a prolonged military struggle, finally gained the victory of revolution in the whole country. This means that proletarian rule in China was not created on the foreign model. Thus, similarly, we should not require other countries to achieve revolutionary victory according to our model.

Of course, the principles of independence of different parties do not prevent them from exchanging views and experience, learning together and finally achieving joint progress on the basis of Marxism and by the continuous test of experience.

[Question] Comrade Hung Po, according to your explanation, could I come to the following conclusion: Revolutionary victory in one country primarily depends on the selfless struggle of the party and people of that country and the correctness of the party line in that country, and not the policy line of other parties?

[Answer] That is quite logical. I remember when Hu Yaobang, chairman of the CPC Central Committee, noted at a reception for Greek correspondents tht the ideological movement for independence in the international communist movement was already evident in the 1940's. The interference of one party in the affairs of another completely contradicts [word indistinct] of the international communist movement and it is quite erroneous when a party considers itself correct and a leader in regard to others.

I personally consider that this era must end. Nobody can restrain the movement of different parties to hold consultations on the basis of independence and equality. I think that these words by Chairman Hu Yaobang can serve as the concluding remarks of our talk.

INTERREGIONAL MEDICAL WORKSHOP HELD IN TAIYUAN

ENVOY TO U.S. INTERVIEWED ON JOINT COMMUNIQUE

OW251929 Beijing XINHUA in English 1904 GMT 25 Aug 82

[Text] Washington, August 24 (XINHUA) -- The publication of the Sino-U.S. joint communique on the U.S. arms sale to Taiwan is only "the first step" towards the settlement of this issue; the question ahead is an honest and thorough implementation of all the principles and commitments embodied in the joint communique, Chinese Ambassador to the United States Chai Zemin said today.

In an interview with CBS-TV, Chai Zemin said: "The publication of the joint communique between China and the United States is a good thing, but that does not mean the entire issue has been totally solved. The reaching of agreement in the communique is only the first step towards the resolution of this issue. The question ahead is how to carry out all the principles and commitments embodied in the joint communique honestly and thoroughly."

The Chinese ambassador stressed: "Only with the thorough implementation of these principles and commitments would the Sino-U.S. relations develop smoothly, which would be conducive to world peace and stability."

Questioned about the ways of solving the Taiwan problem, Chai Zemin said: "In 1979 we issued the message to compatriots in Taiwan and then in 1981 we put forward a nine-point proposal for the peaceful settlement of the Taiwan problem. These fully demonstrate our sincerity. However, we are not to make any commitment to any country on the peaceful settlement of the Taiwan problem. We consider the Taiwan problem to be China's internal affair. It is up to us to decide how to solve this problem."

KYODO: JAPAN AGRICULTURE MINISTER VISIT ACCEPTED

OW251141 Tokyo KYODO in English 1135 GMT 25 Aug 82

[Text] Tokyo Aug 25 KYODO -- China told Japan Wednesday it will accept the visit of Agriculture, Forestry and Fisheries Minister Kichiro Tazawa scheduled for September 2-13, the government announced. The visit had been pending in the wake of controversy over Japanese school textbook accounts of Japanese military actions in China during and before World War II.

China has apparently decided to separate Tazawa's visit from the issue in which he is not directly involved, government sources said. Tazawa is scheduled to confer with Chinese agricultural leaders on bilateral cooperation during the two-week visit. He will also visit northeastern China for a first-hand look at a Japanese-financed farm development project.

It was the fourth inspection of the northern islands by a foreign minister since Masayoshi Ito's visit in October 1980. Foreign Minister Sakurauchi described the inspection as a demonstration of Japan's strong determination to recover the islands, KYODO reported.

Sakurauchi was accompanied by Iochiro Nakagawa, state minister and head of the science and technology agency.

FURTHER MATERIALS ON JAPANESE TEXTBOOK CHANGES

Corrections Demanded

OW251658 Beijing XINHUA in English 1541 GMT 25 Aug 82

[Text] Tokyo, August 25 (XINHUA) -- Japanese public opinion continues to criticize the Japanese Education Ministry for distorting history and embellishing militarism, and demands that the government correct the mistake immediately. Today's newspaper NIHON TO CHOUGOKU carried statements by two textbook compilers who revealed how the Education Ministry distorted history through textbook screening.

Professor Yoshio Kojima of Nihon University said in his statement that in compiling the part of history concerning China he originally used the title "The Japanese Agression Against China." However, he added, it was changed to the "Manchuria Incident" and "Shanghai Incident."

Another compiler, Shunichi Uno, said that the Education Ministry has never allowed him to use the term of "aggression" since he participated in the work eight or nine years ago.

He said the phrase "the 15-year war starting from the aggression in Manchuria" he used when compiling Japanese history textbooks for senior middle schools has been deleted.

ASAHI SHIMBUN pointed out today that in distorting history textbooks the Education Ministry revised the Japanese invasion not only of China and Korea but also of Southeast Asia, calling the invasion an "advance." In his "Advanced World History," Masao Nishikawa, associate professor of Tokyo University, has recorded the Japanese military maneuvers directed against Southeast Asia before Pearl Harbor. However, the censor at the Education Ministry demanded that the word "aggression" be reworded as "advance," arguing that "it cannot be regarded as aggression at that time."

A number of mass organizations have in the past two days issued statements or written letters to Prime Minister Zenko Suzuki, demanding rectification of the distorted history in the textbooks. A statement of the Japan women's congress said: "To cover up historical facts about the aggressive war with a view to making the people forget the sufferings inflicted by the war upon the Korean, Chinese and other Asian peoples can only be explained as a desire to launch aggression again." The statement demanded "immediate correction" of the distorted parts in the textbooks "so as to tell the younger generation about the true history."

The views of ordinary citizens on the distorted textbooks were reported today by TOKYO SHIMBUN which quoted a Tokyo housewife as saying that "children are entitled to know history in its truth. Those in power must not deprive them of their right. It won't be any different from the wartime education policy if education is conducted out of political considerations." The woman, reported TOKYO SHIMBUN, had taken her children to see the film "Aggression" which depicts the rape of Nanjing. A primary school teacher, Yiwabshi, appealed to parents and teachers to tell the children the historical truth from their own experience.

XINHUA Commentary

OW252032 Beijing XINHUA in English 2004 GMT 25 Aug 82

["Prompt and Opportune Decision Is Due Commentary by XINHUA Correspondent" -- XINHUA headline]

[Text] Beijing, August 25 (XINHUA) -- The people in China and the rest of Asia, including Japan, are expecting a prompt decision on the part of the Japanese Government to correct its Education Ministery's mistakes in the textbook affair. The sooner and clearer the decision, the better.

A Japanese Government leader pledged on August 23 to draw up conclusions in a responsible manner, but he failed to specify concrete measures. This has drawn critical comments from the Japanese press, which points out that the Japanese leader failed to mention how and when to correct the mistakes and shunned a direct answer to the key issue of whether the war launched by Japan was aggression or not.

The Japanese leaders statement that this issue should be left to historians of the future generations has drawn fire from the Japanese press. YOMIURI SHIMBUN points out: "A dubious answer cannot solve the problem." NIHON KEIZAI SHIMBUN says the Japanese Government should not make repentance in words, but in a decision on when and how to take measures to solve the problem.

The Chinese people and public opinion are deeply resentful of the Japanese Government's attitude in evading the substance of the problem and making generalizations on the matter, especially the allegation that conclusions on the war should be left to historians of the future generations. People cannot but ask whether the Japanese Government has made up its mind and really wants to settle the problem. ASAHI SHIMBUN points out that the policy-makers in the Japanese Government are still trying to take a wait-and-see attitude.

The textbook issue is not only a fundamental problem involving education in Japan, but also a matter of principle having a direct bearing on Japan's relations with all Asian-Pacific countries that have suffered from Japanese militarism. The attempts of a handful of people in Japan to distort history at will and beautify and revive militarism in defiance of world public opinion have aroused condemnation from the people in Japan and all victimized countries. As a Japanese paper puts it rightly: "Japan's image in the world has suffered serious damages never known before." The Japanese Government's credibility at home has also suffered, says another paper.

In these circumstances, the Japanese Government can get out of the embarrassment only by awakening itself to the gravity of the matter, dropping the idea of trusting to luck, making a prompt decision and adopting effective measures. The time for a prompt and opportune decision is due.

JAPANESE WAR CRIMINAL REPORTEDLY PLANS MONUMENT

[Text] Tokyo, August 23 (XINHUA) -- Nobusuke Kishi, who was declared an A-class war criminal by the Far East Military Tribunal after the Second World War, is now planning to build a "monument to the founding of the Manchurian state," according to press reports here today. This serves as another reminder that the soul of Japanese militarism which is aggressive by nature still refuses to make a bow.

A report in YOMIURI SHIMBUN said that a committee headed by Kishi, one time prime minister of post-war Japan, will raise 50 million yen for the monument which is to begin construction late next year at a graveyard in the Shizuoka Prefecture. Some people who were in leading positions in the puppet "Manchurian government," started planning the matter as early as a decade ago. A "promoters association" for the monument was formed in 1980 and a "construction association" was formally set up in February this year.

Kishi had served since 1936 as a leading official in the "Manchurian state" -- a puppet regime installed by Japanese militarism by force in northeast China -- and was known as one of the five masterminds in the "government."

Speaking of the monument, Kishi went so far as to defend the crimes committed by Japanese militarism, saying that the "Manchurian state" was set up with the aim of "creating an ideal state of five nationalities living in concord, in the utter absence of any colonial intent."

Tadayuki Furumi, another war criminal who ranked high in the puppet "Manchurian government," said that the establishment of Manchukuo "meant the establishment of an ideal state in the east and did not mean aggression at all."

Nobusuke Kishi and his like have also tried to take on some others in the executive committee for the founding of the monument. However, many of them refuse to comply.

According to YOMIURI SHIMBUN, Idachi Akio, whose name was put on the list of the "executive committee" said the Manchukuo should never be justified and he did not want to be a member of the committee.

JAPANESE PRESS PESSIMISTIC OVER NATIONAL ECONOMY

[Text] Tokyo, August 25 (XINHUA) -- "A marathon recession", "a hundred schools contend, but all are at a loss" -- these are the two expressions used by the Japanese press recently to describe the prospects of Japan's economy. The first expression means there is no end to the recession in sight, and the second suggests that while everybody is talking about the recession, no one is able to find a way out.

This pessimistic view regarding the Japanese economy is firstly based on the decline of export. Export trade of the country from April to June this year dropped by 4.1 percent compared with the same period of last year. The drop occurred mainly on such major commodities as machinery, electrical appliances and precision instruments.

Secondly, it is based on the shrinking capital investment. From April to June this year, investment in equipment in small and medium-sized enterprises was 2.4 percent less than that for the corresponding period of last year. Reduction in equipment investment in big enterprises is also under consideration. This has already discouraged orders for machinery (ships for civil service and power industry equipment excluded). Orders for machinery in June this year are 25.9 percent down from the previous month, and a further downward trend is expected for the next few months. Both export and capital investment had been the propellers of Japan's economy.

Moreover, domestic needs have been receding. A case in point is the home building industry. The number of newly built flats was 22 percent fewer in may and 1.9 percent fewer in June as compared with the corresponding months of last year. The attempt to boost domestic needs with public service spendings will not help much either.

The recession is marked by a large number of business failures. Last June alone saw 1,238 firms closed down, showing an increase of 0.5 percent over June of last year. The number of the unemployed in June reached 1.37 million or a rate of 2.48 percent, which was the worst record since 1956 for the country.

AFP: HONG KONG'S FUTURE NOT DISCUSSED WITH UK

[Text] Beijing, Aug. 23 (AFP) -- China has not discussed the future of Hong Kong with London a month before British Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher's scheduled visit here, Chinese Vice Foreign Minister Qian Qichen said today. "The agenda for the talks has not been fixed," Mr Qian told AGENCE FRANCE-PRESSE. Mr Qian denied that the Chinese Government had developed any plan for the future of Hong Kong after Britain's lease on the colony's new territories, which comprise most of its land mass expires in 1997.

"What's happening is that a lot of people have material and financial interests in Hong Kong," he said.

Mr. Qian stressed, however, that Hong Kong "is part of Chinese territory" and is an "historical problem."

He reiterated the Chinese aim to reassert sovereignty over the territory while working to assure its continued prosperity.

FRANCE ORDERS U.S. SUBSIDIARY TO SEND USSR PARTS

OW251732 Beijing XINHUA in English 1524 GMT 25 Aug 82

[Text] Paris, August 24 (XINHUA) -- The French Government decided Monday to requisition Dresser-France, a subsidiary of the U.S. Dresser-Industries, which refused to deliver the giant compressors ordered by the Soviet Union for its Siberian natural gas pipeline. Local newspapers described the decision as "a challenge to the United States."

The decision was made by French Minister of State for Research and Technology Jean-Pierre Chevenement. He said in a communique that Dresser-France "must deliver the ordered equipment to its customers in future and carry out the signed contracts."

Dresser-France shelved the production of giant compressors in compliance with the U.S. Government's ban on the sale of U.S. technology for the Soviet Siberian pipeline. But now ordered by the French Government, it must turn out 21 compressors for the pipeline as originally planned. The first three U.S.-designed compressors have been sent to the port of Le Havre and will be shipped to the Soviet Union Thursday.

The French Government decided on July 22 that it would not accept the U.S. decision on banning equipment supplies for the Soviet pipeline project and would honor its contracts with the Soviet Union. High-ranking U.S. Government officials were reportedly meeting today to find options in response to the French "challenge."

The spokesman said the letters, signed by Economics Ministry State Secretary Dieter von Wuerzen, have been received by many West German firms concerned.

West Germany will be the biggest consumer of Siberian gas and one of the leading suppliers of credits for the scheme.

POLISH INTERIOR MINISTER WARNS SOLIDARITY UNION

OW260835 Beijing XINHUA in English 0818 GMT 26 Aug 82

[Text] Warsaw, August 25 (XINHUA) -- Polish Minister of Internal Affairs Czeslaw Kiszczak in a television statement today warned the underground Solidarity union organizations that anyone creating street disturbances "will be punished."

The warning was directed at the call of the Solidarity "provisional national coordination committee" for demonstrations in Warsaw, Gdansk, Szczecin and other cities on August 31 to mark the second anniversary of the signing of the Gdansk accords. The statement said that the government "will never allow anyone to trample upon the interests of the state and people."

The Solidarity "coordinating committee" issued a "programmatic declaration" on July 28, calling for the organization of "universal underground resistance movements" and establishment of "underground communities" to fight the authorities.

Kiszczak said: "Nobody inside or outside the country should harbor the illusion" that "street disturbances in Poland can go with impunity." He said that the government "has sufficient and effective strength and means to guarantee peace and security" and "to shatter any counter-revolutionary attack on the socialist state."

He said that illegal acts or provocative steps will not help "those who sow unrest and hatred". "Their attempts to organize so-called underground communities will not succeed," he added.

The interior minister called on the people of all walks of life to support the government's effort for maintaining peace and order in the country, and demanded that all citizens "take a responsible attitude."

Another development today is that the socio-political committee of Poland met under the chairmanship of Vice-Prime Minister Mieczyslaw Rakowski to discuss the present situation. The meeting accused the "underground organization of the opposition" of using the second anniversary of the social accords to "oppose the authorities of the country and sabotage the stability of the society". The signing of the social accords had led to the founding of the Solidarity union.

The meeting said that acts against the state could only "delay the lifting of the martial law." The government "will not remain indifferent to the wild acts of the political enemy," and is ready to foil and attempts to disrupt public order, it said.

[Text] Beirut, August 25 (XINHUA) -- A fourth group of 1,300 Palestinian guerrillas left the port of Beirut by ship yesterday for North Yemen via Cyprus, thus completing the first stage -- to depart by sea -- of the pullout plan.

As was planned, the second phase of the withdrawal move, evacuation by land to Syria through an international highway, was to start today. However, radio Israel reported this morning that owing to technical difficulties with the arrangements, the joint committee of the multinational force, Lebanon and Israel had scrapped the plan of overland withdrawal of the guerrillas by sea route instead, to the Latakia port of Syria.

Morris Draper, assistant of U.S. special envoy Philip Habib, informed the commander of the Israeli Northern Military Division last night that the Palestinian side also hoped to continue the evacuation by sea.

HUANG HUA MESSAGE TO UN MARKS NAMIBIA DAY

OW251742 Beijing XINHUA in English 1605 GMT 25 Aug 82

[Text] Beijing, August 26 (XINHUA) -- Chinese State Councillor and Foreign Minister Huang Hua today sent a message to Paul John Firmino Lusaka, president of the U.N. Council for Namibia, extending sincere solidarity with and firm support for the just struggle of the Namibian people.

The message reads: "On the occasion of Namibia Day, I wish to express, on behalf of the Chinese Government, our sincere and firm support to you and the U.N. Council for Namibia.

"The question of Namibia is now a major concern to Africa and the whole international community. The U.N. organizations, including the U.N. Council for Namibia, have made unswerving efforts for and useful contributions to the settlement of the Namibia question. In May this year, the extraordinary plenary meeting of the U.N Council for Namibia adopted the declaration and programme of action on Namibia, which will certainly give greater imputus to the just struggle of the Namibian people.

"Over the past year, the Namibian People, led by Swapo and firmly supported by African states and the international community, have carried on their struggle in various forms and made new efforts for the cause of Namibia's independence. However, the South African authorities, obstinately sticking to their position of trying to prolong their control over Namibia, have carried out wanton suppression of the Namibian national liberation forces, intensified their efforts to foster puppets, and launched armed invasion into neighbouring countries and done their utmost to obstruct the implementation of the U.N. plans and resolutions for the independence of Namibia. As a result, the Namibia question remains unsolved till this day.

"The Chinese Government has consistently opposed and condemned the South African authorities racist policy and their illegal occupation of Namibia and opposed any outside interference in and sabotage of the Namibian people's cause of national independence. The Chinese Government and people will, as always, resolutely support the struggle of the Namibian people for national liberation and independence, and the efforts of Swapo and the African states for the achievement of the independence of Namibia at an early date. We are convinced that the Namibian people will finally win their independence and liberation."

"Namibia Day" was declared by the U.N. Council for Namibia in August 1973 in commemoration of the beginning of armed struggle by the Namibian people on August 26, 1966, under the leadership of Swapo, against the colonial rule of the racist South African regime.

[Text] Maputo, August 7 (XINHUA) -- A delegation of the Chinese People's Association for Friendship With Foreign Countries left here today for Kenya after a week-long friendly visit to Mozambique. The Chinese delegation visited many places, including factories and the construction site of an agricultural project aided by China.

Zandamelo, a member of the Central Committee of the ruling Mozambique Liberation Front, yesterday met with all the members of the Chinese delegation and acquainted them with the current central tasks of the country. He also praised the friendship between the people of the two countries. Both sides expressed readiness to increase the exchange of friendly visits between them.

BAN YUE TAN COMMENTARY ON BUILDING COMMUNISM

OW251220 Beijing XINHUA Domestic Service in Chinese 0045 GMT 24 Aug 82

[Text] Beijing, 24 Aug (XINHUA) -- Issue No 16 of BAN YUE TAN magazine carries a comentator's article entitled "Communism Is Marching Forward in Practice — Once Again Doing Away With the Theory That 'Communism Is Too Distant To Attain.'" The complete article reads as follows:

The communist movement has always developed by practice, not by empty talk. The communist movement was, has been and will be marching forward in practice.

Our party has developed from a communist group intp the ruling party leading socialist New China. This is a great practice that no one can deny. This great practice has been carried out under the guidance of the communist ideological system, which was explained long ago by Comrade Mao Zedong in his work "On New Democracy." During the new democratic revolution, our party led all struggles and performed all its work under the guidance of communist ideology. All such struggles and work were component parts of the communist movement. It is for this reason that our party was firmer and more thoroughgoing than any other in fulfilling the tasks of the democratic revolution. For example, carrying out the agrarian revolution, waging the war of resistance against Japan, building the people's democratic regime in the base areas, implementing various new democratic policies, overthrowing the Chiang Kai-shek government and founding the People's Republic -- all these, although not directly building a communist society, were creating conditions for the realization of communism. As for carrying out socialist revolution and construction, these are the primary phases of building a communist society. The great Chinese PLA is a people's army founded and led by our party. Without the Communist Party's leadership, how could such great, historic struggles of the Chinese people have been waged -- the "1 August" uprising, smashing the Kuomintang troops' encirclement and suppression several times, the 25,000-li Long March, the war of resistance against Japan and the war of liberation? All revolutionary practice carried out by every loyal member of our party each day constitutes a small part of the great communist cause.

The communist movement covers a very long process. The communist movement not only during the initial stage of its development but even after the seizure of state power by the Communist Party does not indicate that the society has reached the stage in which the communist system is realized. During their lifetimes, Marx, Engels and even Lenin and Mao Zedong did not set about realizing communism, but none of them, after they became communists, ever doubted that they were struggling for the communist movement all their lives. As Engels pointed out long ago: Communism is first a movement. Therefore, communism should not be regarded only as a social system. The argument that "communism has not been tested in practice" and "communism is an illusion" is fantastic talk that is simply untenable.

Our party and we communists should observe and solve all social problems with communist ideology. The communist movement and communist practice are a movement and a code of behavior under the guidance of communist ideology. The communist system did not come from the sky, nor did it come into being spontaneously. Our party calls on the people to study Marxist-Leninist theories, carries out propaganda and education in communism among them, and unfolds the campaign to establish socialist spiritual civilization. All these are for the purpose of instilling communist thinking into the minds of the people so that they have revolutionary ideals and communist morality and promote communist practice. The internal strife of those 10 years has caused great damage to our party's work style and to the general mood of society, but a large number of new buds of communism are still emerging and growing every day among the broad masses of communists, CYL members and people and in our daily life. There are people of varius trades and professions doing noble work for socialist construction day and night. There are heroes and model persons who dedicate themselves heart and soul to the defense of the motherland, to the heroic struggle to combat floods and provide disaster relief, and to diligent work in scientific laboratories and classrooms.

Are they "dreamers?" No. They are men of action waging a down-to-earth struggle for the realization of communism. Why do they quietly immerse themselves in hard work every day, every month and every year? Are they working for money, fame or high positions? No. They are working for socialist modernization and for the ultimate magnificent goal of realizing communism. They have a conviction that the victories of socialist modernization and the victories of communism cannot be won by waiting or by shouting slogans, that they are won only by working steadily and making solid progress. They know very well that the greatest disgrace in the world is the lifestyle of those parasites in society who are selfish, harm others to benefit themselves, idle about and lead a befuddled life, hoping to profit by others' toil.

Those having the conviction that communism will surely triumph can prove, both in theory and in practice, that the communist movement conforms to the people's interests and to the historical trend of the times. They unwaveringly make sacrifices themselves because they know that such sacrifices are meaningful and worthwhile and are the only way to win victory for the people.

History has reached a conclusion: Their thinking and deeds are correct. Before the liberation of our country, we defeated Japanese imperialism and overthrew the Kuomintang's reactionary rule by relying on communist thinking. Today we have established a socialist society. We still must rely on communist thinking to puch the cause of socialism forward and to accomplish socialist modernization before the end of this century.

In the presence of the brilliant examples set by innumerable martyrs, heroes and model persons and in the presence of these lively embodiments of communist thinking, let us forever abandon the erroneous viewpoint that communism is "too distant to attain."

Without communist thinking, our great socialist motherland would not have had its past, nor would it have its present and future. Without communist thinking, our great socialist motherland could not have the beautiful things it has now, nor would our 1 billion people have light, hope and happiness.

OPPOSITION TO BOURGEOIS LIBERALISM TO CONTINUE

["Notes From the Editors" column by cultural editor Xin Xiangrong: "Cultural Exchanges With Foreign Countries"]

[Text] DOES CHINA'S CRITICISM OF BOURGEOIS LIBERALIZATION HAVE A NEGATIVE EFFECT ON ITS CULTURAL EXCHANGES WITH WESTERN COUNTRIES? [published in boldface]

Cultures of different nations always have interchanges and influence each other. True arts and science have become the common property of all the world's people. China's cultural exchanges with other countries, including those in the West, are aimed at promoting mutual understanding and friendship and drawing on the essence of foreign culture to speed up the development of its own socialist culture.

We do not indiscriminately reject foreign culture, nor do we blindly worship it.

Every country, oriental or Western, large or small, has its own traditional, distinctive culture. Each has elements that can appropriately be absorbed by other cultures and elements that other cultures must reject. Thus we are selective in our utilization of cultural aspects of other countries and are careful not to copy them mechanically. We utilize culture from abroad in the context of China's actual conditions and national traditions. Only thus can we gain from cultural exchanges with other countries in a way that will enrich and develop our own culture.

Similarly, we are analytical about Western culture. We welcome Western things that uphold the independence and freedom of the people and things that are beneficial to the people's bodies and minds and help promote scientific development. On the other hand, we do not allow any reactionary or obscene elements that erode our people's minds. We do not ban things that are still controversial or even things that strike a somewhat unhealthy tone so long as they are not reactionary or obscene. It is neither possible nor desirable to prevent people from having contact with erroneous things. On the contrary, people should be encouraged to analyse and discuss these things so that they can improve their ability to distinguish right from wrong. This is also our attitude towards our own culture.

The current struggle against bourgeois liberalization is indispensable for developing a new socialist culture in China. Those who advocate bourgeois liberalization blindly worship the West and are the trumpeters of bourgeois democracy; they want to introduce into China the entire Western political system, individualisc ideas (including single-minded pursuit of personal gain and money worship) and even Western cultural garbage. Such a tendency has emerged in China in the last few years. If it is not criticized and checked, it will jeopardize the promotion of socialist ethics and endanger our socialist cause.

Decadent bourgeois ideas from the West will unavoidably find their way into China with the increase of our exchanges with foreign countries. But these are not to be feared if we bear in mind the importance of the "anti-erosion" struggle and adopt appropriate measures. We should on no account abandon the policy of opening China to the outside world or our cultural exchanges with other countries, including Western countries. We will never return to the cultural obscurantism practised by Jiang Qing and her ilk.

We will never slacken our efforts to oppose bourgeois liberalization. The implementation of this policy will ensure the healthy development of China's cultural exchanges with other countries and enable China to absorb the essence of foreign culture in a still better way.

YU GUANGYUAN ON ECONOMIC DEVELOPMENT STRATEGY

[Article by Yu Guangyuan [0060 0342 6678]: "Scientific Research on Questions Concerning China's Economic and Social Development Strategies"]

[Text] In a socialist country, the economic and social development strategies are formulated and consequently implemented by this country's leading Marxist political party and by its central government which is responsible for managing state affairs. Up to now, it seems that no country has ever promulgated the strategies formulated for economic and social development in a special document. However, these strategies are usually specified in the country's planning and in the various significant measures adopted for the realization of the plans. In addition, they are usually expounded on and developed in the major documents of the party and the government. The situation in China is also like this.

Carrying out research and formulating a country's economic and social development strategies are tough and complicated scientific tasks. The scientists (including economists, social scientists and natural scientists) make use of their knowledge and ability to collect data from the various important aspects of the relevant strategies, carry out research, conduct discussions and give opinions, and provide the party and the government with scientific achievements. This is a social obligation that they undertake.

The Chinese scientists have been doing all this in the past year. They have seriously studied the problems involved, presented relevant overseas and domestic information, put forth enlightening questions and given certain valuable opinions. Research work in this respect is boundless. Research work over the past year or more has helped the scientists to clarify certain concepts, laying a preliminary foundation for research work in the future.

The majority of the scholars inside our country now advocate using the jargon of "economic and social development strategies." However, some people have doubts about this, thinking that the economic life is part of the social life and should not be put on the same level with social life. This view is reasonable. But if we change "economic and social development strategies" into "social development strategy" because of this, we will not be able to give prominence to the position of economic development. On the other hand, if we change it into "economic developmenc strategy," we will not be able to attach importance to social problems other than economic problems. The jargon of "economic and social" is merely an abbreviation of "economic relations" and "social life and social relations other than economic relations," and is not detaching "economic relations" from "social relations." Such an expression is permissible in both Chinese and the Western languages.

Certainly, the jargon of "economic development strategy" should be affirmed, but its meaning should be narrowed. It is only a part, although the most dominant part, of the "economic and social development strategies." Special research can be carried out on this part, however, it cannot be used to replace "economic and social development strategies."

What the Chinese scientists are mainly studying now is not the general theories and principles for development strategies, but the current development strategies for China. Thus, the first question that they encounter is to clarify the fundamental characteristics of the Chinese development strategies.

Obviously, the "economic and social development strategies" that China needs are different in principle to the development strategies of the capitalist countries. They must accord with the nature of socialism and suit the demand for developing socialism. They are development strategies of a socialist nature. Thus, such strategies have the following fundamental characteristics: 1) This strategy must serve the purpose of improving the livelihood of the laborers and enhancing their happiness. This is determined by the nature of the socialist system. Although these words have always been spoken by bourgeois scholars and politicians, they are spoken either with good intentions or for the sake of fulfilling certain political demands. The strategic objective of "satisfying the people's needs" orally advocated by the bourgeoisie is determined by the nature of capitalism and is unrealistic. The ultimate goal of the strategies implemented by the bourgeois rulers is to protect the interest of the bourgeoisie itself. Only under the socialist system will the development goals really aim at promoting the happiness of the laboring masses. 2) The prescribed development goals of this strategy must be conducive to the consolidation of the socialist economy and the basic political system and must simultaneously bear the content of reforming the economic, political and administrative systems. This is because certain things which do not accord with giving play to the current productive forces and further developing the productive forces are bound to exist in the current systems. We will not be able to find better solutions to the social problems if no reform is carried out on them. In addition, these reforms are of great significance. 3) The implementation of this policy must rely on the superiority of the socialist system and practical efforts must be made in order to give play to such superiority. Only by so doing can a socialist country's economic and social life develop wholesomely and at a fast speed. $) It is the laborers under the socialist system who function as the main body implementing this strategy. It is the Marxist party and the government under the leadership of the party who concentratedly represent their interests and will. Thus, the strengthening of the roles played by the party, the improvement of the laborers' political awareness and cultural and educational standards, and the development toward a higher degree of democracy in the state and social life provide fundamental guarantees for realizing the strategies. Capitalist countries often stress the roles played by education, science and culture in the development of a country's economic and social development. However, this is more meaningful in a socialist country where the laborers are the masters of the state and the society.

The "economic and social development strategies" demanded by China are certainly development strategies which accord with China's national conditions. China is a socialist country. This is the most fundamental national condition of China. We have mentioned this point before. However, this concept of China's national condition also includes other areas. If we say that in order to affirm the socialist nature of the development strategies for China the scientists only have to affirm and uphold the theory and principles of scientific socialism, then in order to make the Chinese development strategies accord with the national conditions of China, the scientists still have to summarize, from an enormous amount of materials concerning the Chinese national conditions, certain characteristics which play a decisive role in formulating the development strategies for China, and draw corresponding conclusions.

It is not easy at all to accurately and completely summarize the characteristics of Chinese national conditions which determine the development strategies. Thus, we can analyze this question from different angles and must distinguish between the most important and least important points. In order to affirm the characteristics of China, it is necessary to carry out research in making comparisons with foreign countries. However, this is not particularly difficult; the more difficult thing is to make an appropriate conclusion in actual practice. It is necessary to carry out more research concerning these questions. Here in this article, I only want to talk from an economic point of view about particular problems facing the research in Chinese development strategies.

First, China has a population of 1 billion people and is the most densely populated country in the world. The economic and social development strategies of a particularly big country are certainly different from the economic and social strategies of a medium-size or a relatively small country. Owing to the large size of the country, the characteristics of the development strategies involve various aspects. For instance, in two countries where the level of the productive forces (which can be judged by the per capita possession of machine tools, volume of electricity generated, transportation capacity and other means of labor and the average technical and cultural standards of the laborers) are roughly the same, the capacity of the larger country is greater than the smaller one. Thus, its capacity of fighting against natural disasters and overcoming difficulties is also greater, and is more superior to the smaller country when there is a need to concentrate great manpower and material power to promote certain things. On the other hand, the carrying out of a certain reform or the implementation of a certain policy or measure in a big country usually takes a longer time than that required by a smaller country because there are more levels between the central government and the grassroots organizations and because there is a greater chance that the situation varies in different localities. It is of course necessary to develop import and export trade in such big countries, but as far as production is concerned, the position of home markets in such big countries is more significant than that of smaller countries, and social demands should also be basically solved by production of such countries themselves. The necessity of establishing in such big countries an independent and complete system of the national economy which includes all departments is beyond doubt.

Second, the territory of China can be divided into two regions, the western region and the eastern region. The western region includes dry areas in the northwest and the frigid areas in Qinhai and Xizang, which account for 52 percent of the total area of the mainland, but the population there only accounts for 6 percent of the mainland's total population. The eastern region has a monsoon climate and accounts for 48 percent of the mainland's total area, but the population there accounts for 94 percent of the total population. Due to faster economic development and higher gross national product value in the eastern region, this region's gross national product occupies a great proportion in the country's gross national product, exceeding its population proportion. This situation means that we must consider the questions from two angles.

First, since the economic development of the densely populated eastern region plays a decisive role in the whole country's economic development, we must rely primarily on this region to promote the national economy. Thus, it is necessary to consider the question of economic development strategies in accordance with the characteristics of this region such as a large population, limited land (particularly arable land) and a high economic and cultural standard. The conclusions drawn from these are being affirmed one by one. For instance, we must make full use of each inch of land in this region, including making better use of hilly areas, water surfaces and odd pieces of land, produce more foodstuffs and raw materials for industry and vigorously develop the processing industry of the native products and agricultural services business; we must develop labor-intensive industries and agriculture and develop various knowledge-intensive trades; we must attach importance to developing various service businesses; we must further improve this region's economic, technical and cultural standard; and so on.

Second, since there is a vast unexploited area in the western part of China, and since the rich natural resources (in particular mineral resources) there have not been utilized, we should see that the existence of this piece of unexploited land is of great strategic significance in the development, and in particular, the long-term development of the Chinese economy. Currently, while carrying out research in giving full play to the roles of the eastern region, we must simultaneously carry out research in the exploitation of the western region and study how to integrate the building of the eastern and western regions.

Third, economic and technical development in various regions in China are obviously unbalanced. Such an imbalance exists both in relatively developed regions and undeveloped regions, between certain cities along the shore such as Shanghai and in other large and medium-size cities in the hinterland, between large and medium-size cities in the hinterland and the townships in the localities and between urban and rural areas. This situation determines the strategic significance of economic cooperation and technical transformation. We must utilize and give play to this potential to develop the economy of the undeveloped regions and consequently bring about a great development in the whole of China. Here the significant meaning of further improving the economic and technical levels of advanced regions is also contained. Only by so doing can we enable the backward regions to incessantly obtain technical benefits which have been transferred from advanced regions. Owing to the fact that cities are the centers of the neighboring regions (of course the role of many large cities greatly exceeds the role of the regions), as far as improving the economic and cultural levels of the vast rural areas is concerned, urban construction plays a very important role.

Fourth, of the total population of 1 billion people in China, 80 percent live in the rural areas. The changes of the economic life of the rural population -- including production, distribution, exchange and consumption -- seriously affect the whole socialist economic construction cause in China. The economic development of the rural areas, as the supply bases of agricultural products used as raw materials for industries such as the foodstuff industry, provides a guarantee for the development of the industrial cities in all of China. As far as this area is concerned today, there are great potentials. In accordance with their long-term accumulated experience and knowledge, the Chinese workers, peasants and science workers have created effective methods and measures for producing more products by making full use of land. Many new methods are still under study. However, only by implementing the measures which have been decided can we greatly increase social wealth in this respect. Simultaneously, the rural areas are the biggest markets for China's industrial products. If the average income of the 800 million rural inhabitants is increased by 1 yuan each month, the purchasing power will be increased by 9.6 billion yuan each year. Therefore, in order to develop our country's national economy, it is necessary to pay special attention to the development of the rural areas. It is necessary to attach great importance to construction of rural areas in the course of socialist construction. Each production measure which can generally increase the income of the rural inhabitants should have great importance attached to it.

Fifth, in short, when compared with other developed countries, the technical level of China is still far behind. It saves much time and labor to make use of the existing technology than to start inventing and creating from the very beginning. Marx has said that Newton spent much time in discovering the binomial theorem, but the lower secondary form students now only have to spend one lesson to learn them. There is a great difference between them. The gap between Chinese technology and foreign technology enables China to have a chance to make use of foreign advanced technology to develop its domestic economy. A weak point in our country is that we are comparatively more backward than foreign countries. But this can be interpreted from another angle as an advantageous condition for developing the economy of China.

Simultaneously, the current international situation is also conducive to importing advanced foreign technology into China. Upholding the open-door policy is an important constituent of China's development strategies. Certainly, as a big socialist country, China must adhere to the fundamental spirit of maintaining independence and self-reliance and keeping the initiative in her own hands. Self-reliance and the open-door policy do not discriminate against each other. As Premier Zhao Ziyang pointed out in the government work report entitled "China's Economy and Development Principles:" "We should use our domestic resources in the first place and international resources in the second; we should develop our domestic market in the first place and our role in the world market in the second; and we should master two skills, that of domestic economic management and that of foreign trade and economic exchange." The demands put forth in this report, generated from the principle of simultaneously implementing the open-door policy and upholding self-reliance, are included in our country's economic and social development strategies.

So far we have only discussed the problem from the economic aspect. The development of the relationship between the socialist life and society beyond the economic scope also embodies very rich content, part of which is also of strategic importance. For example, the building of socialist spiritual civilization is not only an important aspect of socialist construction but also an important aspect which must be taken into consideration when working out the economic and social development strategy. As everybody knows, spiritual civilization consists not only of the scope and level of the development of education, science, culture, arts, public health, and physical culture, but also of the direction and level of the development of sociopolitical thinking and ethics. The building of material civilization is the basis of spiritual civilization; whereas the building of spiritual civilization may exert a tremendous influence on the building of material civilization. Over the last few years, the strategic significance of the building of spiritual civilization, such as the development of education, science and so on, has been repeatedly emphsized; and people's understanding has been greatly improved. However, this viewpoint remains one which still needs to be studied, elaborated and emphasized. The "education" which I mention here includes the general improvement of the cultural standard and intellectual level, as well as the enhancement of socialist ideological consciousness and moral standard. And the "science" which I mention here includes various scientific fields such as mathematics, physics, chemistry and biology and various technological branches such as industry, agriculture, medical science and so on, as well as various social sciences such as economic science, political science, administrative science and so on. And, above all, upholding, developing and popularizing Marxism is the core of the building of the socialist spiritual civilization. To put forth the problem of spiritual civilization in the way we do is a pioneering undertaking in world history. I hold that regarding the problem of spiritual civilization as an important problem of the socialist development strategy is a brand new idea in the development of strategic research.

The concept of "economic and social development strategy" comprises the strategic goal, strategic guideline, measures to be taken to fulfill the strategic goal, and so on. Therefore, today, when studying the Chinese socialist economic and social development strategy, we cannot ignore the current development stage of the Chinese economy and the tasks it faces today in the early 1980's. Over a certain period in the future, we will still have to carry on implementing the eight-character principle of readjustment, reform, reorganization and upgrading. With regard to the present economic situation and the direction of economic construction, Premier Zhao Ziyang has already given a detailed exposition in the government work report made at the Fourth Plenary Session of the Fifth National People's Congress last year. More concrete plans will be formulated in China's Sixth 5-Year Plan.

Strategy here simply means schemes of great significance which have an important bearing or even a decisive influence on the overall situation. Since different scopes have different "overall situations," there will naturally be different strategies within different scopes. The "economic and social development strategy" we mean here denotes the general strategy of a nation. And each sector and each area may and should have its own strategy. For example, those strategies which belong to various sectors include industrial development strategy, agricultural development strategy, science and technological development strategy, external economic relations development strategy, and so on; while those strategies which belong to various areas include development strategies for a certain zone, a certain province, or a certain municipality. For a certain sector or a certain area, these matters may have an important bearing on their own overall situation. Therefore, they may be regarded as strategic problems. However, a matter which has an important bearing on the overall situation for a sector or an area may turn out to be a matter of partial importance for the whole country. They are only integral parts in the nationwide economic and social development strategy, and strategies of partial importance under the guidance of the general strategic ideology. Of course, the whole is always composed of integral parts; and the whole will no longer exist if the integral parts do not exist. The whole economic and social development strategy has to be substantiated and complemented with many partial strategies like these. Therefore, when discussing the economic and social development strategy of a country, we usually and naturally have to extend our discussion to these strategic matters of partial importance. But we will just skip them here. (This is the notes from a lecture which the author gave in Hong Kong this year.)

CAPITAL CONSTRUCTION REFLECTS READJUSTMENT

[Excerpts] Beijing, 21 Aug (XINHUA) -- In implementing the policy of readjusting the national economy in our country, capital construction is a focal point. A large amount of data provided by the State Economic Commission, the State Statistical Bureau and other departments show that after more than 3 years' readjustment, the capital construction front in our country has experienced major changes in four aspects:

1. The over-extended scale of construction has been curtailed. At the end of 1978, before the readjustment policy was implemented, 1,624 large and medium-sized projects were under construction in the country, and more than 140 billion yuan would have been required to complete all these projects, far beyond our national capabilities. By the end of 1981, after 3 years of readjustment, the number of large and medium-sized projects under construction was 663, a reduction of 961 projects, cutting investment by more than 55 billion yuan in 3 years.

2. The orientation of investment has become more rational. This is manifest mainly in two areas: First, the proportion of investment in nonproductive construction has increased, and that in productive construction has dropped.

The proportion of investment in nonproductive construction to serve the people increased from 17.4 percent in 1978 to 41.2 percent in 1981. In the past 3 years, houses with a total floor space of 223 million square meters have been completed, equivalent to 30 percent of the floor space of houses built in the first 29 years after the founding of the People's Republic. A large number of school buildings, hospitals and municipal public utilities have also been completed. Second, the proportion of investment in light industry has increased, and that in heavy industry has dropped. In capital construction investment, the proportion for light industry increased from 6.1 percent in 1978 to 10 percent in 1981, and the proportion for heavy industry dropped from 50.9 percent in 1978 to 40.3 percent in 1981.

3. Investment results have begun to improve. The proportion of capital construction projects that are completed and turned over to users within a year has increased, from 74.3 percent in 1978 to 86.7 percent in 1981, the highest level since 1966.

4. Construction of key projects has been accelerated. In the past 3 years, 289 large and medium-sized projects have been completed and put into operation, and 737 single-item projects have been completed.

The departments concerned pointed out that through readjustments, remarkable achievements have been made on the capital construction front in our country. However, to consolidate the achievements, it is still necessary to continue to keep the overall scale of construction under control and to make overall arrangements for capital construction and renovation and transformation of existing facilities to strike an overall balance. At the same time, the problem of the long construction cycle has yet to be solved, and investment returns still are far below our past best records. All this awaits the capital construction departments' adopting effective measures and finding solutions.

CHANG JIANG HANDLES GREATER FOREIGN TRADE

[Text] Wuhan, August 25 (XINHUA) -- The Yangtze River, China's largest waterway, carried 725,000 tons of foreign trade cargo between January and July, 106 percent more than in the same 1981 period, according to the Yangtze River Navigation Administration.

Of this, export cargo was 422,000 tons, an increase of 143 percent; and import cargo, mainly metallic ore, 303,000 tons, up 69 percent. Export cargo includes petroleum, cement, iron and steel, machinery, textiles, light industrial products and native produce.

Cargo shipped to Hong Kong exceeded 200,000 tons, half of the total export volume, the administration said.

So far, eight ports have opened to foreign trade cargo transport along the Yangtze in the provinces of Jiangsu, Anhui, Jiangxi, Hubei, Hunan and Sichuan. Through these ports, local goods for export can be shipped directly to other countries instead of being transshipped at Shanghai harbor, or going to rail to Hong Kong.

Along with these ports, six shipping companies have been set up to handle the imports and exports of the areas along the Yangtze. They have opened shipping routes from the river to Hong Kong, Japan and Southeast Asian countries.

In addition, branches of the Chinese Ocean Shipping Agency and the Chinese Ocean Shipping Tally Company have been established at some ports. They currently handle foreign trade transport only for Chinese ships.

PLA DIRECTIVE ON EVALUATING ADVANCED UNITS

OW260318 Beijing XINHUA Domestic Service in Chinese 0148 GMT 25 Aug 82

[Excerpts] Beijing, 25 Aug (XINHUA) -- The PLA General Political Department has recently issued a directive to all units to evaluate advanced units and advanced individuals in fostering socialist spiritual civilization. The directive calls on all units, commanders and fighters to launch the "double advanced" activities in a deepgoing, sustained and effective way.

The directive says: Since the all-army political work meeting in January of this year called for launching mass activities for advanced units and advanced individuals in fostering socialist spiritual civilization ("double advanced" activities for short), a movement has begun throughout the army to learn from, catch up with and create the advanced.

The directive explains in detail the purpose and significance of promoting socialist spiritual civilization in the army. It says that army building in the new historical period means building ours into a strong, modernized, regularized and revolutionary army. To attain this objective, it is necessary to train soldiers with high political consciousness, advanced military concepts and a higher level of modern scientific and technological knowledge; to gradually equip it with fine modern weapons and equipment as our country's four modernizations progress; to start scientific formation as required by modern weaponry, equipment and modern warfare; to conduct strict training, implement all decrees and regulations, tighten discipline and satisfactorily put the right men behind the right weapons. This is the central task and common goal of the whole army.

The directive says: One fundamental guarantee for adhering to the four basic principles and realizing the four modernizations is to achieve a high degree of socialist spiritual civilization. This is also the main content and fundamental guarantee for building a modernized, regularized and revolutionary army. Generally speaking, to build socialist spiritual civilization means having ideals, stressing ethics and observing discipline. The nucleus is having ideals. This requires us to arm our cadres and fighters with the scientific theories of Marxism-Leninism-Mao Zedong Thought and communist concepts so that they can enhance their political consciousness, foster the communist world outlook, strengthen their confidence in realizing communism, foster communist ethics, tighten the revolutionary discipline, resist the influence of capitalist ideas, keep to the firm and correct political orientation of our army building and preserve the proletarian nature of our army and the intrinsic quality of the People's Army. At the same time, it requires us to raise the cultural, scientific, technological, tactical and physical fitness level of our cadres and fighters so that they can master and operate modern weapons and equipment. Proposed on the basis of the party Central Committee's instruction on promoting socialist spiritual civilization and in consideration of the characteristics of our army, the slogan of "have ideals, morality, knowledge and physical strength; stress soldiers' appearance, courtesy and discipline; and fear neither hardship, nor bloodshed and sacrifices," that is, the slogan of "four haves, three stresses and two fearnots," fully embodies our army's fine tradition and the army building needs in the new historical period.

Regarding the basic contents of the "double advanced" activities and the evaluation bases and methods, the directive says that the basic contents of the "double advanced" activities and the bases for evaluation are the "four haves, three stresses and two fearnots." To better suit the practical conditions of different units, divisions and regiments may emphasize some particular implementation requirements in light of their education and training conditions, preparedness against war and other tasks and main problems to be solved. At present, the "double advanced" activities are to be conducted at conducted at basic-level units and among individuals below the company level or units equivalent to the company level. To evaluate the adv anced, it is necessary to proceed from the practical condition, stress the results and select easy requirements.

RENMIN RIBAO FEATURES YOUNG AIR FORCE PILOTS

[Feature by RENMIN RIBAO reporters Yan Wu [7051 0710], Zhang Wanlai [1728 8001 0171], Wang Lisheng [3769 4539 3932] and Li Ciying [2621 2945 5235]: "A Generation of Proud Flyers -- Notes on the Air Force Congress on Building Spiritual Civilization"]

[Text] Leading comrades of the PLA Air Force gave a report at the congress of the PLA Air Force advanced elements in promoting socialist spiritual civilization on the gratifying achievements scored in the past year or so. The following figures are conspicuous:

A total of 2,408 advanced companies and groups and more than 45,000 advanced elements have emerged in the air force in the building of socialist spiritual civilization.

A total of 18,529 units and more than 202,000 individuals have rendered meritorious services and have been awarded for their efforts.

As people are already aware, there has also emerged a new situation in the building of the air force:

The number of A-type regiments, which are the main symbols of the principal fighting force of the air units, has doubled in the record year.

The achievements scored by the air units in shooting and bombing have broken all previous records.

Techniques and tactics of the airborne forces, antiaircraft units, radar, ground-to-air guided missile forces, and other ground forces have surpassed the previous highest records in history.

The maneuverability in battles has been unprecedently raised and flight safety is among the world's best.

This is indeed an excellent situation. It is a brilliant record made by the broad masses of cadres and fighters of the air force in stepping up the building of the air force since the 3d Plenary Session of the 11th CPC Central Committee.

To do an excellent job, an excellent mental attitude is indispensable. One must have soaring aspirations and the courage to dedicate one's life.

On the airfield, people were looking up at the sky with bated breath. A high-speed fighter dropped down swiftly like a shooting star from the altitude of 18,000 meters to 5,000 meters, at a speed of 80-100 meters per second.

This was a new-type fighter designed and made in our country, which was being flight-tested by Li Shaofei, a pilot. At an altitude of 18,000 meters, Li Shaofei made a control operation. Unexpectedly, two engines stopped working at the same time. He tried to start the engines several times, but failed. At this critical moment, if he bailed out and abandoned the plane, he would be safe. However, he did not hesitate to protect the plane, a fruit of scientific research, at the risk of his life. When the plane dropped to an altitude of 4,500 meters, he tried a fifth time, and this time he succeeded.

It is sometimes dangerous to drive a car or walk, not to mention at high altitudes and in a high-speed flight. It is even more dangerous in a test flight. However, Li Shaofei never thought of his personal safety. He has been fighting on this post for nearly 10 years. He is very proud of himself, for he has tested all types of fighters designed and made in our country. He should be proud, because his spirit of utter devotion to duty has conquered all hardships and difficulties. In the more than 300 test flights he has made, he has been in trouble seven times because of stalled engines. He thus gathered some scientific data, which were difficult to get, at the risk of his life, and made outstanding contributions to the modernization of the People's Air Force and the development of China's aviation undertakings.

Now, on the rostrum of the congress, Li Shaofei, with his Buyi-accent Mandarin, was telling the representatives about his aspirations and resolution. He said: "Flying is a profession for warriors. A test flight is a science. What a pilot needs is the spirit of fearing no dangers. In order to make the most advanced planes, I will fly at any risk."

Both at and after the congress, the representatives were joyfully talking about the glad tidings woven from ideals and wisdom.

Hundreds of treatises on modern aerial combat and air force training have been written and new tactics and new methods to conquer the enemy have been created one after another.

By boldly transforming the conventional training methods, the air units have achieved a faster speed over the past 4 years or so in training new pilots, a speed which is 3 times faster than the previous ones.

In order to guarantee the flights, the ground crews have swiftly changed the backward situation in the checking and maintenance of planes. Modern electronics and radio equipment have gradually been popularized within the air force and efficiency has been raised by 100 percent.

Thousands of scientific research and innovation achievements have been made in improving the existing equipment and testing new planes.

Explorations are being made in order to realize the ideals and to strive for a higher altitude.

Gao Ruxun, one of the best aerial shooters, whose skill in aerial firing was already outstanding long ago, has, however, taken his achievements as starting points for further progress -- striving to seize the "crown" of aerial firing in the whole army. He found that there was something not so reasonable, accurate and scientific in the experiences summed up by our predecessors and made up his mind to challenge some authoritative textbooks and the conventional firing methods which had been used for a long time. He made up his mind to blaze a new trail which had never been followed by our predecessors. He felt that he did not have enough mathematics knowledge and went to study at a university which was several hundred li away. In order to seek the best way in controlling operations, he often spent several hours at a time in the control cabin or in the practice cabin. He often concentrated on the calculation of mathematical formulas. Sometimes he even forgot his meals and then suddenly returned to the present when his wife beat his bowl, as if he was awakening from a dream.

Gao Ruxun first made three innovations in the conventional method of ground-target firing. The first time when he tried the new method, he scored excellent achievements which broke the best record in the air force at that time. He continued making explorations and created entirely new methods which were unprecedented in the history of ground-target firing. In a shooting competition held by the air force, Gao Ruxun made specially good achievements among the many outstanding shooters. The average hitting accuracy in his six shots broke the record set by the Chinese Air Force and also surpassed the best records set by some European and American advanced countries.

The modernization of the People's Air Force requires ideals, aspirations and the spirit of daring to explore. Now in the air force the study of modern science and technology has become a conscious practice of the commanders and fighters. Thousands upon thousands of cadres and fighters are studying very hard on their respective posts. Various forms of schools, such as television schools, evening schools, correspondence schools, training classes, lectures on science and technology, and so on and so forth, have sprung up like bamboo shoots after a spring rain. The cultural and scientific and technological level of the entire army has been greatly raised.

The People's Air Force is advancing forward in the course of exploration, striving for flight at a new altitude.

Please read the following material, which was printed and distributed at the congress: Once when an air force pilot visited a European country with a Chinese delegation, he tried to pilot a first-rate fighter which he had never seen before. Soon after a short preparation was made, his plane shot into the sky. Some foreign pilots were very much surprised and asked: "How many pilots who are as skillful as you are do you have in your country?" He replied: "I am only an ordinary pilot. There are many like me in our country.

Today, there are thousands upon thousands of skillful pilots in the People's Air Force, comprising more than 20 nationalities in our country. Most of them are young people. Being brought up by the party and under the care of the veterans, they are soaring to great heights in the blue sky over our motherland.

In the leading bodies at various levels in the air force, more and more young cadres have taken up command posts. They have become the backbone of the air force, and are examples in peacetime training and are capable of leading the groups to fight in wartime.

Of the first-rate pilots in the air force, 80 percent are young pilots who have completed training on difficult subjects and are the main strength of the People's Air Force.

In many airports, a slogan catches the eyes: "What have you done for the modernization of the air force?" The slogan means duties. It is out of this high sense of responsibility that the pilots of the younger generation have overcome all obstacles and are flying side by side and competing with each other in the sky.

Liu Jian, a young Tibetan pilot and the descendant of a serf, who always has his duties in mind and has strictly tempered himself, has become an outstanding pilot capable of flying in all weather. He is called "an eagle on the snowy mountain." At this congress he said with emotion: "We Tibetan pilots are representatives of our nationality. We have taken off. Our nationality has taken off."

With its fighting posture, the younger generation of the People's Air Force has made brilliant achievements for the modernization of the air force and the rejuvenation of the Chinese nation.

WAN LI STRESSES WATER, SOIL CONSERVATION

[Report by XINHUA and Central People's Broadcasting Station reporters]

[Text] Beijing, 23 Aug (XINHUA) -- The fourth national work conference on water and soil conservation ended in Beijing on 22 August after 6 and 1/2 days in session. While receiving participants in the conference, Wan Li, vice premier of the State Council, pointed out: All localities must implement the "Regulations on Water and Soil Conservation" promulgated by the State Council to the letter and resolutely stop any acts which damage water and land resources.

Comrade Wan Li said: To do a good job in water and soil conservation, it is necessary to step up propaganda and education in order to raise people's understanding and consciousness in protecting the water and land environment. Particular efforts should be made to raise leading cadres' understanding and level of scientific knowledge. They key question now is to strengthen leadership. All provinces, municipalities and autonomous regions should assign a responsible cadre to take charge of water and soil conservation, environmental protection and land management.

Comrade Wan Li called on all localities to step up investigation and study, summarize experiences and lessons and do a good job in overall planning. Particular efforts should be made in tackling problems in areas that are most harmful to the national economy and people's livelihood. Every province, municipality, autonomous region, area, country and enterprise should have its main projects in this regard, as well as every commune, production brigade and team.

Comrade Wan Li particularly stressed: Those who damage water and land resources must be punished and the responsibility of their leaders should be investigated. Examples of harnessing water and land resources should be commended and popularized.

The national work conference on water and soil conservation, sponsored by the national coordinating group for water and soil conservation, particularly discussed and studied the questions of implementing the "Regulations on Water and Soil Conservation" and soil erosion. The conference held: Water and soil conservation is the lifeblood of construction in mountainous areas, an important measure for harnessing rivers and an important content of land management. This is a major concern which has a bearing on our posterity.

To guide water and soil conservation throughout the country, the State Council established a coordinating group consisting of personnel from the State Planning Commission, the State Economic Commission, the Ministry of Water Conservancy and Power, the Ministry of Agriculture, Animal Husbandry and Fishery and the Ministry of Foresty in May of this year. At the conference, Qian Zhengying, leader of the coordinating group and minister of water conservancy and power, summarized experiences and lessons in water and soil conservation over the past 30 years. She pointed out: Problems in water and soil conservation were once tackled at scattered points, but now such problems are tackled in a comprehensive way in small river basins. Initial results have been achieved in this regard. However, under the "leftist" influence, setbacks were encountered in water and soil conservation in the past. The soil erosion problem in large areas was not solved and soil erosion caused by reclaiming land or planting grass by destroying forests occurred time and again. Therefore, it is a most urgent task at present to resolutely protect water and land resources, prevent damage to them and strictly enforce the legal system.

This conference also discussed relevant policies, laid down measures and decided to tackle problems in water and soil conservation in the following eight major areas of the country: the Wuding, Huangfu and Sanchuan Rivers in the Huang He, Gansu Province's Dingxi County, Liu He in the Liao He valley, the upper reaches of the Yongding River in the Hai He, Jiangxi Province's Xingguo County and the reservoir area of the key water control project at the Gezhouba Dam along the Chang Jiang.

YUAN BAOHUA VIEWS ENTERPRISE CONSOLIDATION

[Text] Beijing, 20 Aug (XINHUA) -- The national leading group for enterprise consolidation today held a meeting to exchange views on the situation in enterprise consolidation. In his speech at the meeting, Yuan Baohua, head of the leading group and vice chairman of the State Economic Commission, emphatically pointed out that in enterprise consolidation, attention should now be paid to grasping the key question of consolidating leading bodies.

Yuan Baohua said: New developpents have been made in enterprise consolidation since the national forum on enterprise consolidation. The current main task in this work is to consolidate enterprise leading bodies, to improve the economic responsibility system and to consolidate labor organization; and the key in this regard is to consolidate leading bodies. It is necessary to consolidate leading bodies in accordance with the requirement for cadres to be revolutionized, knowledgeable, professional and younger. Only thus will it be possible to smoothly carry out other tasks in enterprise consolidation. Consolidating leading bodies mainly means selecting and promoting educated young cadres with political consciousness and pioneering spirit to leading bodies. In handling this matter, there often are tremendous ideological and practical obstructions. However, there are also a large number of "sensible persons" among workers and staff members. The question now is that leading cadres at all levels should have a correct understanding of the consolidation of enterprise leading bodies and conscientiously implement the party's policy toward intellectuals.

At the meeting, Yuan Baohua also set three specific requirements for enterprise consolidation.

Combine work at key points with that in all areas. In enterprise consolidation, experience should first be gained in making a breakthrough at key points in order to open up a new prospect and promote this work in all areas. Enterprises are to be consolidated by stages and in groups in terms of making arrangements for work and adopting work methods by leading organs. As far as enterprises in all areas are concerned, there is no provision for a second group of enterprises to start consolidating itself only after the first group has been consolidated. All enterprises, both those at key points and those in all areas, should start consolidating themselves at the same time in light of the requirements set forth in the party Central Committee's relevant documents. Enterprises in all areas should overcome their wait-and-see mentality and keep pace with the consolidation work.

There should be a time limit for the first group of enterprises to be consolidated. We must be determined to effectively consolidate the first group of enterprises this year so that theywill achieve noticeable, better economic results. On the condition that the quality of the consolidation work is ensured, all departments and areas should redouble their efforts to carry out this task. They must not do a substandard job, turn enterprise consolidation into mere formality or be dilatory in carrying out this task.

Various departments should set concrete standards for checking and accepting consolidated enterprises as well as concrete standards for "six-good enterprises" before the end of September this year in order to create conditions for checking and accepting the first group of consolidated enterprises.

[Excerpts] Beijing, 21 Aug (SINHUA) -- A national symposium on urban sculpture planning, which ended today in Beijing, held out good prospects for our country's cities: Various artistic sculptures will appear on streets and buildings and in squares and parks in our major cities in 8 to 10 years and urban construction will blossom in radiant splendor.

The national symposium on urban scupture planning, jointly sponsored by the Ministry of Urban and Rural Construction and Environmental Protection, the Ministry of Culture and the Chinese Artists Association, was the first of its kind held since the founding of the PRC. Those attending the symposium pointed out: With the continuous development of socialist urban and rural construction, we should bring the role of artistic sculptures into full play, include artistic urban sculptures in our urban construction plans and gradually create sculptures of fairly high ideological and artistic standard. This is necessary for building socialist ethics and useful in increasing international contacts and developing tourism.

After earnest discussions the symposium decided to launch pilot projects at some selected sites in Beijing, Shanghai, Tianjin, Zhejiang, Shaanxi, Guangdong, Sichuan, Jiangsu, Anhui, Hubei, Fujian, Heilongjiang and other provinces and municipalities.

The symposium opened on 17 August and ended on 21 August after 5 days in session. Zhou Yang, Zhou Weizhi, Xie Beiyi and other leaders concerned attended and addressed the symposium.

RENMIN RIBAO ON LIAO ZHONGKAI, KMT-CPC TIEUP

[Article by Shang Mingxuan [1424 2494 6513] and Wang Xuezhuang [3769 1331 8369]: "Liao Zhongkai and the First KMT-CPC Cooperation" -- materials cited in this article are from "Works of Liao Zhongkai" published by Zhonghua Bookstore and "Biography of Liao Zhongkai" by Shang Mingxuan]

[Text] The first KMT-CPC cooperation from 1924 to 1927 vigorously promoted the development of the Chinese revolution. Because of the cooperation of the two parties, the great anti-imperialist and antifeudalist revolution, which was unprecedented in China's history, was successfully launched.

In the first KMT-CPC cooperation jointly established by Dr Sun Yat-sen and the Communist Party, Liao Zhongkai made indelibly important contributions. Liao Zhongkai, whose name was Enxu and who had the alias Yibai, was born on 23 April 1877 in San Francisco in the United States into the family of a common overseas Chinese merchant, a native of Yuiyang County, Guangdong Province. Having witnessed, since he was a child, the miserable suffering of the powerless Chinese who were bullied and humiliated by the imperialists, strong patriotic democratic thoughts emerged in his mind. Beginning in 1903, he unswervingly and loyally followed Dr Sun Yat-sen in seeking independence and liberation for the Chinese nation. He performed a great many meritorious deeds for the people in his long revolutionary career, the most brilliant chapter of which was his utter devotion to the KMT-CPC cooperation.

Capable Assistant of Dr Sun Yat-sen in Reorganizing the KMT

The realization of the first KMT-CPC cooperation was symbolized by the reorganization of the KMT. The reorganization of the KMT, with the help of the CPC, was a resolute action taken by Dr Sun Yat-sen when China entered the period of the new democratic revolution led by the proletariat. It "conformed to the trend of the times and the demands of the people." Liao Zhongkai was a major figure in this reorganization and a capable assistant of Dr Sun Yat-sen.

Liao Zhongkai suffered constant failures and pains in the struggles against both southern and northern warlords after the 1911 revolution. In the prison of the traitor Chen Jiongming, he once said with emotion that "I have been trying hard to correct the mistakes of the times and experienced great pain over the past 20 years. However, since there are monsters and obstructions everywhere in the human world, how can the people be benefited?" It was the Russian October Revolution, the May Fourth Movement and the establishment of the CPC that brought light to him in those dark and stormy days. Then, encouraged by Dr Sun Yat-sen and together with some progressive partners, Liao Zhongkai began to shift his vision to the new phenomena which emerged both in China and in the world and began to earnestly study the theories and practice of the Marxists. The letters and telegrams sent by Dr Sun Yat-sen to Lenin to discuss the Chinese and world revolution were drafted by Liao Zhongkai, Zhu Zhixin and Soong Ching Ling. Through their personal experiences and their understanding of the historical trend, they gradually realized that the activities of the KMT needed to be improved.

In August 1922 Dr Sun Yat-sen successively met with the CPC leader Li Dazhao and a representative of the Russian envoy Joffe, showing his determination to ally with Soviet Russia and cooperate with the Communist Party, and accept the proposal of reorganizing the KMT. At the same time, he invited the Communist Party members to join the KMT. On this vital occasion, Liao Zhongkai, who had just freed himself from Chen Jiongming's imprisonment and arrived in Shanghai, immediately threw himself into the preparatory work for the reorganization. During the last 10 days of September, he was sent to Japan to hold a talk with Joffe. This talk presented a sound basis for the "Sun-Joffe declaration" which was published later. In January 1923, when initial results were achieved in the preparatory work for the reorganization, Liao Zhongkai was appointed adviser in the KMT headquarters. On the 26th of that month, the "Sun-Joffe declaration" was published. On the following day, Liao Zhongkai was again sent to Japan to talk with Joffe. These two talks between Liao Zhongkai and Joffe were of great significance to the reorganization of the KMT. They discussed the concrete plan for the KMT to reorganize the party and establish a revolutionary army with the help of Soviet Russia and the CPC. They also promoted mutual understanding between the KMT and Soviet Russia.

In February 1923 Chen Jiongming's rebel forces were defeated. Dr Sun Yat-sen returned to Guangzhou, where he reassumed the post of generalissimo of the national army and navy of the Republic of China. Later, Liao Zhongkai also returned to Guangdong and assumed the important posts of the headquarters' minister of finance and governor of Guangdong Province. Faced with the threats of the imperialists and their running dogs and the southern and northern warlords, the reorganization of the KMT was stepped up. While handling important military and political affairs, Liao Zhongkai also spared no efforts to assist Dr Sun Yat-sen in the reorganization. In mid-October, Liao Zhongkai, Li Dazhao and three others were appointed reorganization committee members to make unified plans for the reorganization. On the 25th of that month, together with Tan Pingshan and others, he was appointed member of the Executive Committee of the KMT Provisional Central Committee. On behalf of Dr Sun Yat-sen, he presided over the first meeting of this Executive Committee. In November, the Executive Committee promulgated the "Manifesto of the Reorganization of the Chinese Kuomingtang" and the draft of the party program. It decided to hold the First KMT National Congress in January of the following year. The Executive Committee, which was directed by and included Liao Zhongkai, successively examined and handled more than 400 motions, and thus made sound contributions to the reorganization of the KMT. Besides, Liao Zhongkai was instructed to take charge of the reorganization in Guangzhou, so as to set an example for the reorganization in various localities.

Liao Zhongkai, who had experienced all kinds of hardships and difficulties, had a fairly clear understanding of the importance and orientation of the KMT reorganization. He repeatedly pointed out that the past failures of the KMT resulted from nothing other than its own weaknesses in the political, ideological and organizational fields, and urged the party members to follow the examples of Soviet Russia and the Communist Party and to actively carry out reorganization. He also urged the workers, peasants and students to join the KMT so that the status quo of the KMT could be changed. At that time, many veteran members of the KMT opposed the reorganization, but Liao Zhongkai said with firm conviction: "More than 10 years have passed since the founding of the Republic of China, yet Dr Sun Yat-sen's three people's principles have not been realized. This obviously has something to do with the party organization. I feel it is a pity that Dr Sun Yat-sen has not realized his principles despite fighting throughout his life. This is why I am determined to reorganize the KMT." Out of this conviction, he most firmly and vigorously assisted Dr Sun Yat-sen in the reorganization.

On 20 January 1924 the KMT convened its first national congress in Guangzhou. Dr Sun Yat-sen personally acted as chairman of the congress, and Liao Zhongkai, a representative from Guangdong Province, also joined the leadership work.

On 23 January the congress adopted the "Manifesto of the First National Congress of the Kuomintang" which was drafted under Dr Sun Yat-sen's leadership and with the participation of the communists. In this "manifesto," Dr Sun Yat-sen reinterpreted his three people's principles, pointing out that nationalism means opposing imperialism and equality between all the nationalities within the country; that the principle of the people's rights means establishing a democratic system commonly owned by the populace rather than one privately owned by a small number of people; and that the people's livelihood means economizing capital and equalization of land ownership. The reinterpreted three people's principles are revolutionary principles embodying the three cardinal policies of allying with Soviet Russia, cooperating with the Communist Party and helping the workers and peasants. Since they were basically the same as the CPC program in the democratic revolution, they were taken as a common program for the KMT-CPC cooperation. Just as Comrade Mao Zedong pointed out, the new three people's principles were "victorious and revolutionary banners" in the new upsurge of the national revolution.

Liao Zhongkai understood very well the vital importance of the new three people's principles to the reorganization of the KMT. In examining the draft of the "manifesto," he resolutely opposed erroneous ideas which attempted to abolish its revolutionary principles. When this "manifesto" was adopted, he stressed that "in the future, we must, at any rate, take this manifesto as the goal of our struggle and make a mighty advance." His practice showed that he was loyal to his oaths throughout his life.

After its first national congress, the Kuomintang became a political union of workers, peasants, the petty bourgeoisie and national bourgeoisie, with the leftwing forces composed of the communists, workers, peasants, petty bourgeoisie and progressive elements of the bourgeoisie as its nucleus. Liao Zhongkai was appointed member of the KMT Central Executive Committee and member of its Standing Committee, and was concurrently director of the workers department and the peasants department of the KMT Central Committee.

On 23 February of the same year, Liao Zhongkai was appointed acting chairman of the preparatory committee of the KMT military academy (the Whampoa Military Academy), replacing Chiang Kai-shek, who left this post without authorization. Establishing a new-type revolutionary army was an important task for the reorganization of the KMT. This had constantly been planned since Dr Sun Yat-sen and Liao Zhongkai held talks with Joffe. After his assumption of office, Liao Zhongkai actively undertook this task with the communists. On 9 May he was appointed KMT representative in the military academy. The military academy opened in June. The opening of the Whampoa Military Academy marked the fact that the reorganization of the KMT was more or less completed.

Good Friends of Communists and the Worker-Peasant Masses

After the First National Congress of the Kuomintang, the Kuomintang revolutionary movement quickly gained momentum throughout the country. The consolidation of the Guangdong revolutionary base became a dominant factor in the vigorous development of the revolutionary situation. The suppression of the revolt of groups of businessmen, the first eastern expedition and the quelling of the rebellion of Yang and Liu dealt a crushing blow to the imperialist and feudal comprador forces. In the past, Dr Sun Yat-sen had twice failed to hold his own taking Guangdong as a base in "upholding the constitution." Why was there such a sharp difference this time? The answer was very clear. The policy of three major revolutions was practiced, help was received from the Communist Party of China, the leadership strengthened its determination. The people's confidence and the armymen's morale received a boost. The revolutionary ranks were consolidated.

Liao Zhongkai set great store by the Communist Party of China and the role of the worker-peasant movement that it led in the national revolution. He sincerely and actively cooperated with the Communist Party and fervently supported the worker-peasant masses.

Liao Zhongkai was not a Communist Party member, but he firmly believed that "to overthrow imperialism, the only way is to be on friendly terms with the Communist Party." He thought that the key to the revival of the Kuomintang was for the communists to join the Kuomintang. Therefore, in his activities, he always consciously adhered to the common program of the two parties. He constantly tried to reach an agreement on major political problems with the communists. Mutual friendship developed. He supported the communists in their open activities in party, government and military organs. He also kept recommending young and capable communists for important posts, giving full scope to their abilities. He was in charge of two departments on the affairs of workers and peasants. He later entrusted department secretaries and Communist Party members Feng Qupo and Peng Bai respectively with the management of the two departments. He also let Peng Bai act as chairman of the peasants training institute under the Kuomintang Central Committee. When Zhou Enlai returned to the country from France, Liao Zhongkai personally invited him to be chairman of the political department of the Whampoa Military Academy. Liao also maintained friendly relations with Li Dazhao, Mao Zedong, Su Zhaozheng, Deng Zhongxia, Lin Boqu, Wu Yuzhang and other well-known communists. He constantly discussed major plans concerning the national revolution with them. His sincere act of cooperation and his humble attitude earned him the respect and love of the communists.

Among veteran members of the Kuomintang, Liao Zhongkai distinguished himself for his clear-cut assessment of the worker-peasant masses. He set great store by the role of workers and peasants in Chinese society and the Chinese revolution. He said: "Our country's peasants and workers account for 90 percent of the whole population. Given the 90 percent majority that these peasants and workers constitute as the core of an anti-imperialist and antimilitarist force, victory can be assured." He often stressed: "If China is to become strong, the position of peasants and workers must be enhanced." "To save the peasants and workers is to save China." Based on this understanding, he took people's attitude toward workers and peasants as a mark to distinguish between revolutionaries and counterrevolutionaries. He said: "The peasant-worker class accounts for the greatest percentage of our population. Those people who help the peasant-worker class in fighting the forces that oppress them are revolutionaries. On the other hand, those people who compromise with militarists and imperialists and who suppress peasants and workers are counterrevolutionaries." Liao Zhongkai practiced what he preached. True to his claim as a revolutinary, he took the side of the masses of workers and peasants and supported their anti-imperialist and antifeudal struggle.

Liao Zhongkai faithfully carried out the policy of "helping peasants and workers." He effectively used the strength of the regime to support the worker-peasant movement. Under his sponsorship and support, the Guangdong revolutionary government successively issued the first and second declarations on the peasant-worker movement and formulated the organizational laws for the peasants' association and the peasants' self-defense force and the organizational laws for the trade union. The publication of these documents was a move unprecedented in the history of the Chinese worker-peasant movement. They represented China's first government decrees that protected the peasants' association and advocated peasants' self-defense and also China's first government laws that recognized the workers' freedom to organize trade unions and the freedom of speech, of publication and to strike. The publication of these laws provided extremely favorable conditions for the development of the worker-peasant movement.

The formulation of the above laws reflected Liao Zhongkai's outstanding view of the worker-peasant movement. He set store by the political nature of the worker-peasant movement and stressed the interrelationship between worker-peasant intersts and the anti-imperialist and antifeudal revolution. He stressed that workers and peasants should get organized and establish peasants' associations and trade unions, so that they could protect their own interests from encroachment and dedicate their lives to the revolution. Moreover, he called for the establishment of the workers' and peasants' own armed forces -- the worker regiment and the peasant regiment. He regarded the workers' and peasants' armed forces as a force that the revolutionary government had to rely upon to fight imperialism, landlords, compradors and militarists. He personally arranged for government personnel to acquire guns and arm the workers and peasants. Without a relatively adequate understanding of the workers and the peasants and without great drive, a revolutionary definitely would not have dared take these measures.

Liao Zhongkai also constantly went among the worker-peasant masses publicizing the idea of revolution and calling on the workers and peasants to get organized. He continuously went to basic-level worker-peasant congresses, schools and public organizations to make speeches. Sometimes, he visited workers' and peasants' homes. At a worker-peasant congress in Dahuangpu, Xiangshan (now Zhongshan) County, he pointed out: The peasants' association was a life buoy for you peasants. "It is not the Guanyin goddess but the peasants' association that can lift you out of your plight; each one of you must strive to get organized and establish a peasants' association." Through his contact with workers and peasants, he had a deeper understanding of workers and peasants and Chinese society. Liao Zhongkai not only set a personal example, but also taught his subordinates to seriously "help peasants and workers." He imposed severe punishment on those officials who disrupted the worker-peasant movement.

The reactionary forces in the Guangdong region were extremely fearful of the development of the worker-peasant movement. They tried by every means to launch a counterattack. Where there was a conflict between the worker masses and imperialism and comprador forces and between peasants and local tyrants, evil gentry and corrupt officials, Liao Zhongkai always resolutely sided with the workers and peasants, waging a struggle against the reactionary forces. In May 1924 a business group of Jiangmen led by reactionary capitalists encircled a trade union, killing and wounding workers. Liao Zhongkai was filled with indignation on learning the news. In his capacity as chairman of the Guangzhou Municipal Worker's Congress, Liao Zhongkai sent a cable of condemnation demanding severe punishment for the ringleaders. In November the same year, the landlords of Guangning County resisted the rent-reduction movement launched by the peasants, encircling the peasants' association with armed forces and massacring the peasants. Liao Zhongkai dispatched a company of armored troops from the great marshal's headquarters and other troops which finally brought the landlords' armed revolt under control. On one occasion, a relative of his committed the crime of murdering a leader of the peasants' association of the first district in the suburbs of Guangzhou. On hearing of the news, Liao Zhongkai immediately took steps through the government to have him arrested. His relative begged for mercy, but he firmly refused to compromise.

Of course, as a bourgeois revolutionary, Liao Zhongkai showed defects in his understanding of workers and peasants and in his related activities. But it should also be noted that his many words and deeds had a smashing impact on the limitations of this class. It should be said that Liao Zhongkai was actually one of the main leaders of the worker-peasant movement of Guangdong at that time.

In sum, in the first cooperation between the Kuomintang and the Communist Party, Liao Zhongkai was a model of sincere cooperation with the communists and a model of wholehearted support for the worker-peasant movement. In the initial stage of KMT-CPC cooperation, the communists' ability to do their work smoothly in Guangdong and the vigorous growth of the worker-peasant movement were inseparable from Liao Zhongkai's support and help. That Liao Zhongkai dared to firmly fight imperialism, the comprador bourgeoisie and feudal forces was due to the strength he derived from the communists and the worker-peasant masses.

He Resolutely Opposed the Sabotage of KMT-CPC Cooperation by the Rightists

From the day the preliminary informal discussion of KMT-CPC cooperation began, it encountered resistance and opposition from the rightists in the Kuomintang. Therefore, the entire process of KMT-CPC cooperation was fraught with the struggle of the leftists and rightists.

The rightists in the Kuomintang were the political representatives of the comprador bourgeoisie and landlords. They opposed cooperation with the Communist Party and particularly the participation of Communists in the Kuomintang. This kind of clamor which set the KMT against the CPC was in fact opposing the revolutionization of the Kuomintang and the national revolution.

Liao Zhongkai firmly opposed the anticommunist activities of the rightists. He staunchly upheld the three great policies of cooperating with the Russians, cooperating with the Communists and supporting the peasants and workers, upheld unity between the KMT and the CPC and upheld the revolutionary orientation of the Kuomintang. Along with the change in the situation of struggle between the leftists and rightists, he increasingly took to the forefront of the struggle.

After Dr Sun Yat-sen announced his intention to reorganize the KMT and invited the participation of the Communists, such KMT elders as Hu Hanmin, Wang Jingwei, Zhang Ji and Feng Ziyu all adopted the attitude of not altogether approving. Such people as Wang Jingwei and Dai Jitao even secretly attacked Dr Sun Yat-sen's policy and the Communist Party. Liao Zhongkai regarded their rightist words and actions with contempt. He was not in any way shaken by them but used even more practical actions to clearly distinguish himself from them.

At that time, because of Dr Sun Yat-sen's lofty prestige and because the significance of the reorganization had not yet fully emerged, there was temporarily no great disturbance. However, about the time of the holding of the national congress, the struggle between the leftists and rightists suddenly intensified. In November 1923, when the "Declaration on the Reorganization of the Chinese Kuomintang" was published, such people as Deng Ze wrote to Dr Sun Yat-sen opposing cooperation with the Communists and sounded the signal for attack. By the time the congress was held, the entire process was filled with overt, covert, direct and indirect struggle between the leftists and rightists. This kind of condition alarmed Liao Zhongkai. On 28 January 1924 the congress examined the "Chinese Kuomintang draft constitution." Some of the delegates, under the instigation of rightists Feng Ziyu and Ma Su, moved the discussion of the motion of restricting KMT members from joining other parties. This in fact was to oppose the Communists joining the Kuomintang. In light of the devious motive of the rightists to drive a wedge between the KMT and the CPC, delegate Li Dazhao who was attending the meeting made a speech in the capacity of a Communist who had joined the Kuomintang. He announced the revolutionary aim of the Communists in joining the Kuomintang and sternly criticized this motion. However, the rightists still would not stop quibbling. Faced with this kind of situation, Liao Zhongkai stepped forward bravely and made a clear-cut statement. He sternly repudiated the fallacy of the rightists, completely agreed with Li Dazhao's statement and actively advocated cooperating with the Communists. He sternly said out of a sense of justice: "In the first place we would like to ask what kind of a party is our party. Is it or is it not a national party? In the second place we would like to ask whether or not our party has a principle and whether or not it wants revolution? If we have sincere belief in our principle and the revolution can be thorough, then there will be no problem whatsoever." He also further stressed: "Their participation this time will give our party new life. If you gentlemen do not approve, please close your eyes and think quietly. What is their motive? They are also not trying to tie us down, but to work with us for the national revolution." As a result of the firm struggle of Liao Zhongkai and the Communists and the active support of Dr Sun Yat-sen, the congress was ultimately successful.

After the congress, the rightists still continued to make trouble. Dr Sun Yat-sen took resolute action and expelled such people as Feng Ziyu, Ma Su and Xie Chi from the party. Only then did the struggle stop. Soon afterwards, the rightists adopted the method of making an open split to undermine the KMT-CPC cooperation. Feng Ziyu and Ma Su brazenly collaborated with the warlords in the north and the south. Shang Tuan rose in rebellion. Chen Jiongming flaunted his army and Liu Zhenhuan staged an armed rebellion. They all collaborated with the rightists or cooperated with each other from afar. After the death of Dr Sun Yat-sen in March 1925, small rightist organizations took advantage of the opportunity to rise in droves and displayed such signboards as "KMT comrades' club," "comrades of the revolution of 1911 club" and "Sun Yat-sen doctrine society." In the light of this kind of situation, Liao Zhongkai published an article in May entitled "Revolutionaries and Counterrevolutionaries" attacking the sinister actions of the rightists in sabotaging the revolution. The "counterrevolutionaries" referred to in the article were the KMT rightists. Liao Zhongkai used this formulation of "counterrevolutionaries" to explain his belief that a change had already taken place in the character of the struggle against the rightists. He pointed out that in semicolonial China, the struggle between the revolutionaries and counterrevolutionaries inside the KMT was inevitable, because the imperialists and the reactionary forces in the country would certainly collaborate to split the revolutionary party in an attempt to overthrow the revolutionaries. He exposed the counterrevolutionary features of those rightists who were self-styled "moderates" and "old revolutionaries" so that they could no longer deceive the masses. He pointed out that the people should not be afraid of the appearance of counterrevolutionaries and asked the people "to recognize what are revolutionary or counterrevolutionary actions and give the revolutionaries a chance to unite." He called on the masses to struggle against the rightists to the end. "We not only want to make revolution against the warlords and imperialists, but we also want to make revolution against the 'counterrevolutionaries.' Only this can be considered thoroughgoing revolutionary work." This article was a call to arms to the KMT leftists to carry on the behests of Dr Sun Yat-sen and to carry the national revolution to the end. It glowed with the thoroughgoing spirit of revolutionary democracy and showed that his understanding had already been greatly enhanced and his fighting will had become firmer in the struggle against the rightists.

Naturally, the ranks of rightists were also very complicated. Such people as Wang Jingwei and Chiang Kai-shek were wearing the masks of leftists to deceive the people and had still to be spotted by others. Among the rightists appearing in public, some of them still enjoyed a certain amount of influence in society because of their former merits and achievements. As they were of different factions and cliques, contradictions also existed between them and the northern warlords. Liao Zhongkai also carried out thoroughgoing and effective work among these people. He made use of historical origins and his prestige and political experience to win them over and divide them. This enabled some of the contradictions to be mitigated and some of the struggle to be postponed for the time being, and he was able to steer past many hidden rocks. The unique work carried out by Liao Zhongkai in the struggle against the rightists could not have been done by anyone else in place of him.

In the summer of 1925, an excellent revolutionary situation appeared in Guangzhou. The Guangzhou-Hong Kong general strike, the like of which had never been seen in the world, broke out in June. This great anti-imperialist struggle heartened the people of the whole country. The national government was set up in July and the power of the rightists was weakened. Liao Zhongkai became a committee member of the national government and concurrently the minister of finance and a member of the Standing Committee of the Military Affairs Commission. Besides that, he was also a party representative of the KMT Army. Liao Zhongkai became the leftist core after the death of Dr Sun Yat-sen and the mainstay of the revolutionary regime.

It was at that time that an even more serious struggle began. A group of rightists holding actual power in the KMT and the government headed by Hu Hanmou, Deng Zeru and Zou Lu conspired to carry out a purge. They sent people to call a meeting of rightists in Guangzhou in an attempt to convene a fourth plenary session and remove Liao Zhongkai and the communists from their leading posts. This conspiracy was quickly discovered and resisted. The rightists felt that Liao Zhongkai was the greatest obstacle to their usurping of political power and breaking up the KMT-CPC cooperation and they decided to resort to violent treachery. Liao Zhongkai constantly heard news that the enemy would use despicable means, but he was not perturbed. He continued to work with the Communists in leading the masses to deal with the complicated situation of the political struggle. On 20 April 1925, when Liao Zhongkai was on his way to attend a meeting of the KMT Central Executive Committee, was assassinated by thugs kept by the rightists in front of the party Central Committee building. He was unable to carry the struggle against the rightists to the end, but his blood roused the furious indignation of the revolutionary people against the rightists and caused the people to use more resolute and decisive action to smash the anticommunist conspiracy of the rightists.

The above summary fully explains how Liao Zhongkai was a banner of the KMT leftists during the first KMT-CPC cooperation. He was faithful to the three people's principles of Dr Sun Yat-Sen, to the three great policies of cooperating with the Russians, cooperating with the Communists and supporting the peasants and workers, and to the national revolution. He sincerely cooperated with the Commuhists and resolutely supported the worker-peasant movement, but waged an uncompromising struggle against imperialism and all reactionary forces. Although Liao Zhongkai's life of revolutionary struggle was terminated too soon by the sinister bullet, he had used his own thoughts and actions to establish the great image of a mighty patriot and radical revolutionary of democracy for the people, and he will always be respected and remembered by the people.

WRONGED GUANGDONG INTELLECTUALS PLAY LEADING ROLE

[Excerpts] Guangzhou, 19 Aug (XINHUA) -- A number of intellectuals who formerly were wrongly designated as rightists in Guangdong Province have now become the professional backbone of scientific research units, schools, government organizations, enterprises and so forth, and are working hard for the motherland's four modernizations.

Since the 3d Plenary Session of the 11th CPC Central Committee, party organizations at various levels in Guangdong Province have seriously implemented policy for comrades wrongly designated as rightists and reached conclusions, based on facts, on their records one by one. The party organizations at various levels have corrected their prejudices against the intellectuals in thinking and understanding, politically cared for and helped them, made reasonable arrangements for them in work and taken proper care of them in livelihood. The intellectuals are treated equally with other comrades in regard to party policies on joining the party, job titles and promotions, going abroad to pursue studies or for observation and so forth. Jiang Xinmei, deputy chief of the first section of the foreign affairs department of Zhongshan University, applied for admission to the party as early as the 1950's. Last year he was admitted to the CPC. Of the 11 comrades at the Guangdong Provincial Institute of Agricultural Science who were wrongly designated as rightists, 9 have been promoted to assistant researchers or associate researchers.

Party organizations at various levels in Guangdong have given play to these comrades' professional specialties and promoted them to leading positions at various levels without the slightest hesitation, provided they meet the requirements. Of 13 scientific research personnel at the research institutes under the Guangzhou branch of the Chinese Academy of Sciences and the Guangdong Provincial College of Science who were wrongly designated as rightists and have had the wrong designations removed, 7 have been promoted to research institute directors and chiefs and deputy chiefs of research offices in the past few years. Professor Luo Kaifu, geographer at the Geographic Research Institute who was wrongly designated as a rightist, became director of the institute shortly after his wrong designation was corrected. He said: "As long as I live, I shall continue to dedicate myself to geographic studies for the motherland."

INCREASE IN GUANGXI TEXTILE PRODUCTION REPORTED

HK250609 Nanning Guangxi Regional Service in Mandarin 1130 GMT 23 Aug 82

[Text] Since the 3d Plenary Session of the 11th CPC Central Committee, the textile industry of the region has developed rapidly. In 1981 the total output value of the textile industry increased by 150 percent compared with 1978. From 1979 to 1981, the average output value registered an increase of 36.3 percent annually. In the past 3 years, it has accumulated a total amount of 440 million yuan for the state, or 297 percent of the amount invested by the state in the same period. The taxes and profits handed over to the state have accounted for a greater percentage in regional revenue and increased annually. In the past few years, the region has conscientiously implemented and carried out the national economic readjustment policy and vigorously developed light and textile industry. As a result, the production and construction of the textile industry are forging rapidly ahead. At the end of 1981, the region possessed 250,000 spindles and a great number of looms for weaving cloth and gunny sacks, big knitting machines and spinning and weaving machines. The printing and dyeing capacity is 800,000 meters. Nanning, Liuzhou and Guilin cities have become textile bases on an initial scale. While developing the textile industry, based on the local natural resources, the region has actively developed the production of jute and ramie textiles, and at the same time exploited the production of chemical fiber. Many products are good in quality and output has increased rapidly. Making use of the local ramie, the Nanning textile factory produces blended castor cloth of 100 deniers and strong ramie thread, which is smooth and comfortable for clothing. Last year, for making products of high quality and famous brands, this material was awarded a silver medal.

In the production of chemical fiber, the newly built Quangxi vinylon plant with a production capacity of 10,000 tons went into operation this year. The Nanning synthetic fiber plant built in the early 1970's has raised its production capacity to 1,500 tons in the past 2 years. Since the 3d Plenary Session of the 11th CPC Central Committee and with the care and support of the departments concerned at high level, the region has attached great importance to increasing production of textiles specially demanded by the minority nationalities. Equipment has been technologically transformed in the Tianyang dyeing and weaving factory, Jingxi cotton mill and Yulin towel factory which produce commodities specially needed by the nationalites. As a result, the production capacity was raised and the production of traditional textiles demanded by the nationalities was resumed. The number of textiles such as bleached cloth, national scarfs and big and medium-sized cotton blankets well received by the national minorities was increased. With the change of textile material mix, the proportion of chemical fiber material which is to be used will increase annually. In order to balance the capacity between the chemical fiber printing and dyeing, and spinning and weaving processing, especially as the processing work for printing and dyeing chemical fiber textiles has lagged behind, in the past 2 years the region has increased the chemical fiber printing and dyeing capacity of the Liuzhou printing and dyeing factory, the Nanning and Guilin silk weaving factories and the Nanning printing and dyeing factory to 50 million meters. This year, a certain number of key capital construction projects such as a cotton and a gunny textile plant will be built. These plants will play an active role in increasing textile varieties, improving the quality and augmenting production when they go into operation.

HK241500 Zhengzhou Henan Provincial Service in Mandarin 1100 GMT 23 Aug 82

[Summary] The Fifth Session of the Fifth Henan Provincial People's Congress held a plenary meeting this morning to listen to the work reports made by the provincial people's congress standing committee, the provincial higher people's court and the provincial people's procuratorate. Zhao Wenfu, executive chairman of the presidium, presided over the meeting. Entrusted by the provincial people's congress standing committee, Chen Bingzhi, provincial people's congress standing committee vice chairman, made a report on the work of the standing committee.

In his report, Chen Bingzhi said that since the fourth session of the fifth provincial people's congress, under the leadership of the CPC Central Committee, the State Council and the provincial CPC committee, the provincial people's congress standing committee has seriously implemented the 10 principles of economic construction and the resolutions passed at the fourth session of the fifth provincial people's congress. It has done a great deal of work in strengthening socialist democracy and the legal system and in promoting socialist material and spiritual civilization in our province.

In his report, Chen Bingzhi enumerated the important issues which were discussed and decided upon by the provincial people's congress standing committee in the last 8 months. He said that since the promulgation of the draft of the revised constitution of the PRC, in accordance with the spirit of the resolutions of the NPC Standing Committee the provincial people's congress standing committee formulated a resolution on conducting a serious discussion of the draft of the revised constitution among the people throughout the province and on raising enthusiasm to study and discuss the draft of the revised constitution throughout the province. By 10 August the whole province had put forth 2,170 views and suggestions, which had been gathered and submitted to the committee for the revision of the constitution of PRC.

Chen Bingzhi said that in the first half of this year, in accordance with the needs of political and economic development in our province, the provincial people's congress standing committee formulated the provincial regulations on the management of the water conservation projects, the management of the Huang He projects in Henan Province and the management of the land used for housing in villages and townships in Henan Province.

The provincial people's congress standing committee listened to the work reports made by the provincial people's government and relevant departments and examined and approved the reports on the plan for economic and social development in the province in 1982, on the 1981 provincial financial statement, on the 1982 provincial budget and on the work of making preparations for the 1982 provincial scientific and technological year.

Chen Bingzhi pointed out: "Since the beginning of this year, the provincial people's congress standing committee has strengthened its ties with people's delegates and the people's congress standing committees at all levels of localities. The provincial people's congress standing committee has sent its standing committee members and delegates to all places to conduct inspection and work. All prefectures have assigned a principal leading comrade to be responsible for keeping in contact with the people's congress standing committees in the counties and municipalities. These prefectures have also set up a 'people's congress liaison department' to promptly communicate information and help county and municipal people's congress standing committees solve problems encountered in their work. The provincial people's congress standing committee has seriously carried out the motions put forth by the fourth session of the fifth provincial people's congress and has handled some 1,300 letters and visits from people."

Regarding the future work of the provincial people's congress standing committee, Chen Bingzhi pointed out: "In the future, we must further strengthen legislative work of localities, particularly economic legislative work, strengthen the supervision of the government, the courts and the procuratorates and strengthen inspecting the enforcement of the state laws and local regulations. We must continue to strengthen ties with the delegates and people's congress standing committees at all levels of localities. We must strengthen conducting investigation and study and constantly improve our work."

In his work report, Chen Bingzhi demanded that all delegates learn from Zhao Chune's revolutionary spirit and greet the holding of the 12th party congress with the practical action in building socialist material and spiritual civilization.

At this morning's plenary meeting, Ding Shi, president of the provincial higher people's court, and Li Fuxiang, chief procurator of the provincial people's procuratorate, made work reports on behalf of the provincial higher people's court and the provincial people's procuratorate respectively. Executive chairmen of the presidium attending the plenary session were Liu Jie, Zhang Shude, Yu Yichuan, Hu Shangli, Song Yuxi, (Guo Tan), Zhang Shixia), Shao Wenjie, Ye Renshou, Li Fudu, (Hao Huhong), (Fan Lian) and Guo Peijun. Members of the provincial CPPCC committee who are attending the fifth session of the fourth provincial CPPCC committee also attended today's plenary meeting as nonvoting delegates. Other nonvoting delegates also attending this plenary meeting includes leading comrades of the provincial CPC committee, the provincial government and the provincial military district, and responsible comrades of units at the provincial level and of some counties and municipalities.

Beginning this afternoon, the delegates examined and discussed in groups the three work reports mentioned above.

In his work report, Ding Shi, president of the provincial higher people's court, pointed out: "Since the fourth session of the fifth provincial people's congress, under the leadership of the provincial CPC committee and CPC committees at all levels and in compliance with the instruction of the central authorities on political and legal work, people's courts at all levels in our province have emphasized the central work of serving the four modernizations and have used the weapon of the law to resolutely strike blows at the serious criminal activities in the economic sphere. In accordance with the law, they have punished criminals and handled a large number of disputes among the people. They have accomplished even better their tasks with which the state has charged the state judicial organs." Ding Shi said that in the first half of this year, the whole province accepted and heard 789 cases involving all kinds of economic crimes and completed 565 of the 789 cases which involved 862 people, recovering some 750,000 yuan for the state.

In the first half of this year, the whole province accepted and heard 31,727 civil cases and completed 19,216 of those cases. In the same period, the province also accepted and heard 2,422 economic disputes and completed 1,509 of those economic disputes.

In his work report, Li Fuxiang, chief procurator of the provincial people's procuratorate, said: "Procuratorates at all levels have used the weapon of the law to vigorously wage the struggle against the serious crimes in the economic sphere and to strike severe blows at the criminal activities. They have developed and consolidated the achievements in tidying up social order." Li Fuxiang pointed out: "Judging from the situation of the current cases, the criminal activities in the economic sphere in our province are very serious. What particularly merits attention is that since the remnants of Lin Biao and the gang of four collapsed politically, they have taken the opportunity to carry out the activities of committing economic crimes." Li Fuxiang said that since the beginning of this year, procuratorial organs at all levels have seriously implemented the decision of the CPC Central Committee and the State Council on striking blows at the serious criminal activities in the economic sphere and the decision of the NPC Standing Committee on severely punishing the criminals who seriously sabotage the economy. The number of criminal cases in the first half of this year was 28.4 percent less than in the second half of last year and 17 percent less than in the first half of last year.

The presidium of the fifth session of the fifth provincial people's congress held its second meeting this afternoon. Chen Bingzhi, executive chairman of the presidium and secretary general of the session, reported on the discussion of the government work report at the plenary meeting. In the course of discussing and examining the government report, the delegates unanimously expressed their agreement. They also put forth some constructive suggestions on the issues of the economic returns of industry, production, relief work, commodity prices, finance and education. In accorance with the views of the delegates, after discussion, the second meeting of the presidium unanimously passed the draft of the resolution on the government work report. The meeting also discussed and passed the resolutions on the draft of the namelist of additional vice chairmen of the provincial people's congress standing committee, on the draft of the namelist of the chief procurators of some procuratorial branches and on the draft of the regulations on the election of the fifth session of the fifth provincial people's congress. BRIEFS

GUANGXI FOREIGN TRADE DEVELOPS -- Since the 3d Plenary Session of the 11th CPC Central Committee, foreign trade in the Guangxi region has quickly developed. SICHUAN HOLDS MEETING TO DISCUSS FLOOD RELIEF

HK260619 Chengdu Sichuan Provincial Service in Mandarin 0030 GMT 26 Aug 82

[Summary] The Sichuan Provincial CPC Committee and Government held a telephone conference on 25 August on flood-fighting and relief work. The meeting demanded that the disaster areas further implement the spirit of the seventh plenary session on the basis of the successes already scored, rely on their own efforts and carry out self-salvation through production and win complete victory in the struggle against natural disaster. Provincial CPC committee Secretary He Haoju presided at the meeting. Deputy Secretary Yang Xizong and Vice Governor Liu Haiquan spoke.

Liu Haiquan said: "Wanxian, Daxian, Fuling, Nanchong, Neijiang, Mianyang, Leshan, Wenjiang, and Yibin Prefectures and Chengdu Municipality have been hit by natural disaster since July. Wanxian, Daxian and Fuling Prefectures have been seriously hit. Viewing the province as a whole, although the stricken area is not as large as last year, the damage in some counties in eastern Sichuan is even worse than in last year's most severely stricken areas in terms of degree of calamity and damage done by floods. Since the calamity, the Central Committee and State Council and the provincial CPC committee and government have been very concerned for the people in disaster areas. The party committees and governments in the disaster areas have been severely tested and have done a lot of work in the struggle to organize flood-fighting and relief work and launch self-salvation through production. As a result of more than 1 month of hard work, notable success has been scored in relief work. Initial arrangements have been made for the livelihood of severely stricken households. Work has started on repairing or rebuilding wrecked houses. Most of the 750 industrial and communications enterprises that had to halt production because of the disaster have resumed work. Roads have been reopened to light traffic, and commercial business has been restored. Most of the afflicted schools are able to reopen on time. Tending of many of the disaster-hit crops has been strengthened, and extra late autumn crops have been sown. In the disaster areas, people's minds are at ease, prices are stable, social order is normal and the situation is gradually changing for the better."

Liu Haiquan pointed out: "Although notable success has been scored in the struggle against disaster, the tasks facing us remain very arduous and heavy. We must further clarify the guiding ideology. The disaster areas must seriously implement the spirit of the 7th plenary session of the 11th Central Committee and uphold the principle of relying on their own efforts, self-salvation through production, arduous struggle, and rebuilding of homes. Unaffected areas must do everything possible to achieve a big production increase, and areas lightly affected must increase production. Severely stricken areas must do everything possible to reduce losses to the minimum and ensure a big increase next year. The industry and communications and financial and trade systems must restore production as quickly as possible, work hard through the fourth quarter and recoup the disaster losses. They must strive to fulfill their plans for the year.

"While working hard to restore production, it is necessary to hurry to repair houses and make proper arrangements for the people's livelihood in the disaster areas."

In order to accomplish these tasks, the provincial CPC committee and government made the following demands: 1) strengthen leadership over relief work; 2) do a good job in ideological and political work for the cadres and masses; 3) while resettling the masses in the diaster areas, it is necessary to shift the focus of relief work to promoting self-salvation through production; 4) actively solve the food, clothing and housing difficulties of people in the disaster areas; 5) departments should as far as possible allocate some materials and capital to help the people in disaster areas rebuild their homes and restore production.

Comrade Yang Xizong spoke on current autumn farmwork. Comrade He Haoju spoke in conclusion. He called for vigorous efforts to greet the 12th party congress.

Activities in Lhasa

HK250909 Lhasa Xizang Regional Service in Mandarin 0000 GMT 24 Aug 82

[Text] Bainqen Erdini Qoigyi Gyaincain, vice chairman of the NPC Standing Committee and honorary president of the Buddhist Association of China, recently continued his inspection tour in Lhasa, accompanied by (Xie Xihua), responsible person of the State Nationalities Affairs Commission; Chen Jinbgo, vice chairman of the Standing Committee of the Xizang Autonomous Regional People's Congress; and Pagbalha Geleg Namgya, vice chairman of the regional people's government. On the afternoon of 17 August and the morning of 18 August, Vice Chairman Bainqen Erdini attended respectively the forum held among patriotic personages of the region and Lhasa Municipality and the forum of government cadres, hearing reports on the affairs of agriculture, husbandry, communications, culture, education, sanitation, literature and art, women, religion and united front work of the autonomous region. At the forums, all agreed on the view that since the party's third plenary session, particularly since the implementation of the important instructions on the work in Xizang by the central authorities, a series of tasks have been completed with marked results in bringing order out of chaos on different fronts of the region under the leadership of the regional CPC committee. In particular, the rapid development in agriculture and animal husbandry and noticeable improvement in the livelihood of peasants and herdsmen have further shown that the political and economic situation in our region is continuously improving and the prospects are promising.

On hearing the report made by government cadres, Bainqen Erdini said with gladness: What you have all said is identical with what I have witnessed and heard in various places. Over the past 2 years, great changes have really taken place with remarkable results in various fields of Xizang. In particular, the masses love the CPC and the socialist system more than before as a result of the improvement of their living standard. Political stability and unity prevail everywhere in the region. This fully proves that the guidelines and policies of the party Central Committee concerning the work in Xizang are correct and are beneficial for the people. In the future we must continue to implement them with unremitting efforts and unceasingly study the new situation to solve new problems in order to attain the goal of striving for a small change in 3 years, a medium change in 5 years and a great change in 10 years.

At the forum of patriotic personages, Vice Chairman Bainqen Erdini said: Under the party leadership, our patriotic personages have done a lot and made good contributions to the revolution and construction of Xizang. This merits our admiration. The party and the people will also never forget it.

But none of you should be satisfied with the successes you have achieved. You should bestir yourselves with revolutionary spirit and do what you can to safeguard reunification of the motherland and cement the unity of all nationalities so as to make new contributions to building a new rich, unified and civilized Xizang.

On the afternoon of 19 August Vice Chairman Bainqen Erdini paid an inspection visit to the Xizang teachers college. After hearing reports made to him by responsible persons on the teaching work since the establishment of the college 7 years ago, he also went to classrooms, dormitories and dining halls to see students' study and live. After that, Vice Chairman Bainqen Erdini addressed all teachers and students of the college. In his speech, he said: The Xizang teachers college and Xizang university, which is still under preparation, are institutions of high learning in the region. We must turn them into the biggest teaching and scientific research centers of the whole region. In teaching work, there must be subjects in the Zang language. The key tasks for scientific research must be to give assistance to departments concerned in sorting out and studying materials concerning the history and culture of the people of Xizang. Efforts must also be made in exploring how to promote new socialist culture for the people of Xizang and heightening their level of science and culture so as to work for building a high degree of spiritual civilization.

Vice Chairman Bainqen Erdini continued in his speech: Due to lack of common knowledge of natural sciences, the broad masses of the Xizang people are still bound by the trammels of various feudal superstitious beliefs. This has become an obstacle to developing production and remaking nature. The institutions of higher education in Xizang should also be turned into bases for spreading education in science or imparting rudimentary knowledge of science among the people. Speaking of strengthening political and ideological education in schools, Vice Chairman Bainqen Erdini pointed out: All schools including universities and colleges in Xizang must, over a long period of time, carry out education in patriotism, policies toward nationalities and religions and the unity of all nationalities. Only by so doing will students be able to know not only the history of their own nation but also the history of their motherland, and will they be able to know the history of the relations between all nationalities, especially between the Han nationality and the Zang nationality. Thus they will foster the patriotic idea that the interests of their motherland are above all and will cultivate the strong conviction that the people of Xizang can only grow and flourish within the socialist big community. Thereby, students will also be able to have an ideal of dedicating themselves to the building of a pwoerful motherland with highly developed democracy and civilization.

In continuing his inspection tour in Lhasa, Vice Chairman Bainqen Erdini joined the masses in (Luobujialin) park for a happy get-together. He also went once again to (Dazhao) temple and (Sala) temple to pay religious homage and explain Buddhist scripture.

LIAONING COMMENTS ON CPC MEMBER ECONOMIC CRIMES

SK240959 Shenyang Liaoning Provincial Service in Mandarin 1100 GMT 23 Aug 82

[Station commentary: "Communists Should Firmly Remember the Aim of Serving the People"]

[Text] Some communists and enterprise principal leading cadres, including (Duan Dequan), violated the law in the economic sphere, in disregard of party discipline, state law and the benefits of the people, and damaged the party's reputation among the masses.

It is natural that they be punished in accordance with party discipline. People like them, though very few in our party, have brought us serious harm. They not only have caused serious economic losses to the state, but have also corroded the party's organization and cadres' ranks, poisoned the ideology of the people and polluted the social mood. Our party discipline forbids such acts.

(Duan Dequan) and others are senior party members of 20 or 30 years' standing. For a long time they slackened their efforts to remold their world outlook, forgot all their pledges made when joining the party and forgot the aim of serving the people wholeheartedly and the lofty ideals of fighting all their lives for the cause of communism. Their desires for an easy life became desires for comfort, their gains of small advantages led them to dream of a fortune, and their acceptance of bribes led them to betray the interests of the state and the party. They finally fell captive to the capitalist decadent ideology and committed crimes.

We should draw lessons from these negative examples to enhance our immunity against economic crimes. We should make strict demands on ourselves all the time in line with the requirements for party members, firmly bear in mind the party's aim of serving the people wholeheartedly and the lofty ideals of realizing communism, remold the world outlook on our own and uphold communist purity so as to be qualified communist.

LIAONING PROMOTES INTELLECTUALS TO LEADING POSTS

OW201323 Beijing XINHUA Domestic Service in Chinese 0013 GMT 17 Aug 82

About one-third of the large and medium-sized industrial and mining enterprises and half of the scientific research units in the province have selected and promoted intellectuals to important leading posts. After taking the leading posts, they have strengthened enterprise management with a scientific approach and straightened out some of the enterprises whose management was chaotic. Some units which had suffered losses have begun to show profits.

In the past, the production departments and the scientific research departments in Shanyang Municipality all went their own way. The issue of not coordinating with each other has existed for a long time. Only after the municipal CPC committee promoted senior engineer Li Tieying to secretary of the city's CPC committee and engineer Zhang Rongmao became vice mayor of the municipal government was the policy of making science and technology serve industrial and agricultural production and social development implemented on a solid basis.

With the close coordination between the production departments and the scientific research departments, and all channels of command unimpeded, Shenyang has witnessed a steady increase in industrial production since the beginning of this year. The economic results have been remarkably improved. The profits made by industrial enterprises in the city and turned over to the government during the first seven months this year rose by 13.6 percent as compared with those in the corresponding period in 1981.

GANSU COURT PUNISHES CADRES FOR ECONOMIC CRIMES

SK230134 Lanzhou Gansu Provincial Service in Mandarin 1125 GMT 22 Aug 82

[Text] On 27 April this year our station reported that (Li Guangzhong), former director of the Tianshui prefectural commercial bureau and secretary of its leading party group, had been arrested in accordance with the law on charges of speculation and profiteering. Yesterday the Tianshui prefectural intermediate people's court held an open trial for criminal (Li Guangzhong) and (Yang Shouzhi), another criminal involved in this case. In light of the offenses, the nature of the offenses and the criminals' attitude in admitting their guilt, the court sentenced (Li Guangzhong) to 5 years in jail and (Yang Shouzhi) to 1 year on charges of speculation.

(Li Guangzhong) abused his position and power to collude with (Yang Shouzhi), a commune member in Chengguan township, Gangu County. They fraudulently purchased commodities in short supply from state-owned commercial shops and sold them at a profit, reaping an illegal income for themselves and wrecking the socialist economy. From June 1980 to December 1981, (Li Guangzhong) on 24 occasions supplied to (Yang Shouzhi) certificates and letters authorizing him to purchase 44 sewing machines and 47 bicycles. With these certificates, (Yang Shouzhi) purchased at the state list prices 43 Shanghai-produced sewing machines and 47 brand-name bicycles. Except for one sewing machine he kept for himself and two bicycles he passed on to others at the original prices, he sold all the sewing machines and bicycles at prices ranging from 270 to 320 yuan and from 220 to 225 yuan, reaping a windfall of 7,931.3 yuan. He shared the ill-gotten gains with (Li Guangzhong) on 15 occasions, giving him 3,970 yuan.

At the open trial, criminal (Yang Shouzhi) admitted his guilt. Criminal (Li Guangzhong) refused to confess his crime.

Radio Urges Punishment

SK230437 Lanzhou Gansu Provincial Service in Mandarin 1125 GMT 22 Aug 82

[Station commentary: "Criminals Who Disrupt the Economy to a Serious Degree Must Be Dealt With in Accordance With Party Discipline and State Laws"]

[Excerpts] As a director of a prefectural commercial bureau and secretary of its leading party group, (Li Guangzhong) abused his position and power by brazenly violating the party's and state's commercial policy. He supported and abetted a profiteer to resell at a profit commodities in short supply to reap extraordinary profits. Such criminals who took the lead in violating the party's policy and trampling underfoot state lwas and regulations must be serverely punished in accordance with party discipline and state law.

As this case shows, one of the important reasons why many lawbreakers in society can have their way is because some party members and cadres in our government offices, enterprises and establishments, especially cadres in leading positions, have been hit by the bourgeois sugar-coated bullet. They collude with impure elements, go along with them in their evil deeds and do great damage to the party, state and people.

With their strong backing, these lawbreakers are running wild in their criminal activities. Although there are not many cadres like (Li Guangzhong) in our ranks, they make a very bad impression, ruin the party's prestige and hamper the four modernizations. All such party members and cadres who betray the communist ideal, forfeit communist ethics and engage in criminal activities must be duly punished in the light of the seriousness and nature of their crimes and their attitude in admitting their guilt, no matter how senior his party standing is, how much of a contribution he has made and how high his position is.

TAIWAN VISIT BY FORMER U-2 PILOTS APPROVED

OW260209 Beijing XINHUA Domestic Service in Chinese 1554 GMT 25 Aug 82

[Text] Beijing, 25 Aug (XINHUA) -- The concerned department of our government has given approval to former Kuomintang [KMT] Air Force U-2 pilots from Taiwan Ye Changdi and Zhang Liyi, who held the rank of major, to return to Taiwan to visit their kinsmen for a family reunion.

Holding the rank of major, Ye Changdi and Zhang Liyi were formerly pilots of U.S.-manufactured U-2 high altitude reconnaissance planes attached to the KMT Air Force's 35th Squadron in Taiwan.

Ye Changdi's U-2 plane intruded into China's mainland on 1 November 1963 to gather intelligence for the United States and the Chiang Kai-shek regime. His plane was shot down by a PLA Air Force unit in the east China region, and Ye was captured. Zhang Liyi's U-2 plane intruded into China's mainland on 10 January 1965 to gather intelligence for the United States and the Chiang Kai-shek regime. The plane was shot down by a PLA Air Force unit in the north China region, and Zhang was captured. At that time, the Taiwan authorities announced that they had "gloriously died in the line of duty" and had "heroically given their lives for a righteous cause."

After being captured, Ye Changdi and Zhang Liyi were treated leniently by the people's government. They felt deep distress over the harm they had caused the people of the motherland by flying foreign planes to gather military intelligence for the United States and the Chiang Kai-shek regime. With the approval of the government, they were released and given citizen's rights in 1969. At present, Ye Changdi works as an assistant professor at the department of foreign languages of a certain engineering institute while Zhang Liyi works as an engineer at a certain institute of aeronautical engineering. Being sound in body and in mind, they are jubilantly contributing their strength at their posts to the development of the four modernizations program of the motherland. They sincerely appreciate the lenient treatment, the appropriate job arrangements and the proper care for their livelihood given by the government.

Both have relatives in Taiwan. They have submitted requests to the people's government for permission to return to Taiwan to visit their kinsmen for a happy family reunion. The concerned government department has recently approved their request and has also made arrangements for them. They hope that the Taiwan authorities will also make arrangements for their family reunion in Taiwan.

UNITED DAILY VIEWS POSSIBLE MIRAGE SALES TO PRC

OW252351 Paris AFP in English 1735 GMT 25 Aug 82

[Text] Taipei, Aug. 25 (AFP) -- China's interest in buying French Mirage fighter jets may positively affect U.S. [words indistinct] sales to Taiwan, the mass circulation UNITED DAILY reported from Washington today.

The paper quoted State Department spokesman John Hughes as saying that Beijing's stated intention to purchase Mirage fighters from France would be a contributing factor in future consideration by the U.S. Government of arms sales to Taiwan.

Mr Hughes was responding to questions in the wake of an AFP report from Beijing quoting Chinese Communist Party Chairman Hu Yaobang as expressing interest in buying French Mirage fighter jets and in Sino-French coproduction of the aircraft.

Mr Hughes recalled that U.S. Secretary of State for Asian and Pacific Affairs John Holdridge had outlined to congressional hearings the factors that would be studied in considering arms sales to Taiwan. Mr Hughes said that if the Mirage transaction was realized, the United States would take it into consideration when deciding on arms sales to the Nationalist island.

Foreign Ministry officials here said they had the impression that although the United States had announced it would maintain Taiwan's aircraft at the present level, the level would be reexamined should Beijing's air threat to Taiwan increase.

Government officials here declined to comment officially on the proposed Mirage procurement by Beijing, but one official privately said: "We hope the deal will not become a mirage itself." He said that three years ago, the Chinese Communists had arbitrarily reneged on a number of major commitments to buy foreign plant and equipment causing considerable losses to German, Japanese, and even French suppliers. The cancellations had occurred in the context of China's "economic readjustment," undertaken to retrench the economy.

Chinese nationalists on Taiwan have also shown great interest in the French Mirage for years. Almost every French visitor here has been asked by government officials, parliamentarians and journalists about Taiwan's chances of buying the fighter jets from France.

Shortly after President Ronald Reagan's announcement early this year that arms sales to Taiwan would not exceed their present level, sections of the local press devoted considerable space to introducing the various types of French Mirage.

CHUNG YANG JIH PAO REMINDS U.S. OF OBLIGATIONS

[Editorial: "The United States Should Positively Implement the Taiwan Relations Act"]

[Text] The spokesman of the Ministry of Foreign Affairs of the Republic of China yesterday issued a solemn statement in connection with the "joint communique" issued by the U.S. Government and the Chinese Communist regime. The statement expresses profound regret that the U.S. side has mistaken the fallacious "peaceful intention" of the Chinese Communists as sincere and meaningful and agreed to put ceilings on both the quality and quantity of arms to be sold to the Republic of China.

It also asserts categorically that "it is a serious mistake" for the U.S. side, failing to comprehend the real nature of the trick and fraud of the Chinese Communists, to issue the document.

In the statement, the Ministry of Foreign Affairs urges the United States to see through the Chinese Communists' plot and ambition, positively implement the "Taiwan Relations Act," and continue to provide us with defensive arms to maintain the stability and prosperity of the Republic of China and to safeguard peace and security of the Asian-Pacific region.

The issuance of U.S.-bandits "communique" brewed for a long time. The plan to issue it was reported repeatedly. We regard it as a contradictory act, produced under the erroneous conception of "allying with the Chinese Communist bandits to resist the Soviet Union."

The first thing we would like to solemnly say is: The Republic of China is an independent sovereign state. Since its founding 71 years ago, it has adhered to our national father's three principles of the people to build a democratic republic of the people, by the people and for the people. We have a glorious history, dignity and lofty aspirations. At present, our base of national recovery, comprising Taiwan, Penchu, Quemoy and Matsu, known for its determination to restore power and its remarkable achievements, has become a magnet attracting support from overseas Chinese and a place which our compatriots on the China mainland yearn for. The Chinese Communist puppet regime is, out-and-out, a clique of violence, composed of notorious roving bandits who bring calamity to the country and the people. Our government regards them as rebels while our people consider them bandits. Although the Chinese Communists have seized the China mainland, they are absolutely not qualified to speak for the Chinese people. We do not recognize the validity of so-called treaties, communiques, and statements signed by the Chinese Communists with foreign countries. "Taiwan is a province of China," but Taiwan has never been, and will never be, a province under Chinese Communist tyrannical rule. We, of course, consider null and void any agreement, involving the rights and interests of the government and people of the Republic of China, reached in the U.S.-bandits "communique."

The second thing we would like to say is: The U.S. commitment to provide the Republic of China with defensive arms is based on the stipulations of the "Taiwan Relations Act." The arms sale to the Republic of China will greatly help the Republic of China to strengthen its defense capability. It is also a necessity for safeguarding peace and security in the Asian-Pacific region. In the U.S.-bandits "communique," the United States states that its arms sale to Taiwan will not exceed, either in qualitative or quantitative terms, the level of those supplied in recent years. Indeed, this clearly violates the wording and spirit of the "Taiwan Relations Act." Its Chapter 2 "Policy, Facts and Declaration" clearly stipulates: "To provide Taiwan with defensive arms." Our defense is against the possible Chinese Communists' armed invasion. The Chinese Communists are seeking all possible means to interrupt and discontinue U.S. arms sales to the Republic of China, precisely for the purpose of "paving the way for their armed invasion of Taiwan." To our surprise, the United States has submitted to Chinese Communists' alternate use of bluff and cajolement and agreed to "put ceilings." It is indeed a serious mistake which violates logic and our defense needs.

During the process of U.S.-bandits' negotiations, the United States repeatedly exchanged views with our government. On 14 July, the U.S. side, through appropriate channels, made the following points known to our side that the U.S. side:

1. Has not agreed to set a date for ending arms sales to the Republic of China;

2. Has not agreed to hold prior consultations with the Chinese Communists on arms sales to the Republic of China;

3. Would not play any mediation role between us and the Chinese Communists;

4. Has not agreed to revise the Taiwan Relations Act;

5. Has not altered its position regarding sovereignty over Taiwan; and

6. Would not exert pressure on the Republic of China to enter into negotiations with the Chinese Communists.

We think that the above-mentioned 6-point guarantee is generally in conformity with the principle of "cooperation bringing about mutual-benefits." Our country, of course, is deeply concerned about how the United States will keep to this position. All free countries surely will also watch the U.S. attitude.

In the past, the Chinese Communists repeatedly blustered that they would "down-grade relations" with the United States if it continued arms sales to the Republic of China. The blackmail was designed to interrupt the arms sales and further undermine relations between the United States and the Republic of China. Some Americans take bandit Teng Hsiao-ping for an "enlightened person." While the bandit party will soon hold its "12th national congress" and the power struggle will intensify, the issuance of the U.S.-bandits "communique" will play a taming and pacifying role in the interest of bandit Teng's power-holding clique.

However, we must point out that there are many factions within the bandits' puppet regime. They have never stopped struggling, both overtly and covertly, among themselves, but they have always been at one in their attempt to annex our base of national recovery and in their ambition to divide the free world. Therefore, we want to appeal to our compatriots at home and abroad to firmly keep to our faith, unite in struggle and fully display the spirit of self-respect and self-strengthening to create a bright future for our country.

President Reagan yesterday issued a written statement reiterating his sincerity in not disappointing long-time friends and expressing his admiration for the rapid progresses made by our people in the past 30 years. President Reagan is a man with far sightedness in world affairs and historical ambition. We hope that in the course of the free people's struggle to "leave Marxism-Leninism on the ash heap of history," the United States will faithfully keep to its principles, discern between friend and enemy, uphold freedom and justice and not make any more mistakes that benefit its enemies and hurt its friends.

WEN WEI PO ON EMERGENCE OF 'DENG XIAOPING LINE'

["Newsletter From Beijing" by correspondent Cheng Hsiang [4453 5046]: "The Development of the 'Deng Xiaoping Line'" -- part 2 of "The Attention-Grabbing 12th CPC Congress" -- capitalized passages published in boldface]

[Text] The political line of the 12th party congress will affirm, consolidate and develop the political line which has gradually formed since the 3d Plenary Session of the 11th CPC Central Committee. This "3d plenary session" line is known abroad as the "Deng Xiaoping line."

I. THE POLITICAL LINE OF THE 3D PLENARY SESSION

The political line of the 3d plenary session decided from 1979 on to shift the emphasis of the work of the whole party to socialist modernization. The plenary session put forward this political line: "The whole party, whole army and people of various nationalities throughout the country must fully develop the political situation of stability and unity with one heart and mind, and immediately take action, go all out, pool the wisdom and resources of everyone and carry out the new Long March to build China into a strong and modern socialist country before the end of this century." This political line expressed that new contents must be added to make our work more perfect by the beginning of the 6th plenary session. The 6th plenary session called on the "whole party, whole army and people of various nationalities throughout the country to hold high the banner of Marxism-Leninism and Mao Zedong Thought, rally more closely round the CPC Central Committee, continue to give play to the spirit of the foolish old man who removed the mountains, resolutely surmount every difficulty and struggle hard to gradually build China into a strong and modern socialist country with a high degree of democracy and civilization." The addition of these new contents has, first, reiterated the importance of Mao Zedong Thought and, second, pointed out that democracy and civilization are also one of the goals of a strong and modern country.

II. IDEOLOGICAL LINE AND ORGANIZATIONAL LINE

The ideological line and organizational line should be suited to the political line and should ensure its implementation. The 3d plenary session was still unable to express them clearly.

By the time of the 4th Plenary Session of the 11th CPC Central Committee, Marshal Ye in his National Day speech put forward an ideological line centered on "four adherences," or adhering to socialism, the dictatorship of the proletariat, party leadership and Marxism-Leninism-Mao Zedong Thought. The "Guiding Principles for Inner-Party Political Life" passed by the 5th Plenary Session of the 11th CPC Central Committee has been more explicit. It stressed the necessity of not only opposing the tendency to negate the four adherences but also the necessity to oppose ossified thinking and the practice of proceeding in all cases from books. This ideological line has in fact inherited the guideline of "emancipating the mind and seeking truth from facts" put forward by the 3d plenary session.

As for the organizational line, the 4th plenary session has by means of Marshal Ye's National Day speech made three important demands on the leadership cadres. He said: "At present, it is necessary to stress three things in particular to the cadres at various levels. 1) They must firmly support the party's political line and ideological line. 2) They must be selfless and impartial and must strictly obey law and discipline, uphold party spirit and stamp out factionalism.

3) They must have strong revolutionary dedication and political responsibility as well as vocational ability equal to their work." At the same time he also proposed that the age of leading cadres at various levels should be lowered and that they should be more knowledgeable and specialized. The "guiding principles" adopted by the 5th plenary session has made these demands more specific and systematic.

In this way, a systematic political, ideological and organizational line has gradually taken shape from the 3d plenary session to the 6th plenary session.

III. PERSONNEL CHANGES IN PARTY ORGANIZATIONS

During the formation of this political, ideological and organizational line, an important readjustment has also been correspondingly carried out in party personnel and organizations.

1. People who firmly implemented the line of the 3d plenary session have been elected to the leadership structure of the central committee. The 3d plenary session elected Chen Yun as an additional vice chairman of the party, elected Deng Yingchao, Hu Yaobang and Wang Zhen as additional members of the Political Bureau of the Central Committee, and provisionally elected 11 members to the Central Committee. The 4th plenary session elected Zhao Ziyang and Peng Zhen as members of the Political Bureau of the Central Committee and provisionally added 12 members to the Central Committee. The 5th plenary session elected Hu Yaobang and Zhao Yiyang as additional members of the Standing Committee of the Political Bureau and dismissed Wang Dongxing, Ji Dengkui, Wu De and Chen Xilian from their posts as members of the Political Bureau.

2. Younger people who firmly implemented the line of the 3d plenary session have been rapidly promoted to leading posts. In this respect, the promotions of Hu Yaobang and Zhao Ziyang have been most spectacular. Prior to the 3d plenary session, they were both only members of the 11th CPC Central Committee. Hu Yaobang was elected an additional member of the Political Bureau of the Central Committee after the 3d plenary session. He became a member of the Standing Committee of the Political Bureau and concurrently general secretary of the Secretariat of the Central Committee at the 5th plenary session and was made chairman of the CPC Central Committee at the 6th plenary session. Only 4 years have passed since his reappearance in 1977 to the time he became party chairman. Zhao Ziyang was elected an alternate member of the Political Bureau at the third plenary session and became a vice premier of the State Council at the second session of the fifth national people's congress. He was elected an additional member of the Political Bureau at the fourth plenary session and became premier of the State Council at the third session of the fifth national people's congress. At the fifth plenary session he became a member of the standing committee of the Political Bureau and at the sixth plenary session he became a vice chairman of the CPC Central Committee. From his transfer to work in the Central Committee to his appointment as vice chairman also took only 4 to 5 years.

3. Various essential organs have been set up to ensure the normal functioning of party work. For example: the 3d plenary session set up a Central Committee for inspecting discipline for restricting party members who violated law and discipline. It restored the secretariat system and established a general secretary to prepare conditions for carrying out collective leadership in the future.

As a result of the completion of such important personnel changes, the line of the 3d plenary session has become more straightforward and stable.

GOVERNOR'S DELEGATION TO MEET THATCHER IN UK

HK260304 Hong Kong HONG KONG STANDARD in English 26 Aug 82 p 1

[Text] The governor, Sir Edward Youde, will together with five Umelco [unofficial member of the Legislative Council] members leave for London next weekend, for a one-week visit to be consulted on the prime minister's visit to China.

It will be the governor's second such visit within five weeks. Sir Edward's last trip to London was at the end of July, when he had a half-hour discussion with Margaret Thatcher, the prime minister.

Accompanying the governor on his second trip will be senior unofficial member of the Executive Council Sir S.Y. Chung, senior unofficial member of the Legislative Council Roger Lobo and Legco Members Li Fook-wo, Lydia Dunn and Chan Kam-chuen.

The five were described as "the governor's personal choice" by a highly-placed source, and would represent the Hong Kong public, reflecting their views over various issues.

During their stay, the group, headed by Sir Edward, will meet "a great many people" including Mrs Thatcher, Foreign Secretary Francis Pym, officials from the Foreign Office and members of Parliament including Sir Paul Bryan.

The main purpose of the trip, said to be initiated by Mrs Thatcher, was to brief the prime minister prior to her visit to China.

General affairs of Hong Kong will also be discussed.

However the major issue will be Hong Kong's future, and Mrs Thatcher was said to view the opinion of the colony's five million people as "very important", the source said.

"There has been a great outpouring of comment in recent months on the lease issue, in the form of surveys, newspaper articles, editorial comments...

"All these will be relayed to the prime minister, who thinks the opinion of Hong Kong on the matter is very important.

"They will be assisting the prime minister in preparing for her visit both directly and indirectly; directly when the group meets Mrs Thatcher and indirectly when they brief the officials accompanying Mrs Thatcher on her trip and help them in preparing the papers for the visit," the source said.

When asked if the five unofficials had prepared papers on which they would talk, the source said: "Maybe you can tell them what they should be saying."

The five Umelco members did not represent a particular group, continued the source, though they represented a wide spectrum of interests, he added.

The source said it was not yet known whether Sir Edward would be accompanying Mrs Thatcher on her first visit to China as a prime minister, beginning on September 22.

It is most likely that Mrs Thatcher will give a press conference during her three-day stay in the colony. The prime minister is scheduled to arrive in Hong Kong on September 26 after completing her five-day visit to China.

The source observed that nothing earth-shattering was likely to be announced during the press conference, as Mrs Thatcher would most probably report the outcome of her discussions with Chinese leaders concerning Hong Kong's future in her earlier press conference in Beijing.

As had been noted by the governor, the base issue could not be settled all at one go but step by step. And the source said the outcome of the discussion between Mrs Thatcher and top Chinese leaders would only be another step towards solving the problem -- "a step which won't be the final one either."

The governor and the unofficials are scheduled to leave Hong Kong next Saturday and return towards the end of the following week.

KYODO: Suzuki Welcome To Visit

OW270111 Tokyo KYODO in English 0010 GMT 27 Aug 82

[Text] Beijing Aug 27 KYODO -- Zhu Xuefan, vice chairman of the Standing Committee of the Chinese National People's Congress, said Thursday China will welcome the projected visit of Japanese Prime Minister Zenko Suzuki despite the current controversy over revision of Japanese school textbooks. He said this in a meeting at the Great Hall of the People with a visiting Japan Socialist Party dietmen's mission led by Tadashi Yaoita.

This is the first time that the Chinese side had clearly indicated that China was treating the visit to that country of Prime Minister Suzuki separately from the textbook issue.

Educators Rap Revisions

OW261320 Beijing XINHUA in English 1306 GMT 26 Aug 82

[Text] Beijing, August 26 (XINHUA) -- The ambiguity in the recent attitude of Japanese authorities over history textbook revisions has drawn protests from Chinese educational circles.

Educator Ye Shengtao said the people of the countries victimized by Japanese aggression have exposed the crimes committed by the Japanese militarists and denounced the Japanese Education Ministry's distortion of history. However, up to now, he said, Japanese authorities are still ambiguous in their attitude and evading the nature of Japanese aggression with such words as "leaving it for future historians to judge."

"Such an attitude is quite impossible," he said.

He said one cannot but suspect the motive behind educating students with distorted history is to harm Sino-Japanese friendship.

Chinese educators, he said, are dedicated to educating students with historical facts. He hoped his Japanese colleagues would join the Chinese people in preventing the recurrence of past tragedies and working for a lasting friendship.

Dong Chuncai, president of the Chinese Pedagogy Society, also expressed indignation about the Japanese authorities delay in correction of mistakes. He said any refusal to admit Japanese aggression as it was is a provocation against the Chinese people and an inexcusable absurdity.

More than a month has passed since China protested against the distortions, but, up till now, the Japanese authorities are still dodging the issue. This cannot but arouse one's suspicion of their sincerity in settling the issue.

"Sincerity must be proved with action and not by lip service. The Chinese people are waiting," he said. He hoped the Japanese Government would correct their mistakes immediately and revise the textbooks.

The current issue of the PEOPLE'S EDUCATION monthly carries an editorial entitled: "Revival of Japanese Militarism Should Not Be Allowed." It says the textbook issue "is not a petty question, but a danger signal of an attempt to revive Japanese militarism."

"The Japanese Education Ministry attempts to insinuate militarist thinking into the minds of the Japanese young people through its censored textbooks," it says. "The Japanese pre-war militarist education first began in school."

The article calls on the people of China and Japan, as well as Southeast Asia, to join hands to frustrate the Japanese revival of militarism.

Social Scientist Urges Changes

OW261608 Beijing XINHUA in English 1500 GMT 26 Aug 82

[Text] Beijing, August 26 (XINHUA) -- The best time for the Japanese Government to correct the distortions in the school textbooks would be the sooner the better, Chinese social scientist Huan Xiang told XINHUA today.

He said that Sino-Japanese friendship has developed to the present state through hard efforts. However, it is still not yet a consolidated friendship, largely because of the shadow left by the Japanese war of aggression, which is still vivid in the memory of China and other Asian countries.

Although people are prepared to put aside past animosity, Huan Xiang noted, this shadow persists. It takes a long time to establish friendship on a solid basis, and it is very easy to wreck it.

Huan Xiang called on Japanese Government leaders to take into consideration the overall situation of Sino-Japanese friendship and take prompt, determined and clear-cut measures to rectify the present conditions.

Huan Xiang said that Sino-Japanese friendship has a history dating back more than 2,000 years, and the two countries have had relations only for a brief period in modern times. After the war, China and other countries saw that Japan seemed to have embarked on a new path. But there are still forces in Japan, including those in authority, which attempt to restore militarism. What they have done has already caused immeasurable damage to other countries trust in Japan.

Huan Xiang said that an outstanding statesman is always responsible for correcting his country's mistakes, improving his nation's image abroad, avoiding the losing of other countries trust in it and establishing solid friendship with neighboring countries.

Rectifying errors, the social scientist said, only demonstrates the leaders determination and goodwill before the people of the world. It is groundless to categorize international public opinion as interference in internal affairs and to declare not to correct the mistake under socalled "pressure" from other countries.

RENMIN RIBAO 26 Aug Article

[Article by Mei Er [2734 3643]: "Sophistry and the Facts"]

[Text] Since the action of the Japanese Education Ministry in distorting the history of Japanese aggression while screening school textbooks has been exposed, the ministry has been strongly condemned by international public opinion and the Japanese public and has fallen into an extremely passive political and moral position. In Japan, however, there are certain people who, while expressing self-reproach, have no intention of correcting the errors; and certain people have even racked their brains and come up with all kinds of sophistry.

The Japanese SANKEI SHIMBUN defended the move saying: "Prettifying the history of one's own country and embellishing it in some degree...actually all countries are the same in this respect." This theory, which attempts to describe as "natural" the move of the Japanese Education Ministry in distorting the history of aggression, not only resorts to sophistry but is also a total distortion of the facts. The war of aggression launched by the German, Italian and Japanese Fascists, which brought an immense calamity on the world's peoples, and the grave crimes they committed are already recorded in the history of all countries. It is impossible for anyone to deny or distort them.

There is no harm in turning the pages of the history textbooks used in the GDR, the FRG and Italy to see how they have recorded this history.

Italy launched a war of aggression against Abyssinia (today's Ethiopia) in 1935. This war, which was regarded as the prelude to World War II, sparked off the alliance between Fascist Germany and Italy. The Italian textbook "Modern History" has this to say about this stage of history: When Mussolini set to work to take Ethiopia, he completed the takeover in only 7 months." This war resulted in "even more rabid Fascist imperialist expansion" and encouraged the "reactionary militarist forces" in the nations of Europe. Another Italian textbook, "Records of Mankind," says: "Italian forces invaded the empire of Ethiopia under the pretext of a border clash." A history textbook commonly used by senior secondary school students in the FRG has this to say of the affair: "The Abyssinia war launched by Italy led to closer ties between the two aggressive Fascist states, and in 1936 they set up the Berlin-Rome Axis and put forward hegemonist demands on Europe."

Hitler's Germany undertook dramatic expansion in 1938. The Germans occupied Austria with their army, signed the Munich agreement, annexed the Sudetenland of Czechoslovakia and then proceeded to occupy Czechoslovakia and invade Poland, which finally compelled the Western countries to declare war. Thus, World War II was touched off. After that, Hitler occupied France, northwest Europe and southern Europe, and then launched a sudden attack on the Soviet Union. The aggressive claws of Nazi Germany stretched out, grasping for the whole world. Textbooks in both the GDR and the FRG contain detailed and clear-cut records of this stage of history. A history textbook used by ninth-grade secondary students in the GDR and another book, "History of Germany," point out: "The German army marched into Austria," "set up the Slovak puppet state," "seized Poland by force" and "invaded France and neutral Belgium, the Netherlands and Luxembourg," "the Fascist air force indiscriminately bombed British towns," and "the conquest and occupation of southern Europe and the attack on the Soviet Union" became "a war of aggression launched by German Fascist imperialism," aimed at "dominating Europe and the world." A textbook published this year and distributed widely in the FRG, entitled "Knowledge of World History," said: Hitler "dismembered Czechoslovakia" and "German forces invaded Poland in the early morning of 1 September 1939.... This war of expansion launched by Hitler spread to the whole world," and "the aim of the war was to establish the 'greater German Reich.'"

Another textbook commonly used in GDR secondary schools says: "According to Hitler's scheme, Germany should expand to the east for its Lebansraum," "the Reich forces occupied Czechoslovakia, brought most of Poland directly under the Reich and enslaved the conquered," with the result that Europe "came under Germany's hegeomist rule." The FRG book "Knowledge of World History" calls all this "Hitler's aggressive design."

All these textbooks clearly and truthfully relate that Fascist Germany and Italy carried out "aggression," and do not, as the Japanese Education Ministry does, describe aggression against other countries as "marching in."

Shocking atrocities were committed by the Nazi Fascists during World War II in slaughtering millions of Jews and innocent civilians. The textbooks in both the GDR and the FRG are truthful and specific on this point, and also condemn these atrocities. History textbooks used by senior secondary students in the GDR say: Fascist Germany "enslaved and exterminated whole peoples and wiped out many countries." During the war they used "the most vicious methods" and their "barbarism surpassed any previous crime of the German exploiting classes" and caused "war damage that even today is still the most terrifying." A West German textbook "World History" says of Nazi atrocities: "They regarded the Slavs of Eastern Europe as inferior beings and saw themselves as completely justified in regarding them as objects to be crushed, chased out and physically exterminated." The Nazis "practiced genocide; more than 2 million Jews were slaughtered in Auschwitz alone, and all together more than 5 or 6 million were murdered." The third volume of another West German textbook, "Knowledge of World History," also records Nazi crimes: "Only 300,000 out of 3 million Jews living in Poland survived;" "of the more than 6 million victims of slaughter, 1.8 million were under 14 years old;" and "of the 12 million civilians slaughtered in the Soviet Union and other countries, the majority were not taking direct part in war activities; they were nothing but the victims of Nazi atrocities."

All these textbooks also clearly condemn German and Italian Fascist crimes; this is completely different from the Japanese Education Ministry, which has pinned on the Chinese common people, the victims of slaughter, the responsibility for the crime of the Nanjing massacre.

Can it be said that the textbooks of the GDR, the FRG and Italy also "pettify" and "embellish" the history of their countries? In fact, far from evading the historical facts of the aggression committed by their countries, the history textbooks of these countries also clearly record the facts of Japan's war of aggression. The GDR textbook "History of Germany" points out: In 1940 the Axis powers, Germany, Italy and Japan, launched a war to carve up "Asia and Europe into spheres of interests." The West German book "knowledge of World History" writes: "Japan launched aggression from 1931 to 1932." Under a subhead "Japan Continues Its Aggression," this book points out that "the desire of the Tokyo government...was to have Japan ruling the whole of China." Another textbook says: "Japan launched armed aggression against northeast China in order to expand its forces to the continent of Asia and to stop the continued development of the economic crisis." In the "Mirror of History" series on modern history, it is pointed out that in its pursuit of the dominant position in Southeast Asia, Japan had taken new steps in expanding its sphere of influence 10 years previously. The Italian textbook "Modern History" also points out that "Japan expanded into Manchuria," and "Japan occupied Manchuria and organized the puppet Manchukuo." All this accords with the historical facts.

The history of World War II was written in blood and tears, and a whole generation experienced this profound calamity and struggle. It is utter folly for anyone to attempt to erase the ironclad facts by using pretexts that do not hold water.

BEIJING REVIEW WARNS AGAINST JAPAN-TAIWAN TIES

HK260757 Beijing BEIJING REVIEW in English No 33, 16 Aug 82 p 15

[Article by Xin Ping: "Comment on 'Restoring Japan-Taiwan Relations'"]

[Text] A few people in Japan are calling for "restoring Japan-Taiwan relations."

They want to change the unofficial nature of the relations between Japan and China's Taiwan Province and re-establish official relations between the two sides as existed before the normalization of relations between China and Japan. In other words, to create "two Chinas" and sabotage the friendly relations that have been established and developed between China and Japan.

It is not coincidental that the fallacy of "restoring Japan-Taiwan relations" has emerged recently. The Japanese Liberal Democratic Party (LDP) sent a big delegation to Taiwan last month. During its stay in Taiwan, Japanese newspapers reported, the delegation met the "president," "prime minister," and "ministers" of Taiwan. The agreement reached between the delegation and the Taiwan authorities uses the words "two countries."

The LDP official delegation to Taiwan was led by Masumi Esaki, head of the LDP special committee on external economic relations. Though Esaki did not use the title of "special envoy" of the LDP president as he had used during his tour of Southeast Asian countries, the official nature of his delegation to Taiwan cannot be obscured. The delegation said that its discussion with the Taiwan authorities "was limited to economic affairs." However, even the Japanese press did not believe this. JIJI news agency in a report said: "The LDP delegation's visit to Taiwan is not only of economic importance in melting away the trade frictions between Japan and Taiwan, but also of political importance."

As for the "political importance," this implies regarding China's Taiwan Province not only as a trade partner of Japan but also a "political entity."

The overwhelming majority of the Japanese people, including many LDP members, want to defend and promote friendly relations between China and Japan. However, a handful of persons wish to undermine these relations. It is a distortion to call this handful a "Taiwan lobby," because they are not friendly to the Chinese people in Taiwan. They should be called "advocates of encroaching upon Taiwan" or "proponents for reoccupying Taiwan."

Adhering to the basic principles guiding the restoration of diplomatic relations and advancing the friendly relations between Japan and China is in accordance with the basic interest of the two countries. This has been borne out by the history of the relations between the two countries over the past 10 years. Therefore, the people of China and Japan should not treat lightly the existing adverse current aimed at destroying China-Japan friendship.

The advocates of "restoring Japan-Taiwan relations" are making a mistake if they think China needs something from Japan so therefore they can trample on the basic principles of China-Japan relations and destroy China-Japan friendship.

MATERIALS ON FILM DELEGATION'S TRIP TO JAPAN

Producer's Comments

OW230854 Beijing XINHUA in English 0756 GMT 23 Aug 82

[Text] Beijing, August 23 (XINHUA) - Wang Yang, Chinese producer of the first Sino-Japanese co-production "The Game Yet To Finish," said here today that he believes the film would "contribute to promoting friendship between China and Japan."

Wang Yang, head of the Beijing Film Studio, is leaving for Japan on August 24 to attend the premiere of the film, scheduled for August 26.

In an interview with XINHUA today, he said: "Friendship between the Chinese and the Japanese peoples will surely last. A handful of militarists can never represent the Japanese people."

Co-produced by the Beijing Film Studio and the Tokyo Tokuma Corporation of Japan, "The Game Yet To Finish" was a two-year long cooperation in funding, script-writing, directing and casting. It portrays the great suffering brought to people of two countries by Japanese aggression against China through the life of a Chinese and a Japanese go player and their families.

Many Chinese critics who have seen previews describe the film as "truthful to history" and "educative for the coming generations."

The delegation headed by Wang Yang includes the Chinese director Duan Jishun, principal actors Sun Daolin, Huang Zongying, Du Peng, Shen Guanchu, and Shen Danping, and representatives from the China Film Co-Production Corporation and the China Film Distribution and Exhibition Corporation. Zhang Lei, a 7-year-old actress from Shanghai, is the youngest on the delegation. They plan to attend ceremonies in Tokyo, Nagoya and Osaka.

Wang Yang, 66, participated in revolutionary cinema and theater activities led by the left-wing dramatists league in the 1930's. In 1938, amid the anti-Japanese war, he went to Yanan, the revolutionary base, and engaged in propaganda work in the 8th Route Army. Later he filmed many battle scenes with his colleagues under enemy gun fire. This is regarded as valuable historical material.

Quite a few Japanese friends with sense of justice, Wang Yang recalled, "stood together with us against the Japanese aggression in China, joined the struggle for our national liberation and became our comrades-in-arms."

Wang Yang, who has paid five visits to Japan, said he occasionally faced certain right-wingers' provocations, but they would immediately be refuted by friendly Japanese. He said he admired what Yasulo Ohno, the Japanese script writer, had said: "The Japanese people are not so easily taken in today as the young Rinsaku Matsunami."

Matsunami is the Japanese go player in the film, who at first accepts it as true that Japan's aggression against China was aimed at "helping China." However, Matsunami himself becomes a victim of the cruel persecution by Japanese militarism.

Recalling that Junya Sato, the Japanese director, vowed never to take up arms against China after the film shooting, Wang Yang said the majority of the Japanese people "are friendly toward the Chinese." A proof, he said, is that so many Japanese showed interest in the making of the film and offered to help.

According to the China Film Distribution and Exhibition Corporation, a premiere of the film is scheduled for Beijing on September 3 and a Japanese film delegation is expected to come.

Suzuki Receives Group

[Text] Tokyo, August 26 (XINHUA) -- Japanese Prime Minister Zenko Suzuki said today the showing of the Japan-China co-produced film, "The Game Yet To Finish", this year is "a matter of far-reaching importance."

Receiving the Chinese film delegation headed by Wang Yang this morning at his official residence, the prime minister said: "We should let many more people of both countries see this film. I hope the film can play a great role in promoting the friendly and harmonious relations between the Japanese and Chinese peoples."

Wang Yang expressed thanks to the prime minister for receiving them. He said the film showing the joys and sorrows of two old and well-known go game families from the two countries, reflects the sufferings inflicted upon the two peoples by Japanese militarism. That is why it was well received during its preview in Beijing and Tokyo.

Present on the occasion were Chairman of the Japan-China Friendship Association Tokuma Utsunomiya and managing director of the Tokyo Tokuma Corporation, Yasuyoshi Tokuma.

The Chinese film delegation arrived in Tokyo on August 24 for the premier of the film in Tokyo and other places of Japan. Wang Yang is the Chinese co-producer of the film and Yasuyoshi Tokuma is his Japanese counterpart.

[Text] Beijing, August 25 (XINHUA) -- Japan's Morioka children's chorus troupe, Mieko dancing school and China's central broadcasting children's chorus troupe jointly presented choruses and dances here this evening in celebration of the 10th anniversary of the normalisation of Sino-Japanese relations. The program began with a march and a chorus of "Hello, Glad To Meet You" sung by 40 Chinese and 21 Japanese children. The Japanese and Chinese children also presented separately children's songs popular in the two countries.

Dressed in colorful national costumes, young Japanese dancers performed folk dances to the tunes of "Sakura" and "Sorang," two Japanese songs familiar to Chinese music lovers.

Chinese folk songs presented by Amachi in Chinese and "Song of the Four Seasons," a Japanese folk song which she led the Chinese children in singing, climaxed the program. The audience joined the singers, clapping hands rhythmically.

Led by Keizo Takahashi, member of the Japanese Diet, the Japanese artists arrived in Beijing August 22 and will leave for home tomorrow.

FOREIGN MINISTRY REJECTS SRV CEASE-FIRE PROPOSAL

OW261226 Beijing XINHUA in English 1215 GMT 26 Aug 82

[Text] Beijing, August 26 (XINHUA) -- The Chinese Foreign Ministry in a note to the Vietnamese Embassy here yesterday refuted Vietnam's so-called proposal for a halt to hostilities in the Sino-Vietnamese border areas during the national days of the two countries. The note is a reply to a note sent by the Vietnamese Foreign Ministry to the Chinese side on August 14, which contains the Vietnamese "proposal".

The note of the Chinese Foreign Ministry said: "Since the beginning of this year, the Vietnamese authorities have continued to carry out repeated armed provocations against and intrusions into China's border areas. The Vietnamese troops frequently opened fire into Chinese territory, attacked and kidnapped peaceable Chinese border inhabitants and disrupted production. Vietnamese military aircraft violated China's airspace time and again for reconnaissance and provocation. Vietnamese naval vessels wantonly attacked and seized Chinese fishing boats and fishermen on the high seas. Vietnam has up to now refused to return them to China."

The note said: "Facts have shown that tension along the Sino-Vietnamese border has resulted solely from the Vietnamese authorities pursuance of an anti-China policy and deliberate provocations against China's border areas. The Chinese side has always held that tension along the Sino-Vietnamese border can be eased and the border inhabitants of the two countries can live in peace and stability, provided that the Vietnamese side stops pursuing its anti-China policy and its armed provocations and intrusions into China's border areas."

AFP: Spokesman's Comments

OW270552 Hong Kong AFP in English 0524 GMT 27 Aug 82

[Excerpt] Beijing, Aug. 27 (AFP) -- China has accused Vietnam of not having "the least sincerity" in its offer of dialogue published Monday by the Vietnamese official Communist newspaper NHAN DAN.

A Chinese Foreign Ministry spokesman today criticised the Vietnamese authorities for "calling for negotiations while intensifying their anti-China drive."

"This shows that their words are at variance with their deeds and they don't have the least sincerity," he added.

Negotiations between the two countries started after a border war in February-March 1979, but they were broken off by Beijing after what it considered to be many fruitless sessions.

China has also rejected another Vietnamese offer of a cease-fire along the Sino-Vietnamese border from August 27 to October 8 to allow the national day to be celebrated "peacefully" in both countries. Vietnam's national day is on September 2 and China's is on October 1.

The five buses used to transport the officials to the venue were destroyed in the strike. Two tanks and several armored personnel carriers were damaged.

A convoy of 40 trucks carrying troops and supplies was seen on the road to Paghman last Friday, the day after the attack on the rally.

PPI, AAP REPORT AFGHAN GUERRILLA ASSAULTS

OW261910 Beijing XINHUA in English 1830 GMT 26 Aug 82

[Text] Islamabad, August 26 (XINHUA) -- Afghan freedom fighters intensified their guerrilla activities in Kabul and Paktia Provinces over the past two weeks, inflicting heavy casualties and material losses on Soviet and Karmal troops, according to a PPI report from Peshawar.

In an ambush on a Soviet military convoy comprising 45 military vehicles and tanks which was moving from Kabul to Gardez, provincial city of Paktia Province, the guerrillas destroyed or seriously damaged six tanks and military vehicles with rocket launchers and hand grenades. Eight Russian officers and men were killed in the ambush.

The Mojahedin destroyed one more military vehicle near a military camp in Gardez on August 17 with the three enemy men on board eliminated. Meanwhile, they killed six enemy soldiers guarding a police station in Chinargai of Paktia Province.

An AAP (AGENCY AFGHAN PRESS) report from Gandahar City said 500 Afghan guerrillas, besieged by a Soviet army brigade near Panjwai, 25 kilometers west of Qandahar, since August 13, made a series of counter-attacks from August 14 to 18, destroying three Soviet tanks with most of the crew killed. A Karmal officer and two soldiers were also killed in the attacks. Bravely defending their positions, the freedom fighters downed one helicopter gunship and damaged another.

A total of 24 Karmal troops joined the resistance forces in the said period.

U.S. PROHIBITS EXPORTS TO FRENCH COMPANIES

OW270851 Beijing XINHUA in English 0749 GMT 27 Aug 82

[Text] Washington, August 26 (XINHUA) -- The U.S. Commerce Department today issued two temporary denial orders prohibiting export of all U.S. products, services and technology to an American company's subsidiary in France and a French company, which had defied the U.S. embargo on transferring equipment for a Soviet pipeline project.

Dresser France, a subsidiary of Dresser Industries, Dallas, Texas, today loaded the first three gas compressors abroad a ship bound for a Soviet port. The French company involved, Creusot-Loire, was a prime contractor for the pipeline project.

In a news release issued here today, the U.S. Department of Commerce announced that the two companies are under investigation by the department because of the export of the compressors to the USSR in violation of the U.S. Export Administration Act of 1979.

The latest reaction of the U.S. Government came as the trans-Atlantic dispute over the pipeline issue was heating up. The Reagan administration extended in June the sanctions imposed last December in retaliation for the Soviet role in the Polish crisis.

The West European countries concerned -- France, Britain, West Germany and Italy -- have claimed that the U.S. embargo had infringed their sovereignty and said that they would go ahead with fulfilling their contracts with the Soviet Union. One British company was reportedly prepared to follow France's example by shipping embargoed equipment to the Soviet Union.

U.S. Secretary of Commerce Malcolm Baldridge has stated that the U.S. action was intended to "dissuade other firms from violating U.S. regulations". "We will take appropriate measures in any case where we have reason to believe the violations of U.S. export regulations have occurred," the Department of Commerce cautioned in its statement.

YUGOSLAV COMMUNIST LEADERSHIP ASSESSES ECONOMY

[Text] Belgrade, Aug 26 (XINHUA) -- Yugoslavia has achieved good economic results in the first half of this year in spite of some "adverse trends" in economic activities, TANJUG reported today.

The Presidency of the Central Committee of the League of Communists of Yugoslavia (LCY) made this assessment at a session here Wednesday.

The country has succeeded in meeting its foreign liabilities more regularly and quickly and in ensuring its external liquidity, the session noted. But the republic's and autonomous provinces have got a slow industrial growth rate, and inflation has exceeded the levels forecast for this year.

The LCY Central Committee Presidency confirmed the need for the measures taken to restrict the public, collective and capital expenditures and halt the rise in prices.

It also emphasized the need to put into effect the conclusions of the 12th congress of the LCY and to ensure the principle of income distribution according to work performed. All social factors must strive for strengthening the role of workers in defining and implementing the national economic policy.

PLO EVACUATION FROM BEIRUT ENTERS SECOND STAGE

[Text] Beirut, August 25 (XINHUA) -- Another 1,150 Palestinian fighters left Beirut for Syria and the Sudan by two ships today, marking a start of the second stage of the PLO evacuation. The evacuation took place after the U.S. Marines took over the port areas from French soldiers. Among the evacuees, 560 are going to Syria and 590 to the Sudan.

Hani al-Hassan, political adviser to Yasir 'Arafat, chairman of the Palestine Liberation Organization, also evacuated from Beirut for Syria. He said before boarding the Syrian-bound ship that the PLO would open all doors to a peaceful solution to the Palestinian problem. They will not resort to force unless efforts for a peaceful solution fail, he said.

According to a report from radio Israel, U.S. presidential envoy Philip Habib said tonight after his talks with Israeli Defense Minister Ari'el Sharon in Tel Aviv that the evacuation might end on September 2, two days ahead of the timetable. The evacuation was going as scheduled so far, he added.

Habib flew into Tel Aviv to discuss problems emerged from the evacuation. The Israeli radio said Habib was trying to arrange for the multinational force overseeing the evacuation to take up posts along the Beirut-to-Damascus highway to ensure the safety of the Syrian troops evacuating Beirut.

The overland evacuation of the Palestinian fighters, which was to start today, was delayed because the guerrillas would be vulnerable to attacks from the Israeli forces who controlled some posts along the highway. More ships are needed if they evacuate Beirut by sea instead of by land.

250 Italian soldiers will arrive in Beirut port tonight as part of the multinational force and will take over areas around the Beirut International Airport.

SYRIAN OFFICIALS GREET PLO FIGHTERS UPON ARRIVAL

OW261648 Beijing XINHUA in English 1613 GMT 26 Aug 82

[Text] Tartus, August 26 (XINHUA) -- About 560 Palestinian guerrillas evacuated from west Beirut received a warm welcome when they disembarked from a Cypriot ferryboat at this Mediterranean Syrian port early this morning. Thousands of Palestinians and Syrian people, chanting "Down With the Zionist" and "Long Live Palestine", hugged and kissed the Palestine Liberation Organization fighters and showered them with roses.

Syrian Premier 'Abd ar-Ra'uf al-Kasm and Defence Minister Mustafa Talas as well as President of the Palestine National Council Khalid al-Fahum were on hand to receive the fighters at the dockside.

The ferryboat "Sol Georgius" drew into Tartus, north of Damascus, at 1:30 A.M. to a deafening chorus of applause, chants, sirens and hoots. Palestinians on the shore slaughtered and skinned several sheep in front of the huge crowd to honor the fighters, the first group to reach Syria. As the PLO soldiers filed off the Cypriot ship in a well organized way, they stepped on the sheep skins and then stopped briefly before a reviewing stand to hear speeches by Premier al-Kasm and Palestinian officials.

On behalf of President Hafiz al-Asad, the premier welcomed the PLO fighters and said: "Syria and Palestine will march together toward victory and liberation."

After a short ceremony, the fighters took buses and headed off for accommodation on the outskirts of Damascus.

RENMIN RIBAO EDITORIAL LAUDS PLO FIGHTERS

OW270755 Beijing XINHUA in English 0733 GMT 27 Aug 82

[Text] Beijing, August 27 (XINHUA) -- The PEOPLES DAILY says in an editorial today that the Chinese people will, as always, stand firmly on the side of the Arab and Palestinian people in their just struggle against Israeli aggression.

Entitled "Salute to the Palestinian Fighters", the editorial says: "In accordance with the agreement reached by all parties concerned, the PLO fighters are pulling out of Beirut for other Arab countries in order to save that city from destruction. This action, taken in the interest of the overall situation, contributes to the peaceful solution of the Lebanon crisis caused by Israel's large-scale invasion."

It says: "The PLO has withstood another severe test. By fighting heroically, the PLO fighters have smashed the scheme of the Israeli expansionists to write off the national rights of the Palestinian people by wiping out the PLO armed forces. Despite heavy losses, the PLO has preserved its effective strength and gained valuable experience." So long as they conscientiously sum up their experience, both positive and negative, draw the necessary lessons, strengthen their unity and persist in struggle, the PLO fighters are sure to achieve final victory, the editorial stresses.

It says: "At this critical juncture, Chairman of the PLO Executive Committee Yasir Arafat has called on the fighters to continue their resistance and struggle, and solemnly declared that the Palestinian people would go on fighting for their national rights. The high morale and strict discipline displayed by the Palestinian fighters during their withdrawal from Beirut fully indicate the invincibility of their revolutionary cause.

"The Palestine problem remains the core of the Middle East issue. Failing a reasonable solution to this problem, there could be no peace and stability in the region. Israel's savage invasion of Lebanon has fully exposed the aggressive and expansionist designs of the Begin regime. It wants not only to eliminate the PLO and stamp out the struggle of the Palestinian people for their national rights, but also to put Lebanon under its control. All the evil schemes of the Israeli ruling clique were supported and encouraged by the United States, which cannot evade its responsibility for all the crimes committed by Israel in Lebanon.

"Now that the PLO and its armed forces are pulling out of Beirut, the United States must make the Israeli aggressor troops withdraw from Lebanon immediately, totally and unconditionally so as to ensure the latter's sovereignty and territorial integrity. Israel must not refuse to withdraw under any pretext nor should it interfere directly or indirectly in the internal affairs of Lebanon. The international community should take this opportunity to bring about a comprehensive, just and durable solution to the Middle East problem."

In conclusion the editorial says: "The struggle of the Arab people to recover their lost land and that of the Palestinian people to gain back their national rights are a just cause which enjoys the sympathy and support of more and more countries and people in the world. Despite their arrogance, the Israeli expansionists are under heavy fire from the international community and find themselves bitterly isolated.

"The Chinese people will, as always, stand firmly on the side of the Arab and Palestinian people. We are convinced that the heroism and indomitable revolutionary spirit of the Palestinian people, fostered in protracted and arduous struggle, will be given new dimensions in the new situation. Victory certainly belongs to the Palestinian people who uphold unity and persist in struggle."

ARAB LEAGUE'S KLIBI ON PLO EXIT FROM BEIRUT

[Text] Tunis, August 24 (XINHUA) -- Chedli Klibi, secretary general of the Arab League, said here today that the decision of withdrawal from Beirut made by the Palestine resistance fighters has won firmer support for the defenders of the cause. In a statement on the departure of Palestinian fighters from Beirut, Klibi said that while the fighting in Beirut has recorded for the Palestine resistance fighters a great military discipline and a strict respect for international laws and the Geneva conventions, it has also brought a charge against Israel of a long list of crimes and repeated violations of international rules and moral principles.

He said that more than ever before the Arab countries now need unity of will and action. International community must help the Palestinian people to exercise their natural right to create an independent state on the soil of their fatherland -- Palestine, he added.

OFFICIALS AT RECEPTION MARKING NAMIBIA DAY

[Text] Beijing, August 26 (XINHUA) -- The Chinese People's Association for Friendship With Foreign Countries held a reception here this afternoon to mark "Namibia Day." Diplomatic envoys of the African countries to China and their wives and African experts working here attended.

Wang Bingnan, president of the host association, spoke at the reception. He praised the Namibian people for "waging valiant and arduous struggles for national independence, self-determination and freedom and against the South African colonialist and racist regime and its racial oppression and discrimination."

He said: "Together with all countries and peoples that uphold justice, the Chinese Government and people sternly condemn the South African authorities for pursuing the policies of racial discrimination and oppression, and strongly demand that they should immediately end their illegal occupation of Namibia in accordance with the U.N. resolutions concerning this question.

"The Chinese people firmly support their government's solemn and consistent position in refusing to have any contact with the South African authorities, and will continue to support the Namibian people firmly till their complete independence," he said.

Dia Bazika Tuma-Waku, ambassador of the Republic of Zaire, spoke in the name of the African diplomatic group in China.

He said this occasion gives Africa new proof of the concern shown by the People's Republic of China "for the total liberation of our continent." He said the African diplomatic group in China "is happy to be associated with the noble cause of the Namibian people to exalt their bravery and intrepidity in an effective way."

The ambassador condemned the South African racist leaders for refusing to carry out the relevant resolutions taken by the United Nations Organization of Namibia with the intention of perpetuating their domination in Namibia.

He said Africa has already made a pledge to devote all its resources for the liberation of Namibia.

Present at the reception were Hou Tong, vice-president of the Chinese People's Association for Friendship With Foreign Countries; Gong Dafei, vice-minister of foreign affairs; Li Shuzheng, deputy head of the International Liaison Department of the Central Committee of the Chinese Communist Party; and leaders of the All-China Federation of Trade Unions, the All-China Women's Federation, the All-China Youth Federation and the Beijing Municipality.

Nessim Shallon, resident representative of the United Nations Development Programe, was among the guests at the reception.

UN Council Observes Day

[Text] United Nations, August 26 (XINHUA) -- The United Nations Council for Namibia met here today to observe Namibia Day.

President of the 36th session of the U.N. General Assembly Ismat Kittani said in a message to President of the U.N. Council for Namibia Paul Lusaka (Zambia) that this occasion served to highlight the determination of the international community to bring about a settlement to the Namibian problem in accordance with the relevant U.N. resolutions.

He hoped that the efforts of the council and the negotiations now under way would bear fruit in the near future, bringing an end to "the most pernicious remnants of colonialism."

U.N. Secretary-General Javier Perez de Cuellar said in a message to the council that "a settlement of the problem is unquestionably essential for the peaceful, stable and orderly development of all the people living in the region."

He hoped that negotiations now underway would be completed soon so that elections in Namibia under United Nations supervision and control could take place in early 1983. "The momentum towards a settlement needs to be maintained," he stressed.

The president of the U.N. Council for Namibia said a settlement of the Namibian issue could only be achieved in accordance with Security Council Resolution 435 (1978).

In its quest for peace and independence for Namibia, he noted, the council had recently decided to hold a conference in Paris in 1983 to mobilize the international community in support of the strugging people of Namibia.

A number of representatives of various regions and international organizations reiterated their full support for the independence of Namibia and demanded that South Africa unconditionally implement the U.N. resolutions on Namibia and end its occupation of that area.

12th NATIONAL CONGRESS TO FEATURE FRUGALITY

The preparatory group of the congress has decided that during the congress period, no sightseeing tours will be organized and that delegates will have to pay for any theatrical performances and film shows they attend. Stores at delegates' lodging locations will not set up special counters to supply them new products or products in short supply. Neither will Beijing's department stores designate special working hours to serve delegates exclusively. At the same time, the preparatory group has called on all areas not to give new products to delegates in the name of tributes to the congress.

The preparatory group also has made the maximum possible cut in the number of staff workers. It has decided that no delegates will be accompanied by a retinue. Old and sick comrades who have difficulty getting about may each be accompanied by one person after having obtained approval. Preliminary estimates show that the congress staff will be reduced by one-third and the number of accompanying persons by two-thirds than originally planned.

The preparatory group has also decided that delegates will have to take buses to attend congress activities. Except for the old and the sick who have difficulties getting about, delegates from the central party and government organs and the PLA leading organs stationed in Beijing will all reside with their respective delegations and, together with other delegates, take large sedans to attend congress meetings.

ARTICLE GREETING 12th CPC NATIONAL CONGRESS

OW261015 Beijing Domestic Service in Mandarin 2320 GMT 23 Aug 82

[Special article by (Jing Xin) and (Qiu Shi) to greet the 12th CPC National Congress: "Strive For a Decisive Turn for the Better in the Party's Work Style"]

[Excerpts] The party's work style is one of the problems to which people have paid close attention. As everybody knows, ours is a party with a glorious revolutionary tradition and a fine work style. However, the Lin Biao and Jiang Qing counterrevolutionary cliques ran wild for as long as 10 years. As a result, the body of our party was seriously weakened and the atmosphere in the party was also seriously disrupted. This is why the party, for a considerably long time since the downfall of the gang of four, has had to make great efforts to solve this problem.

Since its third plenary session, the party Central Committee has devoted much of its time to reviving and carrying forward the party's fine work style and checking unhealthy tendencies in the party and has taken a series of measures to achieve these purposes. Discipline inspection commissions have been set up from the higher levels to those at the grassroots. The party Central Committee issued the Guiding Principles for Inner-Party Political Life, laid down the regulations on living arrangements for senior cadres and worked out the draft constitution of the CPC. The 6th Plenary Session of the 11th CPC Central Committee adopted the Resolution on Certain Questions in the History of Our Party Since the Founding of the PRC. In accordance with Marxist dialectical and historical materialism, this resolution correctly summed up the party's major historical events that had occurred in the 32 years since the founding of the PRC, especially the Great Cultural Revolution. It scientifically analyzed the correctness and incorrectness of the party's guidelines in these events and analyzed the subjective factors and social causes for the mistakes made.

The resolution realistically appraised Comrade Mao Zedong's place in the Chinese revolution and fully expounded the great significance of Mao Zedong Thought as the guiding ideology of our party. Also set forth in the revolution was a program for building a socialist material civilization and socialist ethics. It called for improving the party's work style as an important aspect in building socialist ethics.

Since 1981 the party Central Committee has made particular efforts to check unhealthy tendencies in the economic field. In January 1982 the party Central Committee issued an urgent circular calling for dealing blows to serious economic criminals. In April the CPC Central Committee and the State Council made public their decision on combating serious economic crime. Following the publication of the decision, a number of major cases of smuggling and bribery were brought to light and handled in various localities. At the same time, the party Central Committee decided to reform the administrative structure in order to overcome bureaucracy and raise work efficiency. Thanks to the correct leadership and the great efforts of the party Central Committee, the party's work style has been noticeably improved. Such improvement is evident in the following five main aspects:

1. The whole party has gained a clearer understanding of the importance of the party's work style. Before the 3d Plenary Session of the 11th CPC Central Committee, a considerable number of party comrades lacked a clear understanding of the importance of the party's work style and of the urgent need to improve it. Some comrades just let matters drift, some stressed that they were too busy to improve the party's work style and others were afraid lest making vigorous efforts to improve the party's work style would affect the unity of comrades. Still others even associated with evil persons in violating the law and discipline.

In view of the situation, several responsible comrades of the party Central Committee repeatedly stressed the importance of rectifying the party's work style at various meetings in order to bring this matter to the attention of the whole party. To counter the erroneous idea of the "two whatevers," Comrade Deng Xiaoping pointed out in April 1977 that it is necessary to grasp and apply Mao Zedong Thought comprehensively and accurately. In his closing address at the 11th CPC National Congress in August of the same year, he pointed out that we must revive and carry forward the fine tradition and work style Chairman Mao fostered in our party.

In his speech at the March 1979 meeting to discuss the principles for the party's theoretical work, Comrade Deng Xiaoping further pointed out: It is first necessary to rectify the party's work style in order to improve the general mood of society. In the present period of historic changes, problems are piled as high as mountains and numerous tasks remain to be undertaken. Strengthening party leadership and rectifying the party's work style are of decisive significance in this regard.

Comrade Chen Yun sharply pointed out in November 1981 that the ruling party's work style is a matter of life and death for the party.

In further elaborating on the question of the party's work style, Comrade Yaobang said: It is not enough to have only a correct political line and policy. In addition, it is necessary to have a correct organizational line and a fine party work style. Only with a correct political line and policy as well as a correct organizational line and a fine party work style will it be possible to build our party well.

These important remarks by leading comrades of the party Central Committee have made it possible for the whole party to gain a much clearer understanding of the importance of the party's work style.

2. Inner-party political life has gradually gotten onto the right path. As everybody knows, political life in our party had become increasingly abnormal since the late 1950's. The party's democratic centralism was seriously undermined during the Great Cultural Revolution, and inner-party political life then became extremely abnormal.

After the downfall of the gang of four, the party Central Committee took effective measures to strengthen the party's democratic centralism, ban the personality cult, strengthen collective leadership and give full scope to democracy. As a result, inner-party political life has gradually gotten onto the right path.

At the same time, the party Central Committee has affirmed anew the discipline of the party and has stressed that the whole party must keep in step politically. As a result, a great change has taken place in the phenomenon in which some party organizations at various levels and party members go their own way, feign compliance with or even openly resist the party Central Committee's line, principles and policies. The tendencies of bourgeois liberalization and ultrademocratization have been noticeably checked.

3. The style of seeking truth from facts has been revived and developed. Because of the tendency to boast and exaggerate during the Great Leap Forward in the late 1950's, unhealthy trends occurred in the party, such as making false reports on achievements and telling lies. As the gang of four ran amok, the practice of telling lies, boasting and engaging in empty talk was rampant. After the downfall of the gang of four, especially after the 3d Plenary Session of the 11th CPC Central Committee, the party Central Committee took a series of measures to revive and develop the party's style of seeking truth from facts and to uphold practice as the sole criterion for the test of truth. The unhealthy practices of telling lies, boasting and engaging in empty talk in the party have been criticized, and the practices of telling the truth and doing practical work have been promoted.

Now the practices of attaching importance to investigation and study and doing practical work are prevailing from the central down the local level. Many party members and leading cadres have taken the lead in going to basic units and among the masses to conduct investigation and study, to solve new problems and to gain fresh experiences. Deng Xiaoping, Hu Yaobang, Zhao Ziyang and other principal leading comrades of the party Central Committee have often gone on inspection tours of various localities where they have solved problems on the spot.

4. Unhealthy tendencies and violations of law and discipline have been checked to some extent. The Lin Biao and Jiang Qing counterrevolutionary cliques ran amok as long as 10 years, and the ultraindividualist ideas they spread produced a deep and pernicious influence. In addition, owing to the corrosive influence of decadent capitalist ideas and of the decadent capitalist way of life both at home and from abroad, unhealthy tendencies in the economic field have developed to a serious extent. The primary manifestations of such unhealthy tendencies are: appropriating public property, turning the public interest into that of a small group, considering everything in terms of money, not hesitating to violate state law and party discipline in order to pursue private ends, using crooked means; establishing contacts with others, entering by the back door, smuggling, engaging in corruption and graft and taking bribes. Such practices have damaged the interests of the party and the state.

To solve these problems once and for all, the party Central Committee has made particular efforts to check unhealthy tendencies in the economic field since the end of 1981. Thanks to the efforts over the past year and more, gratifying achievements have been made in this regard.

5. Bureaucracy and the practice of cadres seeking special privileges have been checked to some extent. As everybody knows, bureaucracy was once rather serious in our party and government organizations. To check such unhealthy tendencies, the party Central Committee, since its 3d plenary session and especially in the past 2 years, has set strict demands on party members and cadres and stepped up political and ideological work among them.

In addition, the party Central Committee has set about solving such problems institutionally. Since early this year, it has reformed the organizational structure and the cadre system. On the party Central Committee's proposal, the State Council took resolute measures to streamline its administrative structure which must be completed within the specified time. At the same time, the party Central Committee has also been simplifying or streamlining its administrative structure. Now the first phase of the structural streamlining of party and government organizations at the central level has been basically finished. The task of the next phase of structural streamlining at the central level will be still very arduous. Streamlining of the administrative structure in various provinces, municipalities and autonomous regions will also be carried out by stages. Later, reform of the political and economic systems will also be carried out. By carrying out a series of reforms, the administrative structure will become increasingly compact, personnel will become younger and their efficiency will be greater.

Now the party's glorious tradition and fine work style is being revived and developed, the relations between the party and the masses are being improved and the party's prestige is increasing. Of course, we should not be intoxicated with the achievements made. Although our party's work style has been greatly improved, unhealthy tendencies among party members and cadres in many areas and departments remain rather serious.

But we believe that our party's work style certainly will be further improved under the correct leadership of the party Central Committee and with the support of large numbers of party members and the people. Let us confidently make continual efforts to bring about a decisive turn for the better in the party's work style.

REPORT ON NATIONAL DEFENSE TECHNOLOGY, INDUSTRY

[Report: "Science and Technology for National Defense and National Defense Industry Credited With New Achievements"]

[Text] Since the 3d Plenary Session of the 11th CPC Central Committee, in particular, since Comrade Deng Xiaoping took charge of the Central Military Commission, the policy of readjustment, restructuring, reorganization and upgrading has been resolutely implemented in scientific and technological work for national defense and the national defense industry, and achievements have been scored one after another in scientific research and production.

In space science and technology, after the successful launching of a carrier rocket to the waters of the Pacific Ocean in 1980, three satellites were successfully launched for the first time with a carrier rocket in 1981. New progress has also been made in developing new satellites and their carriers.

The performance and quality of conventional arms and equipment such as airplanes, warships, tanks, rifles, guns and radar, have also been somewhat improved. Efforts are now concentrated on developing new models of equipment.

New development has been made in scientific research and production of the nuclear industry. The successful reconstruction of a heavy-water reactor for research purposes and the construction of a reactor for high-flux engineering tests have provided important means for developing the nuclear industry. Outstanding results have been achieved in using nuclear science and technology for peaceful purposes. Preparations for building the first nuclear power station designed and manufactured by China are underway. Isotope and radiation technology has been extensively used in agriculture, industry, medical and health work and scientific research.

Good results have also been obtained in using space science and technology to serve the national economy and scientific research. Preliminary results have also been obtained in transferring the technology of telemetry, remote-control and remote-sensing to industry, medical and health work, forestry monitoring, hydrogeology, deposit prospecting, seismology, oceanography and environmental monitoring.

Various factories of the war industry have adhered to the principle of integrating the army with the people and integrating peacetime with wartime. They have restructured their products according to state plans and the needs of the market and have tried in a thousand and one ways to develop civilian products, some of which are sold on the international market.

RENMIN RIBAO PRAISES BEIJING PLA UNITS' MEETINGS

["Short" commentary: "The Precious Thing Is 'Seriousness'"]

[Text] Party committees at various levels above regiment level in the Beijing PLA units have persisted in the system of democratic life meetings for a long time. This has played the role of enhancing the combat effectiveness of the party committees. Such "serious" spirit and work style are highly commendable.

To do well in convening democratic life meetings, Communist Party members holding leading posts should, first of all earnestly practice what they advocate. In other words, such work should be conscientiously started by party committees at higher levels and party secretaries and deputy party secretaries. Only thus will party committees at higher levels be qualified to set demands on and supervise party committees at lower levels. If they have not done well themselves, it is difficult for them to set strict demands on subordinate units and other people.

The purpose in holding democratic life meetings of party committees is to encourage members of the party committees to state frankly what is on their minds, overcome mistakes, strengthen unity and promote the revolutionization of the party committees. This demands that all members of the party committees be bold in sticking to the truth and actively carrying out healthy discussions of ideas. If everyone tries not to offend another at the meetings, keeps on good terms with everyone at the expense of principle, refuses to carry out strict self-appraisal and criticizes others or merely engages in chitchat and avoids the important and dwells on the trivial while voicing criticism, these meetings are useless no matter how often they are held. Of course, to carry out criticism well, we should eliminate the "leftist" influence and make a distinction between the correct inner-party ideological struggle and the "philosophy of making people suffer" of Lin Biao and the "gang of four." We should stick to the formula of "unity-criticism-unity" and carry forward the fine tradition of the party.

Leading comrades of the party committee of the Beijing PLA units mobilized themselves and went down to the grassroots. They truly supervised, inspected and guided the democratic life meetings of the party committees at lower levels and helped them solve a number of problems in a down-to-earth manner. If they rest content with issuing a number of instructions from above and making job arrangements for units at lower levels and listening to work reports, it is impossible for them to guide party committees at lower levels to achieve good results in conducting democratic life meetings.

If we discover problems at the democratic life meetings, we should solve them conscientiously. The practice of holding "lively talks at meetings without taking specific actions afterward" should not be allowed. We should resolutely correct the work style of empty talk.

Practical experiences of the party committee of the Beijing PLA units and a number of other party committees have proved that as long as leading comrades of party committees at various levels adopt a serious attitude, take effective measures, strengthen guidance and set strict demands on themselves, they can completely make the system of democratic life meetings an institution.

RENMIN RIBAO VIEWS PRICE CONTROL REGULATIONS

[Commentator's article: "Strengthen the Rule of Law; Manage Commodity Prices Well"]

[Text] Commodity circulation can only work through pricing. In a period of economic readjustment, a unified decree governing price control work is urgently needed to ensure harmonious development of production and exchange of commodities. "The Provisional Regulations Governing Price Control" recently promulgated by the State Council are precisely for meeting the needs of development of the national economy. The essential contents of the regulations call for following the principle of bringing into play the supplementary, regulatory role of the market in the planned economy and implementing the policy of unified leadership and gra ed control over pricing work. While ensuring basic price stability as a prerequisi it is necessary to gradually adjust the unreasonable prices in a planned way that will promote the development of production, increase commodity flow and stabilize the people's livelihood.

In light of the different degrees of impact of the various commodities on the national economy and the people's livelihood, three different price forms can be adopted in controlling prices. They are: prices fixed by the state, prices fixed by the enterprises with the range set by state stipulations and trade fair prices. Of the three forms, state fixed prices should be the dominant form. This includes the major commodities which have a decisive bearing on the national economy and the people's livelihood, and accounts for more than 80 percent of total retail sales of social commodities. As to the commodities which are priced by the enterprises within the range set by state stipulations and the goods to be sold in trade fairs, their varieties and quantities greatly exceed those of the commodities to be priced by the state. It has been proved by experiences that establishing rigid control over tens of thousands of less important and piecemeal commodities will not help to promote the commodity economy. More flexible price forms are conducive to promoting the development of production, increasing commodity flow and meeting the requirements of the masses. Anyway, in regard to prices, we should strictly control those which should be controlled and we should properly reduce control over those which should have control reduced.

Like all economic decrees, "The Provisional Regulations Governing Price Control" not only safeguard but also restrict the rights and interests of producers, enterprisers and consumers. Rights and interests stipulated in the regulations should be protected, but those which go beyond the limit of stipulations should be restricted. As a lever for controlling the economy, pricing itself does not create any value. Any adjustment of prices will inevitably increase gains to one party and reduce those of others. Therefore, in seriously implementing the regulations, it is necessary to foster the viewpoint that the part must be subordinated to the whole, and to amplify the idea of the legal system. The regulations with the binding force of laws not only stipulate how prices should be fixed and adjusted, but also specify methods for meeting out rewards and punishments. Every unit and every individual must seriously implement "The Provisional Regulations Governing Price Control." No one should just apply what benefits him in the regulations and ignore what does not benefit him. As a result of things left over by history, the present prices of many commodities in our country are not reasonable.

Readjustment of the prices of major commodities must be made step by step and in a planned way as it will involve and affect various fields of work. Any violation of "The Provisional Regulations Governing Price Control" will be dealt with in accordance with the law. All departments relating to the national economy and all individuals should act in accordance with the regulations. The principle of being strict and fair in meting out rewards and punishments must be applied in order to safeguard the seriousness and authoritativeness of the regulations and protect the rights and interests of producers, enterprisers and consumers.

The implementation of "The Provisional Regulations Governing Price Control" is a strong guarantee for maintaining basic price stability. The limits of authority as prescribed by the regulations over various kinds of commodities are aimed at preventing any unit or individual from readjusting prices at will or raising prices in a disguised form. Under the absolute predominance of public ownership of the means of production, it is absolutely possible for us to tighten control over prices and urge all economic departments, enterprises and institutions to observe price discipline so as to effectively control prices of all commodities in the market, maintain basic price stability, ensure the smooth progress of the four modernizations drive and stabilize the people's livelihood.

RENMIN RIBAO ON SPECIALIZATION OF LEADING BODIES

[Article by Xia Shuzhang [1115 2579 4545]: "On Specialization of Leading Bodies"]

[Text] The CPC Central Committee has required the leading bodies to be "revolutionized, specialized, more knowledgeable and lower in age." Now, let us study the problem of specialization.

First of all, the specialization of leading bodies requires that leading cadres study specialized subjects and that leading cadres be chosen from among specialized personnel. The kind of special knowledge leadership work needs depends on the nature of the work; the main purpose is to do the leadership work well. The principle should be: study according to the needs and employ a person according to his good points. If his knowledge and good points cannot meet the needs, it would be difficult to play his role, and if we employ him according to his shortcomings, it would be extremely inappropriate. For instance, it would be much more proper to let a person who had previously specialized in medical administration or hospital management to hold the title of director of a modern hospital than to ask a skilled doctor to assume the role. At present, we are very short of specialized personnel. Therefore, it is imperative that work be carefully arranged for them.

To be sure, the specialization of leading bodies is for the purpose of practicing leadership by experts. Broadly speaking, professional knowledge is always relative. It would be impossible for a leading cadre engaged in overall leadership work to be an expert in every aspect. But he must understand the mutual relationship, common law, policy and tactics of all the work and possess certain administrative and management knowledge, capabilities and experiences. Then he is qualified for his work. We cannot demand that a provincial governor, a mayor or a county magistrate know everything. A president of a university may have academic specialities but this does not mean that he is proficient in all the subjects and in administrative affairs. It is not good to be a complete layman; neither is it possible to be a perfect expert. Therefore, the problem of how to get the appropriate balance merits study.

Second, whether or not the specialized leading bodies can do leadership work well depends on many subjective and objective factors. In addition to fitting a job to one's special training, there is also a relationship with a person's interests, morality, capability, age, health and experiences.

Leadership work is different from the characteristics of specialized work in general, and because a person is good at a certain speciality does not mean that he is good at everything. If a special-class cook who is no good at management and administration work manages the business of a restaurant, even though business may be fair, the loss will outweigh the gain. Therefore, experts can be leaders, but not every expert is suitable for leadership work.

On the question of a person's interests, there may be changes in the specialities people engage in. Is it a good thing to change one's profession? We cannot state a general conclusion. If Li Shizhen had not resigned from the post of county officer, he would not have achieved the historical success in compiling the great book "Compendium of Materia Medica." He was right to change his profession. Dr Sun Yat-sen was also right in giving up the medical profession and engaging himself in leading the people to overthrow the imperialist system and becoming a revolutionary forerunner. But in the course of socialist construction, if we appoint a scientist with considerable achievements and bright prospects to administrative leadership, which he is neither good at nor willing to do, it would be better not to change his profession. As for honorary titles, that should be regarded as a different matter.

Amateurs can be transformed into experts through planned training. Specialized work that is clear is, in general, easily understood. However, a speciality that is ignored or misunderstood needs to be explained. For example, the administrative management mentioned above is not a trade of the "jack of all trades and master of none" character, as it is considered by some people; it is a trade that has its speciality. The problems of administrative procedure, methodology, public relations and policy decision all need to be specially studied. If we apply the priniple of the science of systematic engineering to administrative management and form a fine system of administrative management or draw up an optimum working scheme, then it would become a new developing trend. In the past, we lightly treated administrative work that required strong specialization, so it is no wonder we had low effects in our administrative work.

Third, if after the specialized personnel perform leadership work, apply their study to work, work well without a hitch and achieve marked results, it means that they have achieved satisfaction in both their specialization and leadership work. If they are separated from their speciality, lead poorly and work hard but to no avail, then they suffer in both areas. Some have a leadership title only in name and still practice their speciality; others give up their speciality and do their utmost in leadership work. Although inclining to one side is slightly better than suffering on both, after all, this is a different thing from the specialization of leading bodies.

There is a primary and secondary difference in specialized requirements in the specialization of leading bodies. We cannot attend to trifles to the neglect of essentials. A manager of a big department store is mainly good at managing and running a business, and whether he has any other special skills is insignificant. As for those specialized personnel who are not suitable and not willing to do leadership work, it would be much better to be practical than to force things. Not directly participating in leadership work but assisting such work with their special skills and acting as an adviser or consultant and supplying information is also a method we can use. In this way, we can make up for insufficiencies in the specialization of leading bodies. However, besides being resourceful, we must be decisive. Whether we can be successful depends on the leaders' ability to make a choice. This is a test of the extent of specialization of leading bodies, because amateurs may not accept the opinions of experts.

Finally, the influence of all the above-mentioned points is gradually forming into a general mood, and if the general mood takes shape, it will have much greater influence. For instance, a speciality neglected due to narrow comprehension is difficult to resume and develop; experts with jobs not suited to their training who enter the leading bodies merely announce that administrative and leadership work do not need special training; to assign or promote people heedless of the demands of the specialized nature of the leading bodies may cause a negative mood of not striving for constant improvement among the specialized personnel at their posts; and so on and so forth. If these problems are properly handled, it may have a good effect and form a good general mood. The kind of leading body to build is a sensitive problem. What you propose and encourage does not depend on what you say but what you do. General moods and influences are like invisible batons and are very efficacious.

It is said that a certain research unit has planned to use a system whereby research personnel hold leading posts for 2 years in turn, which they call making contributions (to leadership work) in turn sacrificing (their specialized profession) in turn. This clearly shows that there are contradictions between leadership and specialized work there. It is fair to make a contribution after making sacrifices, but if there is no contribution after sacrifices or the sacrifices exceed the contribution, then we must try to seek some other, better way. There are also some institutions that have too many deputy leaders who have special skills. For the sake of avoiding a situation in which everyone is up to his ears in work and not able to pursue his own profession, then try out each leader in the post of routine work deputy head in turn. So, if the leaders shift about like a merry-go-round, how can we compare their responsibilities and achievements?

Therefore, there still exist many problems in determining how to specialize the leading bodies, problems ranging from cognition to practice. The pressing matter at the moment is to investigate further, grasp some practical materials, constantly sum up and enhance them, and advance successively in a gradual and effective way.

SEVERAL POWERPLANTS COMPLETED, UNDER CONSTRUCTION

[Text] Beijing, August 17 (XINHUA) -- Three generating units with a combined capacity of 450,000 kilowatts were put into operation in the first seven months this year, according to the Ministry of Water Resources and Electric Power.

Another 11 generating units are scheduled to be completed between now and the end of this year, producing a combined capacity of 1.4 million kilowatts, the ministry said.

The units already in operation include the first generating unit of the Hulan Ergi thermal power plant in northermost Heilongjiang Province, the third generating units of China's largest hyroelectric power station at Gezhouba on the Yangtze in Hubei Province, and the fourth generating unit of the Shiliquan thermal power plant in Shandong Province.

In all, 62 large and medium-sized electric power plants, with a total capacity of more than 20 million kilowatts, are being built in China, and work on another nine was scheduled to be started soon, the ministry said.

The 62 power plants, to be put into operation separately in the next eight years, are expected to generate 100,000 million kilowatt-hours of electricity a year -- a third of China's total electricity output in 1981. They include 38 thermal power plants and 24 hydroelectricity power plants.

The fourth and fifth generating units for the Gezhouba hydroelectric power station are expected to go on stream this year. The station will have 21 power generating units with a designed capacity of 2,715,000 kilowatts.

Some of the other generating units scheduled to turn our electricitv before the end of this year are part of the Wujiangdu hydroelectric power station on the Wujiang River in Guizhou Province and thermal power plants in Liaoning, Anhui, Hubei, Hebei and Gansu Provinces.

Most of the thermal power plants are being built near coal mining areas to reduce the cost and time of transporting coal long distances as well as the strain on railways.

Two 500,000-volt power transmission lines are now under construction: the 620-kilometer line from the Yuanbaoshan power plant in Inner Mongolia to Liaoyang in Liaoning Province; and the 300-kilometer line linking the power plants at Datong and Shentou coal mining areas in Shanxi Province with Beijing and Tianjin.

China has emphasized expansion of the energy industry during the current economic readjustment. Last year, for example, the total electricity output came to 309,300 million kilowatt-hours, 20 percent over that in 1978. In the first six months of this year, the power output increased 6.9 percent, compared with the corresponding period of last year.

However, there is still a tension in the supply of electricity, since industrial and agricultural production has developed rapidly in recent years. China has adopted policies and measures to boost its power industry, including encouraging the local authorities to co-operate with the central authorities, or to undertake projects independently.

FARM MACHINERY PRODUCTION, SALES INCREASE

[Text] Beijing, August 25 (XINHUA) -- China registered increases in production of farm machinery and sales between January and July this year compared with the same 1981 period, according to the Ministry of Machine-Building Industry.

Production of hand tractors ranging between several to 20 horsepower was 174,000, a 43 percent growth; hand sprayers 5.32 million, a 37 percent increase; rubber-tired handcarts 7.2 million, up 65 percent; and pumps 403,000, up 45 percent, a spokesman for the ministry's agricultural machinery bureau said.

Increases were also recorded in output of small diesel engines up to 20 horsepower, small farm produce processing machinery, threshers, plant protection machinery and mechanized chicken-raising equipment, he said.

According to statistics from commercial departments, farm machinery sales in China in the January-June period were 3,000 million yuan, eight percent higher than the same 1981 period, he said. Increases in sales of semi-mechanized farm implements, hand tractors, pumps and rubber-tired handcarts ranged from 24 to 36 percent.

The spokesman attributed the increases to the job responsibility system diversification of the rural economy which have raised the income of the peasants. He predicted peasants demand for small farm machinery and semi-mechanized implements would continue to rise this year and next year.

JOURNAL REPORTS INCREASES IN FOREIGN TRADE

[Text] Beijing, August 25 (XINHUA) -- China reports an average annual increase of 28.9 percent in the total value of its exports between 1979 and 1981, bringing the 1981 total export value to 20.9 billion U.S. dollars, according to a CHINA FINANCE AND TRADE JOURNAL report.

The gain is manifest in the following areas:

-- China's total export value in 1981 had for the first time surpassed one percent of the world's total value of exports since 1967;

-- The number of China's commodities ranking first in terms of export value in world trade has increased to 27 kinds, including: pig bristles, feather, rabbit hair, goatskins, cashmere, rosin, green tea, honey, menthol, peppermint oil, cassia bark, fireworks, frozen rabbit meat, filature silk, cotton cloth, freshwater cultured pearls, drawnwork, tungsten ore, antimony, black fungus, straw and willot plaited articles, raw lacquer, Chinese crude drugs and ceramics;

SUGGESTIONS FOR REVISION OF DRAFT CONSTITUTION

[Text] Beijing, August 25 (XINHUA) -- Establishment of a constitution day and the holding of a swearing-in ceremony for state leaders are among the suggestions for further revision of the draft of the revised constitution raised by the people from all parts of the country and overseas Chinese, according to the National Constitutional Revision Committee here today.

The suggestions were made at local discussions across the country over the past four months in which millions of workers, peasants, cadres and soldiers took part or in letters to the committee, many by overseas Chinese.

Apart from hailing the draft as a better constitution than the previous three ones, the letters offered some concrete and constructive suggestions for further revision. The Constitutional Revision Committee will, in accordance with views gathered from the people, further revise the draft before submitting it for examination to the Fifth Plenary Session of the Fifth National People's Congress scheduled to meet in November.

Ninety-one-year-old jurist Wang Zhixiang suggested that the date of the promulgation of the constitution be established as "Constitution Day". The chairman of the state and leaders of the State Council should swear their allegiance to uphold the constitution at a formal ceremony to show respect for the constitution, an overseas Chinese in Singapore proposed.

A veteran educator in Hunan Province, Li Er, suggested that the provisions on educational policy in the constitution include aesthetic concepts as an important aspect in the building up of the country's socialist ethics.

The draft in the Han language and local minority languages was brought to workshops, production teams and army units, to Mongolian yurts on the grasslands and to forest areas deep in the mountains.

In the Xinjiang Uygur Autonomous Region, more than 4.5 million copies in the Uygur, Mongolian, Kazak, Kergez, Xibo and Han languages were sent to the cities, agricultural and pastoral areas.

Radios, televisions, wall-papers, lectures and discussions have been used to encourage public discussion throughout the country.

Leaders of the standing committees of the people's congresses of the provinces, municipalities and autonomous regions went to the grass-roots organizations to collect opinions from the people.

Minority people highlighted their discussions on provisions about regional national autonomy and their political status. The people of Hezhe, China's smallest nationality, with a population of only some 800 in Heilongjiang Province, and the Elunchuns, one of the smallest nationalities in the country, were overjoyed at the provisions on equal political status for all the nationalities.

TRADE UNION LEADER ON DRAFT REVISED CONSTITUTION

[Text] Beijing, August 26 (XINHUA) -- The draft of the nation's revised constitution has expanded the democratic rights of the Chinese workers in their political and social life, said Gu Dachun, vice-president of the All-China Federation of Trade Unions, in an interview with XINHUA.

The union leader said that the draft which is to be submitted to the National People's Congress in November, includes several provisions to this effect.

The draft constitution provides in the section covering general principles that: The People's Republic of China is a socialist state, governed under the peoples democratic dictatorship and led by the working class, based on the alliance of workers and peasants; that all power in the People's Republic of China belongs to the people; and that the people have the right to administer affairs of the state and its economic, cultural and social affairs, according to provisions of the law, through various channels and in various forms.

He said what is especially noteworthy is that the draft provides that "workers and staff members of state enterprises participate in the management of their respective organizations through the congresses of workers and staff members and other channels, in accordance with provisions of the law." This new section fully reflects the workers status as masters of the state, he said.

The congress of workers and staff members is an organ of power for workers and staff to participate in decision-making and management and to supervise cadres. Congresses of this kind have been established in more than 80 percent of the big and medium-sized enterprises in China's major industrial cities.

Gu Dachun said that the new provision will promote development and continued improvement of the system of workers congress.

The draft does not provide for the citizens freedom to strike as the 1975 and 1978 Constitutions did. The trade union leader said that this is reasonable, since experience in the past few years has demonstrated that workers can use various ways and means other than a strike to protect their rights and interests from being infringed upon by bureaucratic enterprise leaders. He said it is because China is a socialist country led by the working class and the interests of the state and those of the working class and other laboring people coincide.

He listed ways and means available for the people to exercise their democratic rights: the people's congresses at various levels, direct election of deputies to people's congresses at or below county level, conducting criticism and self-criticism through newspapers and magazines, writing letters to relevant organizations and departments, and the system of workers congress.

"As a matter of fact," he said, "there have been few cases of strikes in the recent past. So, provision for freedom in this field is of little practical value.

"Of course, the lack of provision for freedom to strike does not mean that there exists a prohibition against strikes, nor does it mean that all strikes are illegal."

EDITORIAL ON ENVIRONMENTAL POLLUTION, OUTPUT

[Editorial: "Closely Combine Environmental Protection With Production Development"]

[Text] A good living environment and natural surroundings are signs denoting a country strong and prosperous, a happy life for the people and social civilization. After nearly 10 years of efforts, and in particular, since the 3d Plenary Session of the 11th CPC Central Committee, great achievements have been made in environmental protection. However, due to the long-term incorrect understanding of the importance of environmental protection, we never took this into consideration when conducting industrial production and construction. Most of the factories have not adopted technical preventive measures against pollution. As a result, environmental pollution and the destruction of living things have reached an acute stage. This should arouse our close attention.

While developing production, we should pay attention to environmental protection. We can develop production by doing a good job in environmental protection. It is wrong to only take present production needs into account by disregarding the pollution and destruction of the environment and developing production at the expense of the environment. We should consider both production and living things and we should closely combine environmental protection with production development.

Industrial pollution must be dealt with. However, at present, due to financial difficulty, the state cannot allocate large funds for this purpose. To prevent pollution, we should proceed in all cases from the national situation, and persist in the policy of self-reliance and the principle that those who contaminate the environment will bear the responsibility of handling the pollution. We should principally rely on the forces of the industrial departments and enterprises, and exploit their potential so that they can resolve the pollution problem themselves. It is not necessary to spend a lot of money on the pollution problem so long as we can take preventive measures earlier. But it will cost even more money and the problem will be more complicated if we delay in solving the pollution problem. One of the main reasons for industrial and enterprise pollution resides in enterprise maladministration.

Enterprise readjustment should include the following measures: strengthening environmental administration and control pollution. This is an important sign for inspecting the results of readjustment. Environmental administration should be a link in the chain of enterprise management and the production process. We should do a good job in environmental protection while we are carrying out industrial production. It is necessary to establish corresponding organs to take charge of environmental protection, set up economic responsibility systems, implement responsibility systems for managers and chief engineers who take charge of the environmental protection of the enterprise, explicitly stipulate the economic responsibility for environmental protection which the enterprises bear for society and the staff and workers for the enterprises, link responsibility, rights and interests with the environmental impact of the enterprises, and decide on awards through points and discussion based on production and economic results.

In China, most of the enterprises have outdated technology and equipment, which causes high consumption of resources and energy and various forms of waste. To carry out technical reform in the existing industries and enterprises constitutes an important policy for national economic construction, and is also an effective way to deal with industrial pollution. All enterprises and departments responsible for the work must strive to prevent pollution by taking this as an important goal in achieving technical reform. They must actively make efforts to solve the pollution problem by reforming technology and renewing equipment. They must raise efficiency while making use of resources and energy and convert them to produce to the maximum. They must pay special attention to raising the level of comprehensive utilization, adopt recycling measures, break down the boundaries between enterprises, practice indiscriminating application among factories and salvage useful materials from the three wastes (waste gas, waste-water and industrial residue). They should carefully ensure that the three wastes are technologically exhausted, and meet the state's exhaust standards.

Many areas of the country are seriously polluted and this is mainly due to irrational industrial planning. While carrying out industrial readjustment and reform, industrial plans should be correctly arranged according to general urban plans. Construction of all factories and enterprises should be based on urban characteristics, correspond to urban development, and be limited by the urban environmental conditions. We should strictly carry out the measures for protecting the environment; these measures should be simultaneously designed, built and put into operation together with any key projects. It is forbidden to indiscriminately build or rebuild and extend a factory. In the future, enterprises and institutions that pollute the environment may not be built in densely populated areas and in the protected areas of river headwaters as well as in scenic and sightseeing spots. Some enterprises, which are irrationally planned, seriously pollute the environment or are difficult to deal with, must be resolutely closed or moved out according to specific conditions. In reorganizing industry along specialized lines, we should gradually set up specialized cooperative centers for the different trades. We should concentrate the separate factories which pollute their surroundings in order to centralize management of the "three wastes" and to raise productivity. Urban factories are absolutely not allowed to shift pollution-causing production to the commune and brigade enterprises, which lack preventive measures against pollution.

The prevention of industrial pollution, and the protection and improvement of the environment, are closely related to all economic fields as well as all industrial departments. Governments at all levels should put this matter on the agenda and strengthen leadership over it. All departments concerned should take concerted action, go deep into the realities of life, make investigations, sum up experiences, make overall planning, coordination and supervision, and help enterprises solve the problem of environmental pollution through various means.

To protect and improve the environment is an important task for developing the national economy and society. It is a component part in creating material civilization and socialist spiritual civilization. We should resolutely adhere to the decrees and stipulation of the state, go into action, promote prevention work concerning pollution, rapidly reverse the serious trend of industrial pollution and strive to achieve coordinated development in industrial construction and environmental protection.

ZHANG JINGFU URGES BETTER ENTERPRISE MANAGEMENT

[Text] Beijing, 24 Aug (XINHUA) -- At the national meeting on strengthening enterprise financial management and improving economic results which ended today, Zhang Jingfu, state councillor and minister in charge of the State Economic Commission, said that in the course of consolidating enterprises priority must be given to consolidating financial administration and accounting. He said: Consolidating the financial administration and accounting in enterprises is one of the five contents of the overall consolidation of enterprises. With enterprises shifting from the production mode to the production management mode, the position and role of financial administration and accounting will become more important.

In his speech Zhang Jingfu proposed that the consolidation of enterprises should include steps to see that leading groups in charge of enterprise consolidation in various areas and departments include comrades from financial departments; that the consolidation of enterprises include the consolidation of financial administration and accounting; that the first group of key enterprises must be consolidated; that financial departments of an equal level must dispatch personnel to participate; that various responsible departments at the central level must not only do well in consolidating the financial administration of directly subordinate enterprises but must also help localities in consolidating the financial administration of local enterprises of respective trades; and that enterprise consolidation will not end as long as there is still work to be done in consolidating financial administration and accounting.

In his speech Zhang Jingfu pointed out, financial administration and accounting in enterprises must be consolidated painstakingly and seriously and not only in form. The basic work of bookkeeping, auditing and analysis of economic activities should be done well and in a down-to-earth manner. Only by doing the basic work well will management improve and economic results rise. It is necessary to combine the work of consolidating financial discipline with that of consolidating financial administration and accounting, and general financial inspection, Problems discovered in the course of the general financial inspection should be solved conscientiously by consolidating enterprises. Leading persons of enterprises must foster a sense of the whole situation and of the legal system, and correctly handle relations among the state, enterprises, workers and staff. Financial departments must concentrate on the work of consolidating and strengthening financial administration and accounting in the next several years. They must be willing to dispatch their key members to devote 90 percent of their energies toward making this task a success. With enterprises consolidated and improved economic results, financial work will sail smoothly, thus providing work initiative. Financial departments, responsible departments of enterprises and grassroots enterprises must initiate activities to train financial and accounting personnel and raise their ideological level and professional efficiency.

Zhang Jingfu called on the broad masses of financial cadres and financial-accounting personnel to go deep into the realities of life, conduct investigation and study, study new things and seek solutions to new problems in a practical manner in order to further mobilize the initiative from all quarters and continuously develop the economic results already achieved.

ACHIEVEMENTS IN EDUCATIONAL WORK REPORTED

[Text] China has made gratifying achievements in educational work since the conclusion of the 3d plenary session of the party's 11th Central Committee and attained the goal of achieving initial success within 5 years as prescribed by Comrade Deng Xiaoping in August 1977.

With the implementation of the principles of readjustment, restructuring, reorganization and upgrading in the education front after the third plenary session, the proportional relationship between educational undertakings and economic construction has been initially readjusted. In the past few years, investments in education have increased gradually despite state financial difficulties. From 1979 to 1981 the education budget increased from 9.95 percent to 13.5 percent of the state's budget for all enterprises and undertakings, and the state's investments in education increased from 1 percent to 3 percent of the state's total investments in capital construction.

Initial success has also been achieved in readjusting the unreasonable imbalance within the educational sphere. In the past few years, restructuring of secondary education has resulted in less regular senior middle schools and more urban vocational schools and other vocational classes and schools. The number of students in these schools as well as in agricultural middle schools, schools for mechanics and secondary technical schools, has markedly increased.

Greater developments have taken place in higher education. The number of full-time institutes of higher learning increased from 392 in 1976 to 704 in 1981 with their total enrollment increasing from 564,700 to 1,279,500. Since 1978 a total of 32,000 post-graduate students have been enrolled. This is 38.6 percent greater than the total enrollment in all the 17 years before the Great Cultural Revolution.

Scientific research and experiment work in universities and colleges has been stepped up in the past few years. In the 4 years from 1978 to 1981, universities and colleges directly under the Ministry of Education alone conducted 924 major research and experiment projects.

Political and ideological work has also been strengthened in all kinds of schools at all levels in the past few years to enable students to mature morally, intellectually, physically and in discipline. A new socialist generation of young people is healthily growing up.

CENTRAL PARTY SCHOOL TRAINS 17,883 CADRES

[Report by XINHUA reporter Zou Aiguo]

[Text] Beijing, 24 Aug (XINHUA) -- Since its restoration in 1977, the Central Party School, persistently implementing the educational policy of arming cadres with the basic principles of Marxism and raising senior and middle cadres' level of understanding Marxism-Leninism-Mao Zedong Thought, has trained or trained on a rotational basis 17,883 senior and middle party cadres, middle-aged and young cadres and propaganda and theoretical cadres, 2.6 times the total number of cadres trained in the 18 years before the "Great Cultural Revolution." Such large-scale training of cadres is unprecedented in the history of the party school.

Following the downfall of the "gang of four," the party Central Committee decided to restore and strengthen the Central Party School and made the "Decision on Running Party Schools Well at All Levels." The party Central Committee called for party cadres, especially senior and middle leading cadres, to raise their level of understanding of Marxism-Leninism-Mao Zedong Thought and to revive and carry forward the party's fine tradition by engaging in studies at party schools. In accordance with the party Central Committee's decision, the Central Party School has run 7 rotational training classes for senior and middle party cadres, 5 theoretical study classes and 2 training classes for middle-aged and young cadres in the past 5 years. In addition, the Central Party School has also run 3 rotational training classes outside the school in coordination with the departments directly under the CPC Central Committee, central state organs, the PLA and the Beijing municipal party committee. After attending the party school, the overwhelming majority of the students have made progress or improvement in varying degrees in comprehensively and accurately grasping the scientific system of Marxism-Leninism-Mao Zedong Thought, conscientiously implementing the party's lines, principles and policies laid down since the 3d Plenary Session of the 11th CPC Central Committee and in strengthening their party spirit and following the correct way of thinking. While training cadres on a large scale, the Central Party School has also carried out theoretical work with unprecedented vigor, thus making an important contribution to bringing order out of chaos on the theoretical front.

An important characteristic of the teachings of the Central Party School is requiring its students to comprehensively and accurately grasp the scientific system of Marxism-Leninism-Mao Zedong Thought. In view of the distortions or tamperings with Marxism-Leninism-Mao Zedong Thought by Lin Biao and the "gang of four," the Central Party School retranslated about 1 million words of Marxist-Leninist works and compiled them into the "Selected Readings From the Works of Marx, Lenin and Mao Zedong" as its teaching material. The party school requires its students to understand the basic principles of Marxism; to carry forward the study style of seeking truth from facts, proceeding from reality in everything and integrating theory with practice; and to use the Marxist stand, viewpoint and method to observe, analyze and study new situations and to sum up fresh experiences. The party school pays particular attention to grasping some key questions and guiding students to bring order out of chaos on the theoretical front. In teaching philosophical subjects at the three rotational training classes for senior and middle cadres a few years ago, the party school, in view of the viewpoint of the "two whatevers" prevailing at that time, particularly made time for the students to discuss penetratingly the criterion of truth. Through the discussion, the students emancipated their minds and clarified many questions of right and wrong; in light of the viewpoint that practice is the sole criterion for the test of truth, they summed up their experiences and lessons in connection with the actual conditions in their work, holding that the work of leadership was mainly affected by "leftist" ideas.

After summing up experience, many students have realized that we will make achievements in our work and win the masses' support whenever we value materialism and dialectics and act in the spirit of seeking truth from facts. Conversely, things will go contrary to our wishes if we violate the principle of seeking truth from facts and fail to proceed from reality. Straying from the principle of seeking truth from facts is equal to abandoning materialism and dialectics. In that way, we will lose the basis for our work. Some students regard their becoming believers in materialism and dialectics as the benefit of their study. They pledge to repudiate metaphysics and book worship and to seek truth in their work from now on.

In the course of teaching political economics, the Central Party School first teaches the students basic Marxist theories and then organizes them to hold discussions on special themes in connection with the line, principles and policies adopted by the party since the 3d Plenary Session of the 11th CPC Central Committee in order to strengthen their confidence and determination to accomplish the four modernizations. In the course of study, many students have seriously studied the new circumstances and new problems concerning the current four modernizations program and offered their opinions and suggestions to the departments concerned. The students have made recommendations on the reform of the economic management system, on various problems concerning capital construction that are awaiting immediate solution, on the development of animal husbandry and on the improvement of the long-standing backwardness in agriculture in cold and lofty mountain regions and in outlying minority nationality regions. Their recommendations have aroused the attention and admiration of the departments concerned because they provide meaningful guidance on actual work.

In order to accelerate the process of making the cadre force revolutionized, younger, better educated and more professional, the Central Party School held two training classes for middle-aged and young cadres. The two classes taught basic modern science and technology and economic management in addition to philosophy, scientific socialism, political economics, the history of the Communist Party of China and party building. The courses have enriched the students' knowledge, enhanced their interest in studying economic questions and enabled them to lay a foundation for pursuing further studies at their workposts henceforth.

In the course of teaching and other activities, the CPC Central Party School attaches great importance to the restoration of the work style of the school in seeking truth from facts. Since it held the first rotational training class for high-level and middle-level cadres in October 1977, it has announced its determination to adhere to the principle of the "four not's" -- that is, do not seize on the shortcomings of others and blow them up, do not put labels on people, do not use the big stick and do not fill the sack [bu zhuang dai zi 008 5944 5915 1311]. Many old comrades have said that in the party school they can fully discuss important party and state affairs and say whatever they want to say and that they feel the warmth of the party's fine work style which has been restored and carried forward.

RENMIN RIBAO EXAMINES JOINT VENTURE OPERATIONS

[Article by Hui Yuanying [1920 0337 5391]: "Several Questions About Successful Running of Chinese-Foreign Joint Ventures"]

[Text] Since the implementation of the open-door policy, China's efforts to establish Chinese-foreign ventures have had a good beginning. In order to step up the pace of Chinese-foreign joint ventures, it is very necessary to sum up the past previous experience and raise the level of our understanding of some of the problems related to joint ventures.

1. The first condition for success or failure of joint ventures is to methodically choose projects and conduct feasibility studies. In the past, because of a lack of experience and planning, many foreign investors found problems when trying to enter into joint ventures and we on our part were too hasty. This kind of "charging into battle" approach frequently resulted in blind action and, lacking feasibility studies, projects soon became bogged down in themselves. Presently, Shanghai has already adopted a new approach to joint ventures. They have unified the city's economic readjustment and development programs. The foreign trade and economic relations departments, together with the planning and economic committees and the industrial departments, assign priorities for the technical reforms of the existing enterprises. Starting with trade and production plans, they formulated plans for the best use of foreign capital and planned projects for the introduction of foreign technology, then according to the requirements of the projects, looked for suitable participants in joint ventures. In order to cope with the lack of economic advisers in trade negotiations and the poor standard of professional work, Shanghai has adopted the approach that "the wisdom of the many exceeds that of the wise." Accordingly, some leading ministries organized expert negotiation teams, and they included participants from the trust investment corporation, foreign trade, finance, taxation and other departments, the Academy of Social Sciences, the public accounts department, and lawyers who formed an advisory board for conducting serious feasibility studies of joint ventures. Practice has confirmed the efficacy of this method.

Shekou, the industrial area of the Shenzhen Special Economic Zone is an important way to attract foreign capital in Chinese-foreign joint ventures. On the part of the leadership there, they have a good grasp on project requirements, that is, those projects slated for development must stimulate international economic cooperation and the flow of technology, especially the up and coming, advanced technologies, and stimulate those areas which China needs to develop. They have also recommended five things to be avoided: 1) serious pollution that cannot be resolved; 2) old and outdated equipment; 3) production of commodities subject to quotas outside of China; 4) compensation trade; 5) processing imported materials. When the joint venture projects are chosen according to correct policy, then the work goes relatively smoothly and better results are achieved in the economy and the growth of technology.

On the other hand, some projects chosen for joint cooperation were largely failures because the feasibility studies were not good enough and they were acted upon blindly. Some projects, although they began well, failed in the long run, because they just assembled and processed imported materials and nothing was achieved in terms of experience in the management process, and as well, no headway was made into the international market. Others were failures because contracts were signed even before reasibility studies were conducted, some production commitments from beginning to end could not be met, and hasty signing of project agreements led to internal enterprises contending for raw materials and markets, which only redoubled the difficulties. This lesson should be a warning.

2. Insistence on mutual profit-sharing in Chinese-foreign joint ventures is crucial to the positive management role both sides must engage in. Foreign investors in China are basically motivated by profit. We should adopt a correct approach to this question and permit foreign investors their due share of profits. Under the principles of mutual profit-sharing and foreign trade joint ventures, the capitalist invests money, we profit, and in the long-range view, all of the possible advantages are greater. Most of our personnel presently engaged in joint ventures recognize this, and their working relations with the foreign investors are relatively good. They invest energy in cooperation and things are well run; whereas there are some, who lack a clear understanding of the foreign investors participation in the operations, their rights to profit and so on, and these incorrect attitudes do not allow for smooth operations.

3. Distinguish between different situations and correctly handle the relationship between marketing commodities internally and in foreign markets. The correct resolution of this problem is essential to the development of joint ventures. Ordinarily, foreign investors would like their products to enter the Chinese market. On our part, we are interested in increasing exports, foreign exchange, and at the very least, joint ventures should be able to balance foreign currency revenues and expenditures. In fact, before we initiate joint ventures, aside from taking into consideration the stability of certain goods on the international market, and the foreign investors marketing abilities, we still must work from the actual conditions of both sides and consider carrying out the following choices: 1) products that are in great demand and sell well on the international market should all be exported; 2) we should consider temporarily reducing the export proportion of those goods which are in short supply in China; 3) the contradictions between Chinese and foreign markets being very great, we should open up new avenues for foreign participation. For example, we should adopt multilateral methods of cooperation and make equipment suppliers and traders with access to markets work together or adopt the method of "import substitution," like the joint Chinese-American Shanghai Automation Instruments Corporation. Once their operations are underway, their products will be supplied to the Baoshan steel complex and the Jinshan petrochemical works to cut down on expenditure of foreign exchange. These methods once employed, after a certain period of time will reduce the problems of marketing commodities.

4. Create the right conditions to swiftly grasp joint marketing potential. Presently in joint ventures it is the foreign investors who take care of the marketing of commodities and the purchases of raw materials, while on our part only a few are directly involved in these operations. This is not advantageous to our understanding of the price changes on the international market, nor does it increase our command of international economic activity. If this continues, when contracts expire we will not be able to strike out independently. Therefore, we must mobilize enthusiasm and make a step towards greater control of supply and marketing activities.

Responsible comrades of the provincial CPC committee Ren Zhongyi, Liu Tianfu, and Liang Lingguang were present at the closing session. Comrades Ren Zhongyi and Liu Tianfu spoke.

The meeting held: The province's political and economic situation has changed profoundly since the third plenary session, and political and legal work has also gradually embarked on the path of performing according to the law. There has been a notable improvement in social order. Social stability and the masses' sense of security have increased. However, Guangdong borders Hong Kong and Macao, and the struggle has always been sharp and complex. Political and legal work has faced many complicated new situations and problems since the province instituted its special policies and flexible measures. In view of this new situation, the outstanding tasks in the province's political and legal work for a time to come are as follows:

1. Deal resolute blows to serious economic crime. It is particularly necessary to investigate and handle major and important cases. We must deal severely and swiftly, in accordance with law, with criminals who do serious economic sabotage. Capital punishment must be meted out in the worst cases. We must unswervingly practice the policy of opening up to the world and enlivening the domestic economy, and deal blows to economic crime. We must resolutely correct the phenomenon of substituting fines for punishment. The meeting also held: The whole party should get to work, get a good grasp of solving the problems in a comprehensive way and continue to tidy up social order in the urban and rural areas. This is also an important current task in political and legal work. The focus in this comprehensive treatment is to promote education for young people and juveniles.

HENAN HOLDS SUMMER GRAIN PRODUCTION CONFERENCE

[Summary] The Henan provincial conference on summer grain production was held in Gong County 6-12 August. The conference summed up experiences in summer grain production and looked into and worked out the plan and measures for summer grain production next year. The conference put forth the new objective of a struggle for summer grain production.

The conference pointed out that the province reaped a bumper summer grain harvest this year. The province's total output of summer grain was 22.7 billion jin. The province overfulfilled its quota by 8 percent. Output of rapeseed was 10 percent higher than last year. The province overfulfilled its quota for summer grain procurement by 25 percent.

The conference pointed out that the area sown with wheat in 72 medium- and low-yield counties in our province amounts to some 40 million mu, which accounts for about 60 percent of the sown areas in the whole province. Since the province set up the medium- and low-yield areas leadership group in 1978, some responsible comrades of the provincial CPC committee and the provincial government have regularly gone to these places to give guidance, readjust the arrangements for crops, popularize science and technology and support them materially. The appearance of the medium- and low-yield areas has been greatly changed. Total output of summer grain of Nanyang, Zhoukou, Zhumadian and Xinyang Prefectures was 10.93 billion jin, 1.53 billion more than last year.

The conference emphatically pointed out: "Although our province has achieved very great results in wheat production, the production potential is still very great.

"To further speed up wheat production, leaders at all levels must apply and popularize this summer's experiences in production and enthusiastically lead the masses throughout the province, fully mobilize all kinds of positive factors, give play to all favorable conditions and further tap production potential in order to make a new breakthrough in wheat production next year. We must make sustained and redoubled efforts and advance toward the new objective of summer grain production."

At the conference, Liu Yingxiang, vice chairman of the provincial agricultural committee, delivered a speech entitled "Clearly Understand the New Situation, Sum Up New Experiences and Advance Toward the New Objective for Summer Grain Production." Vice Governor Cui Guanghua made a summing-up report. Representatives of high-yielding communes and brigades and households whose output is 10,000 jin who attended the conference, issued a written proposal to all cadres and commune members in the rural areas throughout the province.

[Station commentary: "Advance Toward the New Objective of Summer Grain Production]

[Excerpts] The recent conference on summer grain production put forth to all peasants and comrades on the agricultural front throughout the province the objective of a struggle which must be achieved in wheat production in 3 years. The conference demanded that we strive for a new breakthrough in wheat production next year, open up a new situation in 2 years and achieve the new objective in 3 years. This new objective is heartening and arduous and can be achieved under favorable conditions and after making efforts. Let us practically and realistically analyze the favorable conditions for making a new breakthrough in wheat production, opening up a new situation and achieving the new objective.

1. This point is of primary importance: Since the 3d Plenary Session of the 11th CPC Central Committee, all places have constantly reviewed and perfected all forms of the production responsibility system and greatly inspired the socialist enthusiasm of grass-roots cadres and the masses of peasants. This is a guarantee for us to reap a bumper wheat harvest next year.

2. Over the past few years, all places have vigorously done well in farmland capital construction concerning water, soil and manure. The conditions for production have been improved relatively greatly. This is a material foundation for reaping a bumper summer grain harvest.

3. The cadres' and masses' level of scientifically cultivating and tending wheat has been raised relatively greatly. The techniques of cultivating wheat have been grasped by more cadres and people. A large number of typical examples in achieving high yields of wheat have emerged this year, and they have provided examples and experience in greatly increasing wheat output.

4. The whole province has had a large number of cadres involved in agricultural technology. Some 4,000 people have been promoted to middle-grade technical posts and above, and some 1,000 of them have been promoted to leadership posts at all levels. There are even more peasant technicians, households with scientific and technological knowledge and households whose output is 10,000 jin. They will continue to play a backbone and vanguard role in wheat production.

5. There have been constant supplies of materials to support agriculture, such as chemical fertilizers, agricultural machinery and agricultural chemicals.

6. What is more important, inspired by the spirit of the 12th party congress which is about to be held and following the development of socialist spiritual civilization, modern peasants who have communist ideology, morality and sentiment and fervently cherish socialism, the party, the country and the collective, have grown up and a large number of model workers have emerged. This will surely and greatly change the mental outlook of all peasants and produce inestimable material resources.

All this has clearly shown that we have the conditions for speeding up the development of wheat production. So long as we further handle well the relationship between unified management and the contract system in the course of perfecting the agricultural production responsibility system, take such measures as are suitable to local conditions in order to vigorously popularize effective science and technology, continue to do well in grasping technical training, seriously work out and carry out the plans and measures for wheat production, seize the current favorable opportunity to collect and produce farm manure in a big way, do well in popularizing superior seeds and continue to do a good job in farmland capital construction, we can surely reap an even bigger bumper summer grain harvest next year.

At present, leaders at all levels must enthusiastically organize and lead the masses to do well in the final-stage management of autumn crop fields and in self-salvation through production in stricken areas and, in addition, continue to arrange for the tasks of wheat production.

Cadres must go deep into the frontline, integrate with the masses and take part in labor. They must promptly solve problems when discovered. All walks of life and trades must vigorously support agriculture and meet the production needs to the greatest extent. We must make concerted efforts and contribute toward cultivating wheat sufficiently and well, reaping an even bigger bumper summer grain harvest next year and speeding up the advance toward the new objective.

REPORT ON IMPROVING SICHUAN GRASSROOTS CPC ORGANS

HK240904 Chengdu SICHUAN RIBAO in Chinese 9 Aug 82 p 3

[Investigation report by Sichuan Provincial CPC Committee Organization Department and Mianyang Prefectural CPC Committee Organization Department: "Fangshi District CPC Committee of Qingchuan County Strengthens the Building of Grassroots Party Organizations"]

[Text] Fangshi district of Qingchuan County has 7 communes, 47 production brigades, and 266 production teams. At present, the responsibility system of fixing output quotas on a household basis and assigning the land to each household in exchange for specific levies has already been extensively implemented among all production teams. In this new situation, the prefectural CPC committee has made the building of grassroots party organizations a key link to promote various tasks, and has thus more effectively given full play to the roles of party organizations and party members. Now, as the party work style has been improved, the masses have restored confidence in the leadership and production has developed.

The following are the major experiences of the Fangshi Prefectural CPC Committee in strengthening party building.

1. Conscientiously put the party's grassroots organization work on the agenda.

After the implementation of the production responsibility system, the Fangshi Prefectural CPC Committee has upheld exercising the party committee's leadership to the party, vigorously grasped the building of grassroots party organizations and has thus achieved prominent success. They have mainly grasped the following four tasks.

First, they have adjusted the relationship between production and party building. From 1975 on, "a group of people" in the prefectural CPC committee have gone all out to promote production. They went to grassroots level as one step to improve their leadership style; they personally took part in production as a demonstration of their determination to go all out to promote production. They offered quite a few proposals and worked really hard. However, no matter how hard they worked, the results were never prominent. In the spring of 1979, when implementating the spirit of the third plenary session, the prefectural CPC committee held a meeting of three-level cadres and urged comrades at the grassroots level to help the prefectural CPC committee to redress its work style. Those comrades at the grassroots level said, apart from those causes concerning policies, the reason why production could not develop was because the prefectural CPC committee had spent too much of its time in the general affairs of production while overlooking the roles of grassroots party organizations. The prefectural CPC committee open-mindedly accepted their criticism. From 1979 on, the prefectural CPC committee has paid close attention to the implementation of the rural economic policy and the building of grassroots party organizations, and has brought along production with party building. They have issued two documents: "Opinions on the Improvement of Organizational Work," and "Guideline for Inspection;" called commune CPC committee secretaries to attend four prefectural CPC committee enlarged meetings; have analyzed the circumstances of party branches and party members; and have thus put forth the specific requirements for strengthening the building of grassroots party organizations.

Second, they have practiced a division of work between party and government. Another reason why the building of grassroots party organizations had never been placed on the top agenda of the party committee in the past was because there was no demarcation line between the jurisdiction of the party and that of the government. The prefectural CPC committee has coordinated the county CPC committees in readjusting the leading bodies of party committees and administrative committees, tried to avoid cases of holding posts concurrently and laid down definite rules and regulations defining the duties of each unit.

In this way, the prefectural CPC committee and the commune CPC committees have been able to liberate themselves from those trivial affairs and devote more effort to the building of party organizations. In the last few years, while concentrating its strength on the implementation of the party's line, guiding principles and policies, the prefectural CPC committee has persistently given training to party members and backbone cadres of party branches every year. Now, the prefectural administrative offices and the administrative committees of all communes can independently handle all work within their own jurisdiction, and they show high initiative in their work. By simultaneously promoting both material and spiritual civilization, the prefectural and commune party and government leading organs have won the strong support of the masses.

Third, the party committee secretary has managed to grasp the key link and has been personally engaged in work. The number one leading person of the party committee is the key figure who must decide whether the building of grassroots party organizations is placed on the agenda of the party committee. Since 1980 prefectural CPC committee Secretary Xia Zhengliang has presisted in personally taking part in working out the working plan of party building every year. He often personally gives talks on party history, and regularly participates in party branch activities in the capacity of an ordinary party member. He also often goes to communes and brigades to help comrades in grassroots party organizations to properly carry out party work. On the other hand, the prefectural CPC committee also regularly holds a meeting of commune CPC committee secretaries from organizations. Besides, the secretaries of all commune CPC committees also conscientiously promote party-building work.

Fourth, they have constantly studied new circumstances and put forth new tasks. In analyzing the reason why the building of grassroots party organizations could not be carried out continuously, they have found out that it was because they had not paid attention to studying new circumstances and solving new problems. Therefore, the leading comrades of the prefectural CPC committee began to frequently go to the grassroots level to carry out studies and investigations, to find out what party members and cadres were thinking about and doing in every period. Thus, the prefectural CPC committees always have an orientation, a concrete plan and specific goals in mind when carrying out the work of building grassroots party organizations.

2. Conscientiously reorganize the leading bodies of grassroots units.

In early 1980 the prefectural CPC committee made investigation and analysis of the leading bodies of grassroots units one after another. They found that four of the seven commune leading bodies were good or relatively good, two of them were weak and lax, and one was paralyzed or partially paralyzed. Of 47 brigade leading bodies, 27 were good or relatively good, 12 were weak and lax, and the rest were paralyzed or partially paralyzed. Of those grassroots leading bodies which were weak and lax and those which were paralyzed or partially paralysed, some just could not understand why the responsiblity system must be implemented, and therefore did not want to be involved in implementing the system; some were not united and therefore were not capable of implementing the system; and some could not implement the system just because the members of these leading bodies were not honest and upright. Even those leading bodies which were good or relatively good did not know how to properly implement the responsibility system because they lacked good methods. In the reorganization, the prefectural CPC committee gave individual guidance to every leading body according to its own circumstances. For those grassroots leading bodies which were good or relatively good, the principal way was to sum up experience, find out where they lagged behind, and put forth the measures of improvement through meetings on democratic life, and then further consolidate and improve the results. For those grassroots leading bodies which were weak and lax and those which were paralyzed or partially paralyzed, the principal responsible people of the prefectural CPC committee and those of the CPC committees in the communes concerned led work groups to respectively carry out reorganization. Within 2-odd years, they have quite effectively solved the problems in the following aspects:

(1) They have carried out education on the policy to deal with the obstacles in implementing the agricultural production responsibility system. In the past, some comrades did not understand the current policy, so they just washed their hands of the business. Therefore, these units used to waver and act slowly in implementing the responsibility system. In coping with such circumstances, the prefectural CPC committee organized study classes to give party lectures, called the CPC committee secretaries of seven communes to participate in the production responsibility system experiment in Shiba Commune for half month, and sent them to other places to learn from other units. By taking these measures, the prefectural COP committee has cleared up some comrades' misunderstanding and doubt about the guidelines and policies laid down by the party's central authorities since the third plenary session, and has thus pushed the vast number of party members and cadres to take the initiative in carrying out the production responsibility system.

(2) They have done a good job in straightening out people's wrong and muddled thinking and in ironing out the differences. In analysing the cause for the split, the prefectural CPC committee found out that, in some cases, it was due to the evil influence of the sense of belonging to one's own partriarchal clan; in some other cases, it was due to differences of opinions and contradictions between people; and in the rest; it was due to the lack of a democratic work style, or due to poor cooperation between young and old cadres, and so on. Based on the information collected in the investigation and studies, they adopted different measures for different cases and guided the cadres to conscientiously carry out criticism and self-criticism. In this way, the problems in the leading bodies of a commune and 11 brigades which were suffering from the split were relatively satisfactorily solved.

(3) They have rectified the financial work and handled the corruption cases in which some cadres were involved. In February last year, the prefectural CPC committee transferred 397 cadres familiar with financial affairs from prefectural and commune organs and brigades and teams to undertake an overall rectification. They made a thorough check of the financial accounts, common accumulation, fixed assets and so on, and seriously handled some cases of taking bribes, stealing and selling farm cattle, chemical fertilizer and so on. Through these measures, cadres were educated and the masses were rather contented with the results.

(4) They have reelected the members of grassroots party organizations, and thus have solved the problem of weak and lax leading bodies. In coping with the situation that the principal responsible comrades of a small number of communes and brigades were too old, less capable and unequal to their jobs, the prefectural CPC committee, having made good ideological preparation, carried out a reelection of the leading bodies. Proper arrangements were made for some cadres who were not equal to their current jobs, and those young party members who were highly loyal to the party, well educated, had a fine work style and experience in production and in administration were promoted to posts in the leading bodies. At the same time, the prefectural CPC committee also paid attention to reserving those veteran backbone cadres who are capable and energetic, have experience, and enjoy high reputations. So the leading bodies have been strengthened and party members and cadres were contented with the reelection.

3. Further carry out the drive of being qualified party members. Strengthening the administration and education of party members and improving their political accomplishments are some of the important aspects of the building of grassroots party organizations. For this reason, the prefectural CPC committee has tried to educate party members by various means.

(1) They have upheld regular educational work. In 1981, inlight of the new circumstances after the implementation of the agricultural production responsibility system, the prefectural CPC committee formulated definite and concrete stipulations for the scheduling, organization and leadership, forms of activities, and so on, of the "three meetings and one class." [These forms of regular inner-party activities of the CPC]

The prefectural CPC committee also prepared and distributed "diaries for three meetings and one class" and roll books for party members' attendance at regular party activities. As the regular activity system for party branches and party groups has improved, every party branch and every party group organizes regular activities now, and the attendance at every party class, party branch and group party activity exceeds 90 percent of all party members. As the regular educational work has been promoted in a down-to-earth manner, the ideological consciousness of most party members has been improved. Now there are more party members elected by the masses to undertake leading posts, more party members who work enthusiastically and more party members who try to do people good turns, while those feudal superstitious activities have been basically eliminated.

(2) They have pushed party members to maintain close ties with the masses. After the implementation of the production responsibility system, the form of production which was centralized before is now decentralized. In addition, in these mountainous areas, a small population is distributed over a vast area, and some production brigades even cover a circumference of more than 60 li. Therefore, it is impossible to promote political and ideological work by only depending on cadres. The prefectural CPC committee has popularized the method of assigning a certain household to each party member to keep contact with, a method which was created by the CPC Committee of Sinshun Commune. Now 292 party members in the whole prefecture have already undertaken the responsibility of keeping contact with 1,460 commune member households. All these party members are required to undertake the policy propaganda and educational work concerned, to urge commune members to keep in line with the state's production plan, to give commune member households technical guidance in scientific farming, to ensure the completion of tasks assigned by the state and the collective, to take care of household sideline production and the needs of daily life, and to assist in mediating civil disputes. This method has given full play to party members' roles in the actual work.

(3) They have promoted the activities of creating advanced party branches and striving to be model party members. The activities of creating advanced party branches and striving to be model party members have been extensively promoted throughout the prefecture. By vigorously commending advanced examples, the prefectural CPC committee has drawn a clear demarcation line between right and wrong, and between achievements and errors among party members and has thus mobilized the initiative of various circles.

(4) They have upheld the self-appraisal system for party members. In view of the situation that the practice of criticism and self-criticism is not prevailing and that some problems among party members have not yet been solved in good time, the prefectural CPC committee has attached importance to the key problems, and carried out the self-appraisal activities among party members by means of political studies, education with the aid of positive examples, inspiration and persuasion, and self-improvement. The prefectural CPC committee has taken the full responsibility for preparing and distributing the outline for self-appraisal of party members, has made clear the purpose and the goal of the activities, and has organized self-appraisal activities in every party branch once every half year. The party members in the prefecture said that in those regular party activities in the past, we used to aim at too great targets and waste our time in empty talk; and we never really touched on real ideological problems despite repeated criticisms. Now the situation is different, and our regular party activities are rich, solid and concrete.

XIZANG PEOPLE'S CONGRESS COMMITTEE ENDS MEETING

[Summary] "The 14th meeting of the 3d Xizang Regional People's Congress Standing Committee concluded in Lhasa on the afternoon of 25 August. The meeting adopted the resolution on delaying the trial implementation of the civil procedure law of the PRC. In accordance with the region's vast area, poor transportation and a poor work foundation, the meeting decided to delay for 1 year the trial implementation of the civil procedure law. Trial implementation of the civil procedure law will be effective from 1 October 1983." The meeting also approved the regional regulations on forest protection and approved the list of appointments of cadres of the regional people's procuratorate and the higher people's court.

During the meeting, Chen Jingbo, vice chairman of the Xizang Regional People's Congress, gave a speech on four subjects: Education on socialist democracy and the socialist legal system; social order in minority nationalities regions; religious freedom; and function of the county people's congresses standing committees. Chen Jingbo said: The discussion launched among people of various nationalities throughout the region is in fact an education on socialist democracy and the legal system. As a result of this education, social order has been promoted. This shows that it is necessary to simultaneously grasp material and spiritual civilization. If we only grasp production and do not grasp education, we are only temporarily promoting production. Without political and ideological work, production will not be consolidated. After the promulgation of the constitution, we must still organize the masses to study in order to improve the people's understanding of the legal system and their political awareness.

Chen Jingbo continued: We must cultivate a large group of minority nationalities cadres in order to promote the social order situation in the minority nationalities areas. At present, a large part of work in Xizang is under the administration of Zang nationality cadres. However, our cadres are still far from meeting the demands put forth by the CPC Central Committee. Thus, we must incessantly improve the quality of the cadre contingent.

On the question of religious freedom, Chen Jingbo said: Religious belief is a very complicated question. We must fully understand the long-term nature and complications of religions and must absolutely not adopt a laissez-faire attitude.

In conclusion, Chen Jingbo stressed that it is necessary to promote the work of the standing committees of the county people's congresses. "The 14th meeting of the 3d Xizang Regional People's Congress Standing Committee, which was held on the afternoon of 25 August, was presided over by Hu Zonglin, vice chairman of the regional people's congress Standing Committee. Other vice chairman, including Wang Yunxiang, Dege Gesangwangdui and Ciren Lamu, attended the meeting. Regional CPPCC Vice Chairmen Jamzom Zhaxi Degti, Jipu Pingcuo Cideng and Jinzhong Jianzan Pingcuo and responsible comrades of various units and departments were also present at the meeting."

SHANXI CALLS FOR BUILDING TWO CIVILIZATIONS

HK230801 Taiyuan SHANXI RIBAO in Chinese 9 Aug 82 pp 1, 2

[Report: "Provincial CPC Committee Holds Telephone Conference Demanding That Party Committees and Government At All Levels Lead the Party Members, Cadres and Masses To Promote the Building of the Two Civilizations As Practical Action To Greet the 12th Party Congress"]

[Text] Last night the Shanxi Provincial CPC Committee held a telephone conference demanding that party committees and governments at all levels lead andmobilize the party members, cadres and masses and redouble their effort to promote the building of material civilization and spiritual civilization as practical action to greet the 12th party congress.

The decision to hold this telephone conference was made by the standing comittee of the provincial CPC committee. On the morning of 7 August, members of the standing committee of the provincial CPC committee conscientiously studied and discussed the guidelines of the 7th Plenary Session of the 11th CPC Central Committee with a feeling of joy, reviewed the excellent situation since the 3d Plenary Session of the 11th CPC Central Committe, talked glowingly of the great significance of the holding of the 12th party congress and studied and made arrangements for the work of our province as practical action to greet the 12th party congress.

Among those taking part in the telephone conference were responsible comrades of the provincial CPC committee, provincial people's congress, provincial government and provincial CPPCC committee, as well as various departments, committees, offices and bureaus directly under the province and responsible comrades of various prefectures, municipalities and counties.

Li Ligong, executive secretary of the provincial CPC committee, presided over the conference and Luo Guibo, second secretary of the provincial CPC committee and governor of the province, made an important speech at the conference.

Comrade Luo Guibo said that the 7th Plenary Session of the 11th CPC Central Committee has decided to hold the 12th party congress on 1 September this year. This is an important event in the political life of the whole party and people throughout the country. Our party committees and government at various levels and leading party and government comrades above the county level in particular must lead and mobilize the party members, cadres and masses, further implement the line, policies and principles of the party since the third plenary session, redouble their effort to make a success of the building of socialist material civilization and spiritual civilization and use the outstanding achievements on various fronts as their own practical action to greet the 12th party congress.

Since this year, we have carried out work in accordance with the instructions and arrangements of the Central Committee on paying special attention to building the two civilizations. By means of the joint efforts of party committees and government as well as party members, cadres and masses at various levels, achievements have been realized in work on various fronts. By means of paying special attention to the building of spiritual civilization, party style, social atmosphere and public order have further improved. The political situation of stability and unity has further been consolidated and developed throughout the country and the work of the provincial CPC committee as well as party committees at various levels has been marked by greater initiative. By means of paying special attention to the building of material civilization, the situation in industrial and agricultural production is better than last year. Industrial production in the first half of the year enjoyed a balanced, sustained and stable development.

By the end of July, 60.4 percent of the total industrial output value projected for the year had been fulfilled, and there was a 16.7 percent increase over the corresponding period last year. Profit tax turned over to the higher authorities showed an increase of 29.7 percent over the corresponding period last year. Initial success has appeared in the work of readjusting the enterprises as well as making up deficits and increasing surpluses, and economic benefit has increased. In the first 7 months of the year, 67 percent of the task of collecting state revenue for the whole year was completed, and this represents a 20.8 percent increase compared with the corresponding period last year. The rural situation is improving all the time. The responsibility system has been further consolidated and perfected, and there is a great improvement in the livelihood of the peasants. The enthusiasm of the commune members for production is very high. Under the condition of being subjected to such natural disasters as drought, windstorm and hail, there is still a bigger harvest of summer crops than last year. Summer grain crops purchased and stored by the state amount to 300 million jin, or 133 percent of the state purchasing quotas. The diversified economy has made new progress. Various specialized households and key households account for about 9 percent of all peasant households in the province. Tree planting, afforestation and the planting of trees in and around cities are also better than in previous years. These work results obtained by our province in the first half of the year demonstrate that the line, policies and principles of the Central Committee are absolutely correct.

Comrade Luo Guibo said that for the sake of further arousing enthusiasm and using practical action to greet the 12th party congress, the provincial CPC committee and provincial government ask all leading members to pay special attention to the following work:

1. In the field of agriculture, there has been a good rainfall over most of the province. Apart from parts of the region hit by disaster, conditions on the whole are extremely favorable throughout the province for autumn-harvested crops. We hope that, under the leadership of party committees and governments at various levels, the cadres and masses in the disaster-stricken areas will pool their wisdom and resources, triumph over the disaster, develop production and safeguard their livelihood. All counties and prefectures in the province must take advantage of the favorable opportunity afforded by the rain to strengthen management over autumn-harvested crops, make a success of various farm tasks and strive for a bumper harvest. It is also necessary to make proper preparations for the sowing of wheat and ensure the proper planting of wheat. It is necessary to continue strengthening the construction of grassroots party branches in the countryside and give full play to the leadership role of the party branches and the exemplary pace-setting role of the party members. It is necessary to proceed from the actual conditions of various localities and further perfect the responsibility system and develop the diversified economy. It is necessary to place scientific farming on the agenda, energetically promote the application of new agrotechniques and give full play to the role of agroscientists and technicians as well as experts in management and administration. As for the good experiences and farming techniques mastered by many old peasants in our province, we must scientifically sum them up, raise their standard and closely integrate them with advanced science and technology. As for forms of management which are beneficial to social life but also contain certain defects, we must not draw hasty conclusions in dealing with them. We must, on the basis of investigation and study, offer a solution for eliminating such defects while retaining what is beneficial. On the basis of properly grasping this year's production, leading members at various levels must look further ahead. They must start considering the question of agricultural production next year and even further ahead, and solve problems such as the 9 years of drought out of 10 in Shanxi in connection with the implementation of the policy of comprehensive control of soil, water and forests with soil as the main feature.

We must prohibit the destruction of forests and grasslands for reclamation. In serious cases, violators will be subjected to party discipline and state law. Along with the development of rural commodity production, we must study and solve such problems as transportation, storage and processing of rural products. As for farmland capital construction, all localities must organize the cadres and masses to carry out full exchange of views and discussions, lay down specific plans and implement various measures before the autumn harvest. In this way, they can start a farmland capital construction upsurge in a planned and organized manner without losing time. To properly grasp the rainy season as well as autumn tree planting and afforestation, it is imperative to fulfill the task of planting a million mu of saplings. For this reason, we must conscientiously carry out the work of issuing forest ownership certificates.

2. In the field of industry, we must continue to grasp firmly and properly the work of readjusting the enterprises, focusing on raising economic returns. We must further correct the ideological guideline and closely integrate raising economic returns with maintaining a certain rate of economic development. We must conscientiously solve such problems as product quality, variety, consumption and market demand. We must strive to increase income, cut down expenses, and guarantee the fulfillment and strive for the overfulfillment of the task of turning over profits to the upper level as well as the annual financial revenue and expenditure target. Realizing the three items of construction and the six-good demands is the ultimate goal of rectifying the enterprises. We must carry out all-round readjustment and comprehensive control, integrate various aspects of work including leadership system, democratic control, building party branches, expanding the decisionmaking power of enterprises, system reform and technical transformation of enterprises and bring them in line with the rectification of enterprises. By means of solid work, we must further perfect the economic responsibility system, further improve the management and administration level of the enterprises and the political quality and technical level of the workers and staff and further raise economic returns. During the rectification of the enterprises, we must pay special attention to properly grasping the work of rectifying the 28 key enterprises which turned over more than 10 million yuan in profit tax to the upper level and the 25 enterprises which incurred losses of more than a million yuan. On the question of turning deficits into profits, the provincial CPC committee and the provincial government have on numerous occasions stressed and adopted measures calling on the various prefectures, municipalities and counties to conscientiously grasp the work firmly and properly. We must make a distinction in dealing with losses caused by operation and losses caused by policy. Enterprises with losses caused by operation must strive to basically solve the problem within the months of August and September and to turn deficits into profits, or at least put an end to deficits. In the work of readjusting the enterprises and making up deficits, we must succeed in having plans, standards, measures, inspections, and final examination upon delivery. Enterprises which definitely have no outlet must either be shut down, suspended, merged or shifted to other types of production. We must in particular continue to grasp properly the production and export of coal. In the first half of the year, very good results have been obtained in our work in this direction. We must continue our effort in the second half of the year to fulfill and overfulfill the coal production task.

3. In the field of financial revenue, the task for the first half of the year has been properly fulfilled. We must not slacken up in the second half of the year, but must continue to grasp the work firmly and properly. At present, prices are stable, the market is flourishing and people have peace of mind. We must continue to open up channels and liven up the market. We must pay special attention to improving management and administration and be resolute in solving the problem of overstocking.

4. We must make a success of economic cooperation. Our province mainly uses coal to barter for technical and other equipment. After conscientiously discovering the problems as well as the existing condition of various committees, agencies, offices and bureaus as well as various prefectures and municipalities in carrying out economic cooperation with fraternal provinces and municipalities, we must map out a cooperation plan, formulate a set of management methods, bring about unified leadership and management level by level, and surmount the existing chaotic phenomenon.

5. Regarding the question of hitting at serious criminal activities in the economic sphere, we must continue to grasp the work firmly and properly in accordance with the guidelines of the central telephone conference and the instructions of the provincial CPC committee. Political and legal departments at various levels must regard it as the outstanding task of the moment. All prefectures, municipalities and counties must concentrate their forces to firmly grasp the investigation and verification of serious economic crimes, especially the important cases scheduled to be dealt with in July and August, and on the basis of fully investigating the facts, deal with them severely and swiftly according to law. At the same time, we must develop anticorruption education among the cadres and masses, set up and effect necessary rules and regulations and prevent new economic cases from cropping up.

6. We must make a success of the preparations for streamlining the organs. We must proceed with studying and formulating preliminary plans for restructuring the organs. We must resolutely make a success of cadre examination in accordance with the criteria and demands of the Central Committee on the selection of cadres. In particular, we must energetically discover and boldly use outstanding young and middle-aged cadres as well as qualified people and promote them to leading bodies at various levels. In accordance with the guidelines of the central directive, we must resolutely and carefully remove "three types of people" from the leading bodies. In reorganizing and replenishing the leading bodies, we must prevent the "three types of people" from worming their way into the leading bodies. We must overcome the mentality of "waiting, watching and hoping." All old, young or middle-aged comrades must try their utmost to grasp the work properly. We must make proper arrangements for the old cadres leaving their posts for convalescence or retirement, show concern for their livelihood and create conditions for them to enjoy their remaining years and continue wahtever work they can still do. At the same time, we must make a success of the preparations for training cadres by rotation. Prefectures and municipalities as well as units directly under the province with conditions must set about training cadres by rotation in the second half of the year.

To obtain satisfying results we must, on the basis of the work carried out in the first half of the year, continue to firmly and properly grasp such work on other fronts as culture and education, public health, science and technology and politics and law. All fronts must develop lively and vigorous ideological and political work and build a high degree of socialist spiritual civilization so that the building of spiritual civilization and material civilization can advance simultaneously.

Comrade Luo Guibo pointed out that the key to making a success of work in the second half of the year lies in our leading members at various levels, and the leading members above the county level in particular. Leading members at various levels must set the pace in correcting the style of the party's internal and external relations, strengthening unity, taking the lead in improving the style of work and conscientiously carrying out investigation and study so that their mentality will keep abreast of the development of objective conditions and the policies, methods, measures and views they propose for solving problems will be more in keeping with reality. Therefore, all prefectural, municipal and county CPC committees as well as party committees or organizations of departments, committees, offices and bureaus directly under the province must universally hold meetings on organizational life, examine their own understanding and actions, develop criticism and self-criticism and further heighten their consciousness in implementing the line, policies and principles of the party.

At the close of the conference, Comrade Li Ligong demanded that party committees and governments at all levels, in close conjunction with actual conditions in their own districts, departments and units, formulate plans, adopt measures and mobilize as well as organize the party members, cadres and masses to promote the building of material civilization and spiritual civilization and to greet the triumphant opening of the 12th party congress.

HEILONGJIANG'S YANG YICHEN AT WORK STYLE MEETING

SK270410 Harbin Heilongjiang Provincial Service in Mandarin 1100 GMT 26 Aug 82

[Excerpts] According to our reporters, the Heilongjiang provincial experience-exchange meeting on consolidating party work style successfully concluded today. During the meeting, participants earnestly studied and discussed the communique of the 7th Plenary Session of the 11th CPC Central Committee and the instruction given by Comrade Hu Yaobang during his inspection tour in the province. Representatives of the 12 advanced units and individuals from the party committees of Mudanjiang Prefecture, Jiamusi Municipality and Gnanan County introduced their experience gained in consolidating party work style and in the struggle against serious economic crimes.

During the meeting, 83 advanced units and 164 model individuals who had emerged in consolidating party work style were commended. Attending the closing ceremony held today were leading comrades of the provincial CPC committee including Yang Yichen, Li Lian, Chen Lei, Chen Junsheng, Zhao Dezun, Wang Yilun, Wang Luming, Wang Zhao and Xie Yunqing. Comrade Li Lian delivered a report on behalf of the provincial CPC committee entitled: "Exert Persistent Efforts To Make the Party Strong and To Achieve a Decisive Turn for the Better in Party Work Style."

In his report, Li Lian pointed out: To achieve a decisive turn for the better in party work style, attention should be paid to the following four tasks in the later months of this year:

1. It is necessary to consolidate party work style while deeply launching struggles against serious economic crimes.

2. Resolute efforts should be made to block malpractices that the masses have specifically complained about and carry out the mass inspection on financial affairs and economic and financial disciplines through to the end.

3. Earnest efforts should be made to conduct education on the party spirit and on resisting corrosive influence of bourgeois ideas among members by fully taking advantage of launching struggles against serious economic crimes.

4. Efforts should be made to conduct investigations and studies in a penetrating way and uphold the seek-truth-from-facts principle to overcome bureaucracy. We must earnestly implement the instruction given by Comrade Hu Yaobang during his inspection tour in our province on the advisability of leading cadres going deep into grassroots units to conduct investigations and studies in a down-to-earth manner so that they will be able to discern the new situation and to solve problems arising from the situation.

Comrade Li Lian urged the party committees at all levels to enhance their leadership over the work to consolidate party work style and to dare to control and block all malpractices in order to improve the weak and lax status in leadership. We should greet the successful convocation of the 12th CPC Congress with our concrete deeds displayed in consolidating party work style.

HEILONGJIANG URGES IMPROVED PRODUCT QUALITY

SK230928 Harbin Heilongjiang Provincial Service in Mandarin 1100 GMT 22 Aug 82

[Station commentary: "Strive To Find Markets for Products"]

[Excerpt] In the first half of 1982, the province scored good achievements in industrial and communications production. The total output value of industrial and communications production increased 7.4 percent over that of the corresponding 1981 period. Real profits and profits handed over to the state increased by a large margin compared with the corresponding 1981 period. In the second half of 1982, the industrial and communications departments of the province should make persistent efforts to increase their economic results by a big margin and keep up steady development in production.

The cause of this situation is that some products are poor in quality and high in price and their variety does not meet market demands. There are also some problems with regard to clogged channels of circulation. We know that, to work hard to improve the quality and design variety of products which have remained the same for many years, production departments should keep abreast of market demands and get a clear understanding of the masses' critical choice of commodities.

We also should minimize the difference between production and consumption in order to ensure good marks. Therefore, we should carry out quality management in a comprehensive and down-to-earth manner and strive to improve the quality of the products and increase the variety of goods. We should enhance in every possible way the competitiveness of local industrial products, further open up channels so as to change the current situation of the province on poor links in sales of industrial products and do a good job in expanding the sales of the products.

JILIN FORUM URGES ATTENTION TO ECONOMIC CRIMES

SK230700 Changchun Jilin Provincial Service in Mandarin 2200 GMT 22 Aug 82

[Text] The provincial forum on the work of dealing blows at economic crimes, which was held in Changchun 16-21 August, noted that CPC committees at all levels should pay close attention to the handling of big, serious cases to greatly promote the province's struggle against economic crimes.

Since the telephone conference held by the provincial CPC committee on 16 July, all CPC committees, through study, have enhanced their understanding of the struggle, strengthened leadership and implemented the system of division of labor under which leading cadres are assigned to handle certain cases, thus accelerating the investigations and the handling of big, serious cases. With the rapid development of the struggle against economic crimes, all localities have exposed some crimes and the spoils turned in have greatly increased. Some units and departments, taking the work of dealing blows at economic crimes as the point on which to make a breakthrough, have combined enterprise consolidation with education on party spirit, workstyle and discipline to promote production.

However, in our province there are still some localities, some provincial offices and bureaus and large enterprises whose CPC committees or leading party groups lack sufficient understanding of the seriousness and danger of the legal violations in the economic field and the significance of the struggle against economic crimes. They do not pay enough attention to the handling of cases and are weak-minded, having misgivings, in dealing with problems involving leading persons. Some localities and leading persons, although instituting the system of division of labor in handling big, serious cases, are apt to take charge of the work in name without taking real action.

In view of such problems, the forum noted: The next step of the struggle is still to solve the problems in the understanding of leading persons who think that the work has been done well enough and that they can relax a bit. All localities and provincial offices and bureaus should examine how the work has been done in their subordinate departments and send personnel to where the work is poorly done to help solve problems. They should adopt organizational measures to cope with the leading bodies with serious economic problems. They should resolutely readjust the leading bodies or personnel who resist the struggle and never be soft-hearted towards them. No one is allowed to shield or plead for mercy for criminals. Anyone who does so, no matter who he is, will be investigated and held responsible. Leading comrades at all levels should handle well the big, serious cases assigned to them. CPC committees at higher levels should send personnel to inspect their work on regular basis. All CPC committees should submit timely reports to higher levels on the progress of their work to handle the cases assigned to them.

The forum stressed: In the struggle to deal blows at economic crimes, we should strictly distinguish between and correctly handle the contradictions of two different natures. We should draw a clear demarcation line between mistakes in work and economic crimes. Between unhealthy economic trends and economic crimes and between the problems arising from defects in the rules and regulations for the policy of opening to the outside world and enlivening domestic market and smuggling, selling smuggled goods and profiteering. We should conscientiously implement the principle of treating leniently those who confess their crimes and turn in spoils and treating strictly those who refuse to do so. Party members and cadres who have violated the law in the economic field, no matter how senior they are and how high their positions are, should all be handled strictly according to party discipline and state law.

The forum urged all localities to combine the work for dealing blows and economic crimes with enterprise consolidation and with the work to establish and improve rules and regulations. The forum called for efforts to educate -- with vivid, typical cases -- party members and cadres to oppose corrosive influences. Participants at the forum were determined to greet the convocation of the 12th party congress with new achievements in the struggle against economic crimes.

XINJIANG'S TOMUR DAWAMAT ON DRAFT CONSTITUTION

QW270320 Beijing XINHUA in English 0231 GMT 27 Aug 82

[Text] Urumqi, August 27 (XINHUA) -- Tomur Dawamat, chairman of the Standing Committee of the Peoples Congress of the Xinjiang Uygur Autonomous Region, said today China's constitutional draft provides for minority nationalities and regional autonomy more than any former constitutions.

Tomur Dawamat (of Uygur nationaltiy) has participated in the deliberation of the three previous constitutions of the People's Republic (1954, 1975 and 1978).

Dawamat said "It is the consistent policy of the Chinese Communist Party and the government to help minority areas develop their economy and culture. Since the founding of the Peoples Republic, the party and the state have given great support to Xinjiang, resulting in increased development."

The draft revised constitution says, in accordance with the characteristics and needs of different minority nationalities, the state will help minority areas accelerate economic and cultural development with financial, material and technical assistance.

Tomur Dawamat said that Xinjiang is a multinational region with minority people accounting for 59 percent of its total population. Before the founding of the Peoples Republic in 1949, Xinjiang was one of the country's least developed areas. Total industrial and agricultural output value in 1981 increased 10.9 times as compared with early years of the People's Republic. Industrial output value in the first six months of this year rose by 8.6 percent over the same 1981 period. Grain output has now increased to 3.85 million tons from 0.8 million tons in 1949. Livestock has increased from 10.38 million head to 28.27 million head. Industry has developed from a dozen or so small and simple factories to more than 4,000 modern enterprises.

Xinjiang now has 10,000 schools of various kinds, with nearly 3 million students. In the past 30 years and more, the state and other areas of the country have given Xinjiang large amounts of manpower, material and financial support. In 1981 alone, state financial subsidy amounted to 1.44 billion yuan, or 85.66 percent of the regions budget for the year, Dawamat said. In 1980, average per-capita income reached 343 yuan, a middle level in the country, he said.

XINJIANG HOLDS MEETING ON COMMUNE MANAGEMENT

HK180904 Urumqi Xinjiang Regional Service in Mandarin 1300 GMT 17 Aug 82

[Text] The regional meeting on management and administration of people's communes pointed out: From now on, people's communes should strive for "five increases," "one reduction" and "one enhancement" on the basis of developing production and strengthening management and administration. The "five increases" are to increase production, total income, contributions to the country, collective accumulation and distribution. The "one reduction" refers to minimizing the amount of overspent cash and the "one enhancement" is to improve better economic results.

The meeting, which was held in Urumqi 7-16 August, mainly discussed the problem of people's communes distribution of income and studied the work of straightening out the financial affairs of communes and brigades. It emphatically pointed out: The income of people's communes must be distributed on the principle of taking three aspects into due consideration, that is, we must properly handle the interests of the state, the collective and the individual. According to the present productivity of people's communes, it is appropriate to distribute net income as follows; 5 percent for state taxes, 15 percent for collective retention and 80 percent for commune members. It is not right to lay too much stress on collective retention and accumulation, nor is it right to particularly emphasize more distribution to commune members regardless of the interests of the state and the collective.

The meeting also pointed out: In the whole region of Xinjiang, the financial affairs in a great number of communes and brigades are in a state of complexity. This has yielded bad results in arousing the enthusiasm of commune members and promoting farm production and livestock breeding. In accordance with the requirements of the State Council and the regional people's government, the work of straightening out financial affairs in communes and brigades should be carried out with unified leadership, planning and arrangements by drawing on the experiences gained from key trial areas.

Secretary Li Jiayu of the regional CPC committee and Vice-Chairman Ismail Amat of the regional people's government attended the meeting. Comrade Li Jiayu made a summing up speech at the meeting.

Chinese Girls Victorious

OW241645 Beijing XINHUA in English 1556 GMT 24 Aug 82

[Text] Yokohama, Japan, August 24 (XINHUA) -- The Chinese girls beat their compatriots from Taiwan Province 3:0 in the girls section at the Ninth Pan-Pacific Junior Volleyball Championships here today. This was the first encounter ever of the volleyball players from the two sides of the Taiwan Strait. The taller and experienced Chinese team displayed powerful strikes and solid net-defence to win with the score of 15:4, 15:2, 15:3 over China's Taibei side, who had good skills but lacked experience.

In an interview with the Japanesepress after the game, the captain of the Chinese team said that "we are very glad tohave a chance to play our compatriots from Taibei at the championships, at which we hope we can learn from each other."

A coach of the Taibei team said: "China's mainland with a large population provides good conditions for selecting players. Its players are taller. We lost today's game, but we will make efforts to rasie our playing technique in the future."

With the victory the Chinese team has won all their five matches and will meet Japanese girls in their final game tomorrow, while the China's Taibei team has chalked up two wins and three defeats, including one loss to the all-Japanese high school selection 15:17, 4:15, 15:7, 12:15 yesterday. They will play their final match with Canada tomorrow.

In another match in the boys section today, the Chinese team won their sixth match by beating the favourite Japanese side 15:12, 15:9, 15:6. The Chinese boys will meet China's Taibei team in their final match tomorrow.

Chinese Boys Win Title

OW251934 Beijing XINHUA in English 1855 GMT 25 Aug 82

[Excerpt] Yokohama, Japan, August 25 (XINHUA) -- China and Japan respectively clinched the boys and girls titles of the Ninth Pan-Pacific Junior Volleyball Championships which came to an end after an eight-day competition here today.

The Chinese boys beat their compatriots from Taibei 15:7, 12:15, 15:7, 15:7 in the last game today, topping the eight-team league tallies with seven wins against no loss.

Asked by the Japanese press why the Chinese team has conceded one set to the Taibei team, a Chinese coach said: "Today's game was played between our compatriots. We are very glad to see that the Taibei team put up their fine performance and won one set from us. It is not surprising in the Chinese mainland that provincial teams won one or two sets from the national team in the game."

COMMENTARY WARNS U.S. OF PRC UNRELIABILITY

OW270615 Taipei International Service in English 0100 GMT 26 Aug 82

[Station commentary: "Never Believe the Chinese Communists Carrying Agreements"]

[Text] The United States and Peking signed a joint communique 17 August. Although the wording is very ambiguous, there is no doubt that the United States said it would reduce arms sales to the Republic of China only if Peking sought Chinese unification by peaceful means. The Chinese Communists began to mutter about American intransigence the very next day. Within 3 days, Peking was saying that its approaches to the Republic of China were none of Washington's business. Taiwan, the Chinese Communists said, was their property, and they would do with it as they pleased. The United States had no right to interfere in Chinese Communist internal affairs, Peking said. The only role of the United States, the Chinese Communists continued, was to phase out arms sales to Taiwan and get out of the way while Peking settled the China problem in its own way. There is absolutely no link, Red China said, between the termination of arms sales and peaceful communist intentions toward Taiwan.

This would seem to bring everything back to square one provided the United States is intent upon a course of what is right and just. President Ronald Reagan said he would uphold the Taiwan Relations Act which requires the United States to supply defensive arms to Taiwan. John Holdridge of the U.S. State Department said American forces could respond quickly in the event of Chinese Communist moves against Taiwan.

But why did the United States sign such a communique? Why has it not understood that the Chinese Communists are interested only in grabbing Taiwan which is too successful a rival? There are three major reasons.

First, the United States wants to play the Red China card against the Soviet Union. Second, some of the China experts in the State Department have said that Teng Hsiao-ping needs help against his anti-American opponents. Teng is depicted as a kind of watered down communist who wants to be friends with the United States. Third, there is a mistaken impression that Red China would be a valuable ally of the United States against the Soviet Union whereas the Republic of China would not.

The Chinese Communists have no cards to play against the USSR. They are weak militarily and it would cost U.S. $100 million to modernize their forces. Even then, the United States would have an ally of dubious reliance. Teng Hsiao-ping has changed his coat so often that he must get dizzy. Even in the Communist hierarchy he goes up and down like a yoyo. He befriended the United States briefly. Now he has turned away. In any event, Teng is no modernizer and no revisionist. He is an old-line Communist trying to use the United States for all he can get out of the deal.

Douglas MacArthur once called the island of Taiwan a stationary aircraft carrier in the Pacific. It commands sea and air lanes to the South Pacific, South China Sea and Indian Ocean. Its strategic value is of great importance. Taiwan does not have a land frontier with the Soviet Union. But that is of little importance to the United States. War between the USSR and Red China is unlikely. Neither has any place to go. If the Soviet Union should attack, it would be in the northeast provinces where Chinese main-line and industry is centered. If Red China were to attack the USSR, what would be its target and its weapons?

The Americans seem to have been tricked again with regard to Taiwan and the Republic of China. They may have thought that Taiwan could be compromised or given up for Red Chinese alignment against the Soviet Union. The Chinese Communists are not interested in fighting the Soviet Union or standing up against its aggression. They are only interested in disarming, isolating and grabbing Taiwan and destroying the Republic of China. The reason is simple.

The Republic of China-Taiwan, is a great success, and Red China is a big failure. If the Republic of China-Taiwan is not destroyed, it will bring down Red China merely by pitting its example of freedom, democracy and prosperity against the Communists' slavery, tyranny and poverty.

BUY-AMERICAN MISSION PREPARES FOR U.S. VISIT

[Text] Taipei, Aug. 24 (CNA) -- The seventh buy American mission held its last preparatory meeting at the board of foreign trade in the Ministry of Economic Affairs Monday before it leaves for the United States on Aug. 29.

In the meeting, the team discussed the amount of their anticipated purchases in the U.S., estimating the total amount will be about U.S. $500 million. Of the figure, the farm products account for U.S. $400 million including 400,000 tons of soybeans, 720,000 tons of maize, 135,000 tons of barley and 500,000 cartons of cotton. The remaining U.S. $100 million will be for the purchase of machinery and food processing equipment.

The purchasing mission also plans to purchase raisins, almonds and orange juice.

The mission will visit 16 states in the U.S. and Washington D.C., and will hold a seminar with American suppliers in the State of North Carolina. It is expected to return to Taipei on Oct. 13.

BUILDING OF SECOND-GENERATION WARSHIPS PLANNED

[Text] The Ministry of National Defense is preparing to build the second generation of warships to strengthen the navy's fighting capability. At the same time, missile-carrying fast patrol boats are being equipped with weapons systems. It is generally believed that extremely powerful missiles, which have been meticulously developed and built in the country in recent years, will be the main weapons system to be mounted on the home-produced missile-carrying fast patrol boats.

Thanks to the efforts of the Ministry of National Defense to build up an independent science and technology system for national defense and to strengthen combat readiness, the navy has noticeably increased its fighting capability to keep watch on movement in the Taiwan Straits and in ensuring its command of the sea. In addition to the preparations being made to build the second generation of warships and the development of missile-carrying fast patrol boats, efforts have been made to improve the surveillance and telecommunications systems. Double-airplane deployment [shuang chi pei chih 7175 2894 6792 4999] [presumably aircraft on standby] has been completed in Taiwan, and short-range radars have been installed on the offshore islands. Continuous efforts have been made to improve the main force, major weapons and antisubmarine equipment. Large antisubmarine helicopters have been organized into squadrons, thus greatly increasing our minesweeping and minelaying capability.

In air defense, an overall plan has been made for the deployment of aircraft, guns and ammunition in possible combat areas, in addition to the continual purchase of antiaircraft missiles and rapid-firing guns and the strengthening of mobile battle control equipment. Vigorous efforts have been made to build or expand air bases in eastern Taiwan and to expand tactical fighters wings. This has yielded remarkable results in improving the air defense capability.

In antilanding operations, battle plans and the requirements for combat readiness are revised in a timely way, according to developments in the enemy situation. In addition, fortifications, emplacements and blockade facilities have been built at coastal strongholds, and efforts have been made to strengthen the armored, self-propelled artillery and surface-to-surface coast defense missile forces. Thus, the armed forces' antilanding operations capability has been noticeably strengthened.

U-2 PILOTS' TAIWAN VISIT TERMED 'INTERESTING'

HK261040 Hong Kong TA KUNG PAO in Chinese 26 Aug 82 p 2

["Political Talk" column by Shih Chun-yu [2457 0689 3769] "Will Taiwan Allow Two 'Martyrs' To Visit Their Relatives?" -- subheads published in boldface]

[Text] TWO TAIWAN PILOTS TO RETURN TO TAIWAN TO VISIT THEIR RELATIVES

Yesterday Beijing announced that Ye Changdi and Zhang Liyi, former KMT U-2 pilots, who hold the rank of major, were approved to return to Taiwan to see their relatives.

In the 1960's with the cooperation of the United States, the KMT authorities often sent people to the mainland by sea and some were sent by land. These two were, however, sent by air. None of them escaped from the dragnet.

Over the past few years, some U.S.-Chiang special agents who entered Fujian by sea or went to Guangdong by land have been released and returned to Taiwan to visit their relatives.

This time, things are different. These two came from the air force. They were KMT pilots and majors nearly 20 years ago and, moreover, have been treated with leniency and have been working on the mainland for a long time. They are not released prisoners, but are working personnel who will return to Taiwan to see their relatives.

U-2 PLANE AND PILOTLESS PLANE

In the 1950's, the reconnaissance planes sent by the U.S.-Chiang clique were RB57-type planes. Since they were shot down one after another, the U-2 plane, a kind of high-altitude reconnaissance plane which was functionally superior, was then used from the 1960's on.

Our statistics show that five U-2 planes were shot down in the 1900's -- one for each year since 1962. They were mostly shot down in the east China area, with the lone exception being shot down in north China.

The U.S.-Chiang clique then changed their method. They sent pilotless planes instead. However, nearly 20 pilotless planes were also shot down one by one. In Beijing's military museum, wreckage of such planes is publicly exhibited.

The review of these past events can also show why at present some people in the United States still emphasize the "special relationship" between the Taiwan authorities and the United States and regard Taiwan as an "unsinkable aircraft carrier."

TWO PEOPLE WHO "DIED A HERO'S DEATH"

Beijing announced that Ye Changdi and Zhang Liyi were captured at different times, with an interval of 1 year and 2 months. Ye's plane was shot down on 1 November 1963, which was the second U-2 plane shot down, and Zhang's plane, the fourth, was shot down on 10 January 1965.

Thirty-two "air heroes" for 1964 were publicized by the end of 1964 by Peng Meng-chi, the chief of staff of the KMT Army, and Zhang Liyi was one of them. However, just over 10 days later, this "air hero" was captured.

The KMT military authorities announced at that time that these two people had "died a glorious death at their posts" and had "heroically given their lives." However, nearly 20 years have passed and the two living people have unexpectedly reappeared. Upon hearing the news, their families in Taiwan must be surprised and be very glad.

Such things also often happened during the war of liberation in the 1940's. After the Changchun campaign and the Huaihai campaign, Zheng Dongguo and Du Yuming were also announced to have "heroically given their lives."

ASSOCIATE PROFESSOR AND ENGINEER

Ye Changdi and Zhang Liyi were released in 1969. They have been enjoying civil rights and have been working on their respective posts since then.

Now Ye Changdi, one of these two "major pilots" who will return to Taiwan to visit their relatives, is an associate professor of foreign languages, and the other Zhang Liyi, is an engineer in an aeronautical engineering institute. These two titles may arouse surprise in Taiwan.

At the time when the United States has declared it will continue providing the KMT authorities with 60 F-5E military planes, rather than F-5G planes, a mainland aeronautical engineer has decided to go to Taiwan to see his relatives. This is really very interesting.

Their application for returning to Taiwan to see their relatives has been approved. Will the Taiwan authorities allow these two "martyrs" to reappear in Taiwan? This is naturally most interesting.

TEXTBOOK ISSUE NOT SOLVED WITH JAPAN STATEMENT

[Special Feature by Tokyo correspondent Chi Hsi-ching [7871 4406 1987]: "A Look at the Japanese Government Statement on Correcting Errors"]

[Text] Tokyo, 27 Aug -- Precisely 1 month after China lodged a protest with the Japanese Education Ministry against the distortion of history on the screening of textbooks, the Japanese Government today officially decided not to make a prompt technical revision on the textbooks but to instead refer the matter to the Textbook Authorization Council. Practical technical revision will be made on the textbooks for use in the 1985 fiscal year.

The view of the Japanese Government was published at the prime minister's official residence at 4 a.m. today in the form of a statement by the chief of the Prime Minister's Secretariat and chief Cabinet Secretary Kiichi Miyazawa. Then at 5 A.M. Education Minister Heiji Ogawa explained at a press conference some relevant, concrete measures. Shortly before this, the Japanese Government had briefed the Chinese side on the contents of the government view through diplomatic channels in both Tokyo and Beijing.

In his statement, Kiichi Miyazawa touched on four points. First he reaffirmed that the Japanese Government and people fully understand the great suffering and damage which past Japanese actions had brought onto the peoples of China and Korea as well as other Asian countries, and have made a profound self-examination in this respect. He said that so far Japan has not changed in the least its understanding of the Sino-Japanese joint statement.

He went on to indicate that the spirit of the Sino-Japanese joint statement should naturally be respected in school education and in the screening of textbooks. Japan modestly respects Chinese and South Korean criticism of the textbooks and the government will undertake, on its own responsibility, to make the necessary amendments. When talking about specific measures of correction, he aid that, when screening textbooks in the future, the Textbook Authorization Council will revise its screening criteria and strive to reflect the spirit stated above. With respect to the terms used in the textbooks already screened, prompt measures will be adopted to reflect a similar spirit.

Before undertaking technical revisions, the education minister will, as an interim measure, issue a statement in order that the spirit stated above can be fully reflected in practical classroom teachings.

In reply to questions raised by reporters following Kiichi Miyazawa's statement, Education Minister Meiji Ogawa explained the specific measures that can be taken under the conditions of upholding the original textbook screening system. He first of all indicated that the screening of textbooks conducted once every 3 years will be moved up a year and held in 1984. That is to say, technical revisions can be realized in the textbooks to be used in the 1985 fiscal year. As for the textbooks already screened, it is impossible to make a direct revision under the original screening system. In the fiscal years 1983 and 1984, the spirit of the Sino-Japanese joint statement will be fully reflected in practical classroom teachings through the education minister's statement and the Education Ministry's announcement. The announcement of the Education Ministry, 156,000 copies in all, will be distributed to all primary schools, senior and junior middle schools and universities throughout the country and the education councils in various localities. In other words, the textbooks for use next year and the year after will still retain the trace of the Education Ministry's distortion of history. The teachers will only make oral technical revisions in practical education.

Thus, the responsibility for approving the technical revision of textbooks will be shifted to the Textbook Authorization Council, the advisory panel of the Education Ministry. In his statement reflecting the government's view, the chief of Prime Minister's Secretariat did not make an explicit pledge on the technical revision. After the government view has been published, the ruling Liberal-Democratic Party and the various Japanese circles are sure to make different responses. Some will agree while others will oppose. The Suzuki Cabinet can make use of the Textbook Authorization Council, chiefly composed of nongovernmental personages, as a buffer institution and then make a final decision after weighing the advantages and disadvantages.

Since the Japanese Government can decide to move up the screening of textbooks for a year under the existing textbook screening system, why is it impossible to make a prompt technical revision? It is doubtful whether this stalling tactic of the Japanese Government can be accepted by China and South Korea. China's envoy to Japan, Wang Xiaoyun, indicated last night that as far as he was concerned, he was dissatisfied with this view. It can be expected that the textbook issue will not be solved with today's publication of the Japanese Government "view."

PAPER QUERIES CHOICE OF DELEGATION TO UK

[Editorial: "Five Go To Speak for Hong Kong"]

[Text] The governor is off to Britain, trailing in his wake a hand-picked team of "representatives of the Hong Kong people" -- all members of Umelco [unofficial members of the Legislative Council].

In a rare departure from the usual convention that government decisions emerge from a mysterious conclave of divinely inspired anonymities, an official has revealed that the hand which did the picking was that of Sir Edward himself.

We must sympathise with Sir Edward in being required, at this early stage in his governorship, to undertake the Solomon-worthy task of picking five people to represent the population of Hong Kong.

And we will not hold against him the fact that we do not think he has done the job particularly well.

We're quite prepared to believe that the governor looked far and wide or expertise. But we venture to suggest that he didn't look far and wide enough.

If he was seeking people to take to Britain to assure the British of Hong Kong's loyalty, he has done a fine joh. But if he was seeking people who would let the British know how Hong Kong people really feel about Hong Kong's future, he hasn't done so well.

Such a trip should not be seen as an occasion for high-ranking members of our community to hone their diplomatic skills, to offer a series of unassailable but trite observations, to tell the British what the British want to hear. It should, rather, be an occasion for honesty and straight talk -- for clear signals.

And perhaps a clearer signal might have come from Teachers' Union boss Szeto Wah or some members of the Christian Industrial Committee.

Somebody once remarked that clarity and public accountability tend to go together, like nuts and bolts. People who write and speak in the public arena have a certain obligation, therefore, to turn the wrench every once in a while in an act of preventive maintenance.

The urgency is unmistakable, and the problems themselves are interrelated -- although the stock market seems slightly less nervous these days.

There are those who believe that public opinion in Hong Kong, which apparently favors the status quo, has become a bargaining chip for the British in the forthcoming negotiations with the Chinese.

In fact, Lord Maclehose has called upon Hong Kong people to speak up; and Denis Bray has said the local press should tell the unofficials what to say.

Are these indications that the British are rallying support from Hong Kong people to strengthen the British position in the negotiations?

There have been hints about what Britain's "bottom line" will be.

Mrs Thatcher apparently hardened her position after the Falklands crisis. She emphasized self-determination for the people. This may have some bearing on Hong Kong.

Leaks about China's plans for Hong Kong's future put the ball in Britain's court. London is now preparing for the talks and dropping hints about its reaction.

China, meanwhile, has made it clear that the sovereignty issue is not negotiable.

If an agreement is signed between Britain and China the question of defense comes into the picture. Such questions must be raised before de facto recognition of sovereignty leads to de jure recognition.

If there is to be de facto recognition of sovereignty, all British troops here will have to pull out -- as a gesture of goodwill if nothing else.

Our scenario has the whole periphery of Hong Kong and Kowloon protected by Chinese troops, with Hong Kong contributing to the cost.

But one thing is certain: China has sealed its weakest point by asserting that it would regain Hong Kong's sovereignty.

To the Chinese, the problem would only be one of determining how much of a post-1997 British presence (not necessarily official) would be acceptable, and how much of a post-1997 Chinese official presence there should be if the prosperity of Hong Kong and its status as a free trade port and financial centre is not to be jeopardized.

They are from Bangladesh, India, Japan, Malaysia, Nepal, Papua, New Guinea, the Philippines, Singapore, Sri Lanka, Thailand and China. The seminar, co-sponsored by the U.N. Economic and Social Commission for Asia and the Pacific (ESCAP) and the All-China Youth Federation, opened in the Chinese capital earlier today.

"This is conducive to youth work in these countries," he said.

ESCAP official Larry Cheah, on behalf of those attending the seminar, thanked the Chinese Government and youth organizations for helping arrange the seminar.

Present were Liu Weiming, acting president of the All-China Youth Federation; officials from the Ministry of Foreign Affairs and the Ministry of Education; and Nessim Shallon, resident coordinator of the U.N. System's Operational Activities for Development.

OW281648 Beijing XINHUA in English 1637 GMT 28 Aug 82

[Text] Beijing, August 28 (XINHUA) -- Vice-Premier Wan Li met with more than 50 Chinese and foreign geologists in the Great Hall of the People this afternoon. The celebration activities and the symposium will begin in Beidaihe (a summer resort) August 31 and conclude September 4.

In a conversation with the guests, the vice-premier said: "A country needs to make a thorough investigation of the mineral resources if it wants to build itself. In the field of geological science and prospecting, we should learn from the advanced countries, and we are willing to cooperate with them."

The vice-premier said: "It is significant for Chinese and foreign geologists to come together and exchange experience. This will help promote friendship and cooperation among them." He said he wished the symposium success.

Present at the meeting were Sun Daguang, Chinese minister of geology and minerals; Zhad Dongwan, vice-minister of the State Scientific and Technological Commission, and Huang Jiqing, president of the Geological Society of China. Minister Sun gave a banquet this evening in honor of the guests.

NATO TO CONDUCT 'AUTUMN FORGE' MANEUVERS

[Text] Brussels, August 29 (XINHUA) -- In spite of the routine-business nature of the NATO's "Autumn Forge" manoeuvres, the situation and the preparations for a war in Europe, if any, have been always taken into consideration, a spokesman at SHAPE (Supreme Headquarters of Allied Powers Europe) told XINHUA recently.

Such manoeuvres as "Autumn Forge" which will begin on September 2 was initiated in 1975 and has been conducted annually in the ACE (Allied Command Europe) area between northern Norway and eastern Turkey. With some 24 sub-exercises and 250,000 soldiers, this year's "Autumn Forge" from the beginning of September through mid-November will be highlighted as in past years by several major exercises in each of the ACE regions.

The spokesman noted that the effectiveness of the "flexible response strategy" should be proved through the manoeuvres. And that's why defensive action will be emphasized during the manoeuvres on the one hand, and offensive operation will be paid much attention on the other.

In addition, he said, every NATO soldier must have in mind the military threat to NATO and the potential enemy. It is even more important for them to be able to recognize through exercises enemy's equipment and tactics, and at the same time to see the advantages of their own. Besides, more reservists will take part in this year's autumn manoeuvres than previous ones, because wartime mobilization of manpower is especially important for NATO, he said.

The traditional annual exercise "Reforger", will continue until October 20 to redeploy the NATO-committed U.S. troops through shipping and airlift to Europe, mainly the northern and central regions. This is specifically designed to display U.S. ability and resolve to reinforce the West European continent in a future war.

Other highlights will be "Bold Guard"; a field training will take part. Exercise in Zealand Islands of Denmark and Schleswig-Holstein of West Germany and the central army group field training exercise "Carbine Fortress" scheduled for September 13 to 23 and involving about 70,000 troops in the Wuerzburg area of West Germany. [passage as received] They are aimed to improve combat effectiveness through joint operations and to increase the flexibility and interoperability among the AFCENT (Allied Forces Central Europe) forces.

TELEPHONE CABLE AGREEMENT SIGNED WITH U.S. FIRM

[Text] Beijing, August 27 (XINHUA) -- An agreement on the transfer of technology for manufacturing telephone cables has been signed by Chinese corporations with the Essex Group Inc., a subsidiary of the United Technologies Corporation, U.S.A., according to the Ministry of Posts and Telecommunications.

FOREIGN INVESTMENTS IN U.S. REPORTED RISING

[Text] Beijing, August 27 (XINHUA) -- Foreign investment in the U.S. increased by a record 31 per cent last year while U.S. investment abroad slowed to the lowest growth rate since World War II, according to Washington reports quoting the latest figures released by the U.S. Commerce Department.

Foreign investment in the U.S. rose 21.4 billion U.S. dollars to 89.8 billion by the end of 1981. Companies from Japan, France, Kuwait, Great Britain, West Germany, the Netherlands and Canada accounted for most of the increase. The biggest increases in foreign investment were registered in the manufacturing and oil industries, amounting to 4.4 billion and 5.5 billion dollars respectively. U.S. direct investment abroad last year grew by only 5 per cent, or 11.8 billion dollars, to 227.3 billion dollars.

Economists say that the rapid foreign investment rise in the U.S. and the slow increase in U.S. investment overseas are indications that the balance of economic strength between the U.S. and its Western allies is experiencing a change.

KCNA REPORTS DEFECTION OF U.S. SOLDIER TO DPRK

OW281644 Beijing XINHUA in English 1600 GMT 28 Aug 82

JAPANESE OFFICIAL'S TEXTBOOK STATEMENT REJECTED

Vice Minister's Statement

OW281457 Beijing in Japanese to Japan 1330 GMT 28 Aug 82

[Text] Chinese Vice Foreign Minister Wu Xueqian met Japanese Ambassador Katori today to convey the Chinese Government's basic position regarding Japanese Chief Cabinet Secretary Miyazawa's statement on the textbook issue. At the meeting, Vice Minister Wu Xueqian stated:

On 26 August the Japanese Government transmitted to the Chinese side the contents of the statement issued by Chief Cabinet Secretary Miyazawa and made related explanations.

The Chinese Government studied the statement and, as a result, found it far from satisfying Chinese demands. It cannot but express its disappointment. Although the statement says that the Japanese Government carefully listens to criticism and will correct related accounts in textbooks on its responsibility, it indicates no clear-cut, specific measures for correction. The Chinese Government cannot agree to it. The Chinese people also cannot accept it. Vice Minister Wu Xueqian added:

The Chinese side has repeatedly pointed out that it is a serious matter of principle whether or not to tolerate the history of aggression against China by Japanese militarism and that it cannot afford to take an ambiguous attitude. The Chinese Government's attitude is clear and consistent. We cannot agree to the attitude of the Japanese Government which, under the pretext of preserving the so-called textbook authorization system, refuses to take resolute action in correcting mistakes made in the process of textbook authorization. The Chinese Government once again expresses its desire that the Japanese Government take a firm and effective action, correct the mistakes made by the Japanese Education Ministry in the process of textbook authorization at the earliest possible date and thus bring the issue to a satisfactory settlement in such a way as to contribute to the development of relations between China and Japan.

Ambassador Katori in his reply said that he will immediately report the Chinese Government's position to the Japanese Government.

RENMIN RIBAO Commentator

HK300358 Beijing XINHUA Domestic Service in Chinese 0303 GMT 30 Aug 82

[Text] Beijing, 30 Aug (XINHUA) -- Today's RENMIN RIBAO carries a commentator's article entitled "The Japanese Government Must Concretely Correct the Mistakes." The text is as follows:

The move by the Japanese Education Ministry in distorting the history of Japanese militarist aggression when revising school textbooks has aroused strong opposition and protest from China and other Asian countries. After delaying for more than 1 month, the Japanese Government announced on 26 August, in the form of statements issued by the chief cabinet secretary and the education minister, the counterstrategy that Japan had decided to adopt. Although the Japanese Government declared that it would listen to criticisms and be responsible for correcting the relevant passages in the textbooks, it did not put forward clear-cut and concrete measures. People obviously cannot be satisfied with this ambiguous attitude.

The Japanese Government has reiterated that it has not changed its stand of profound self-reproach for the tremendous damage done to the Chinese people by the war. Since this is so, the government should honestly admit that it is completely wrong to prettify militarism and conceal war crimes when revising school textbooks. Instead of doing this, however, the Japanese Government has evaded the issue of whether the war launched by Japan against China in the past was actually a war of aggression, while ambiguously saying that they are willing to "listen attentively to criticisms." Can this be described as a serious attitude? The Japanese Government says it will "be responsible for correcting" the relevant passages in the textbooks. Since this is so, they should immediately take concrete and specific measures to correct the places that were incorrectly revised so as to avoid disseminating the error and leaving a legacy of trouble to Japan's next generation. Instead of doing this, however, the Japanese Government wants to use as is the textbooks that distort the history of Japanese aggression, and delay correcting them until the next screening 2 years hence; and they do not even explain how the mistakes are to be corrected. Can people accept this? Fair-minded public opinion in Japan has also pointed out: "This government explanation indulges in petty maneuvers to evade the issue without providing any way of solving the problem in essence" and is "an attempt to blur responsibilities and get by under false pretenses." They have demanded that the Japanese Government "immediately correct the mistakes in distorting history."

On the textbook issue, certain people in Japan are always delaying and even refusing a correction of the mistakes under the pretext of preserving the Japanese screening system. This is untenable. The screening of school textbooks is a Japanese internal affair, and we have never intended to interfere in it. However, does this mean that, under the pretext of the textbook screening system, the history of Japanese aggression can be distorted at will and the national feelings of people of other countries hurt? Does it mean then that there is no need to correct the mistakes? Moreover, Japanese public opinion has pointed out many times that the Japanese Education Ministry itself has precedents for amending new textbooks that have already been screened. Former Education Minister Hagai has pointed out that according to the present Japanese screening regulations, mistakes in school textbooks can be corrected with urgency. Therefore, if the Japanese Government continues to stall under the pretext of preserving the screening system and fails to correct the mistakes of the Education Ministry in screening the books at the earliest possible date, that can only make people doubt the Japanese Government's real sincerity in solving the problem.

On the question of revising the school textbooks, the attitude of the Chinese Government and people has been clear-cut all along, and that is, mistakes must be corrected, and then things will be alright. The current issue is that the Japanese Government must make a prompt decision and not act in a sloppy way. The Chinese people deeply regret and are unhappy over the fact that the textbook issue has dragged on and is still unsolved. The explanation given by Miyazawa on behalf of the Japanese Government is unacceptable to the Chinese people and also leaves the Japanese people dissatisfied. We hope that the Japanese Government will take a broad and long-term view and rapidly correct the Education Ministry's mistakes in screening textbooks so that the relations of friendship and cooperation between China and Japan, established on the basis of the Sino-Japanese joint statement and the Sino-Japanese treaty of peace and friendship, will be preserved and developed and so that Japan may be able to present a good image in the international community.

XINHUA 30 Aug Commentary

[Text] Beijing, August 30 (XINHUA correspondent) -- In his August 26 statement on the textbook issue, Kiichi Miyazawa, chief cabinet secretary of the Japanese Government, expressed Japan's readiness to pay full heed to criticisms and undertake to rectify the mistakes in the textbooks, but he failed to specify any practical and effective measures in this connection. So it is quite reasonable for the Chinse Government and people not to agree with his statement.

Since the people of China and other Asian countries have strongly protested against the distortion of the historical fact of Japanese militarists aggression, the only way for a solution to the problem is that the Japanese Government takes their criticisms seriously and adopts prompt and decisive measures to correct the mistakes in the textbooks.

Whether or not to amend the history textbooks which whitewash Japanese militarism is a matter of principle showing whether or not Japan admits its history of militarist aggression. The Japanese Government, however, is still ambiguous on this matter, and the August 26 statement does not look like one that undertakes responsibility to make amendments. The Japanese statement says that for future textbook authorization, the textbooks will be discussed and the authorization criteria will be revised in the Textbook Authorization Research Council and care will be taken that the above gist is duly realized. (The gist mentioned in the first part of the Japanese statement means Japan's deep reproach on itself for its aggression and its commitment towards the Sino-Japanese joint statement.)

This shows clearly that the Japanese Government does not want to take responsibility immediately to correct the mistakes in the textbooks and pass the buck to the Textbook Authorization Research Council which is only an advisory body of the education minister. Thus the statement to take "responsibility to make the necessary amendments" becomes an empty pledge.

As for the statement that measures will be taken to realize the gist, but before this, the minister of education will issue a policy statement, this is tantamount to saying that the screened textbooks will be used in Japanese schools for, as explained by the Japanese side, at least two years without any correction of the mistakes. It also fails to make it clear whether the minister's statement will admit the historical fact that Japanese militarists made an aggression against China.

Japanese newspapers have pointed out that the education minister's statement will be carried in the ministry's publications, and not issued as a government decree, so that it will have no binding force of law and its "force of guidance is doubtful".

All this has made it clear that the Japanese Government's statement is nothing but a prevarication. It reveals no intention to take effective measures to correct the mistake made by the Education Ministry. It shows only an attitude which cannot be termed as serious, still less sincere. The Chinese people surely cannot accept such a statement.

Japanese Demand Corrections

[Text] Tokyo, August 27 (XINHUA) -- Japanese opposition parties and personages have criticized the government shilly-shally towards correction of history textbooks and demanded necessary corrections be made immediately.

Chief Cabinet Secretary Kiichi Miyazawa said in a statement Thursday the Japanese Government would heed the amendment of the controversial history textbooks -- not immediately but in two years time.

Japanese opposition parties such as the Socialist Party, the Komei Party and the New Liberal Club in their separate statements issued on the same day, sternly criticized the official statement and demanded a prompt amendment.

The Komei Party stressed in a statement that what Japan did to China and Korea was "sheer acts of aggression" and that the Cabinet should unify views and state them clearly both at home and abroad.

In an article published in today's MAINICHI SHIMBUN, Michio Nagai, former Japanese education minister, criticized the Education Ministry for its shilly-shally towards the correction of mistakes. The Education Ministry refused to make immediate correction on the pretext of censorship.

"The mistakes can be immediately corrected even under the present rules of censorship which contain one article reading, corrections should be made immediately whenever mistakes are found in the course of the study. Won't this article suit the present condition perfectly?" the former education minister said.

He pointed out that in this way the Japanese ministry could correct the mistakes without losing face.

Michio Nagai called for the implementation of the principles of Sino-Japanese joint statement on the normalization of diplomatic relations between the two countries in 1972.

Prime Minister Zenko Suzuki and Chief Cabinet Secretary Kiichi Miyazawa reiterated on Aug. 23 and 26 separately that Japan's attitude towards the Sino-Japanese joint statement remained unchanged.

Masami Yamada, professor of Toyko University wrote in today's ASAHI SHIMBUN: "It is absolutely impermissible to teach our children with incorrect textbooks for another two years."

Today's YOMIURI SHIMBUN carried statements made by a number of textbook compilers who demanded the Education Ministry make corrections without any further delay.

Masao Nishikawa, associate profressor of Tokyo University, put it more bluntly: "Frankly speaking, the government statement is mere evasion. It contains no substantive solution."

Historians Criticize Statement

OW292000 Beijing XINHUA in English 1948 GMT 29 Aug 82

[Text] Tokyo, August 29 (XINHUA) -- 150 Japanese history scholars and educators today rallied in Tokyo, sternly criticizing the Japanese Government's statement on the textbook issue as "an attempt to evade responsibility".

In the revised Japanese history textbooks the Japanese aggression against China and other Asian countries was whitewashed as an "advance." Referring to the matter, Chief Cabinet Secretary Kiichi Miyazawa said in a statement on August 26 that the Japanese Government will give heed to criticisms and undertake to make corrections. But he didn't say when and how.

Speaking at this afternoon's meeting, Honda, a responsible member of the Japanese Society of History, called the government statement "a fraud." As a matter of fact, he pointed out, the government neither admitted the war against China as one of aggression nor planned to correct the mistakes in the schoolbooks.

Takahashi, chairman of the Japanese Council of History Teachers, named today's rally a "trial of those history forgers." He recalled the Japanese history of aggression in the 1930's and 1940's to support his repudiation of the textbook absurdities.

"If the atrocious outrages Japan committed against China and Korea didn't constitute an act of aggression," questioned Eguchi, a noted Japanese historian and professor of Tsuda Juku University, "what then on earth could be named imperialist aggression?"

Today's meeting was called by the Japanese Society of History and the Japanese Council of History Teachers.

A statement adopted at the meeting pointed out that the government's view expressed on August 26 represented "an attempt to evade responsibility and mislead the people" and suggested "no intention to make self-examination." It declared, the assertion of leading Japanese officials that whether the war unleashed by Japan is one of aggression "should be left to historians of future generations for judgement" will probably "lead the Japanese people onto the road of militarism again".

The statement asked the Japanese Government "to correct immediately the mistake of distorting history and offer an apology to the people."

At the meeting, speakers also angrily denounced the remarks made by Post and Telecommunications Minister Noboru Minowa yesterday that there are "traitors" in Japan. They demanded an investigation of his responsibility for making such an allegation.

Japanese Press Reaction

[Text] Tokyo, August 27 (XINHUA) -- A number of Japanese newspapers has urged the government to correct its "appasing" attitude toward the Education Ministry's mistakes.

Referring to Chief Cabinet Secretary Kiichi Miyazawa's remarks on the textbook issue on August 26, the newspapers pointed out that although the government had indicated its intention to correct the mistakes in the textbooks, it failed to take measures for "immediate correction."

TOKYO SHIMBUN said in an editorial: "The government's views on the textbook issue cannot be considered concise and candid." It said that the history textbooks approved by the Education Ministry described Japan's "aggression" against China as "advance" and Koreas "independence movement" as "insurgence". The correction of such mistakes, it said, "cannot be interpreted as interference in internal affairs once they are recognized. No one would object to any corrections made within the framework of the textbook authorization system."

The editorial went on to say that despite the government's intention to correct the mistakes, the textbooks will remain in use till 1985. In the interval, administrative guidance will be made through the "Education Ministry Bulletin" as suggested by the education minister. "This is an appeasing method." It is doubtful that the purpose of the Japan-China joint statement is fully understood, the editorial said.

An editorial of ASAHI SHIMBUN said what counts is not words but how sincere is the government in its future action. As a matter of fact, action should start immediately. It demanded that the Education Ministry review and correct the textbook expressions as soon as possible. This should not be confined to the words and phrases already pointed out, but a more extensive study of the contents should be carried out according to the spirit of the government's view. The editorial said: In the post-Meiji years, every time when our country went astray, the cause was interference with education. This trait has showed no change in the post-war years."

The editorial of MAINICHI SHIMBUN said that the issue of distorted history "could be corrected immediately by means of issuing errata under the current system. For an early solution of the problem, this should be done." The editorial pointed out: "The reasons offered by the Education Ministry in refusing to make corrections are untenable."

YOMIURI SHIMBUN in an editorial pointed out that the Japanese Education Ministry's attempt to tone down the Japanese aggression, which is common knowledge in the world, by describing it as "advance" is a violation of the spirit of the Japan-China joint statement and has aroused resentment in Asia. Shoichi Dikawa, a correspondent of the newspaper, pointed out in an article that Miyazawa's statement "does not relieve Asia of its concern."

The editorial of NIHON KEIZAI SHIMBUN said: "The overwhelming majority of the Japanese people realize that war of aggression is no good. Then why not resolve the problem immediately?" "The substitution of 'advance' for aggression may be the idea of the hawks in the Liberal Democratic Party, but it definitely is not the view of the common Japanese people, nor that of the academic circles."

XINHUA COMMENTARY BLASTS SRV FRIENDSHIP CLAIM

["Commentary: Vietnam's Sophistry Won't Alter Facts -- By Correspondent Li Ming" -- XINHUA headline]

[Text] Beijing, August 27 (XINHUA) -- Vietnamese leaders, official departments and mass media have recently launched a propaganda campaign on Sino-Vietnamese relations. The Vietnamese party organ NHAN DAN alleged on August 23 that in the past few years "the Vietnamese side has never taken the initiative to aggravate the relations between China and Vietnam, nor has it created antagonistic tension or conflicts against China." The Vietnamese side, it claimed, "has constantly and sincerely hoped and exerted every effort to seek a negotiated settlement of all differences.

But the truth about the developments in Sino-Vietnamese relations in the past few years gives the lie to the allegations of the Vietnamese paper.

China has always stood for a negotiated settlement of problems pending between China and Vietnam. Proceeding from this sincere desire, the Chinese Government sent a delegation to Hanoi in April, 1979 for talks with the Vietnamese side and put forth a fair and reasonable eight-point proposal:

But the Vietnamese side rejected the proposal and turned the conference table into an anti-China platform. Thus, the Vietnamese side has wrecked the negotiations and brought them to a deadlock.

In an attempt to sow discord between China and Southeast Asian nations, Hanoi has in recent years concocted and spread a so-called "Chinese threat" and made it an excuse not to withdraw its troops from Kampuchea.

At home, Vietnamese leaders and news media jumped at every chance to besmirch China and inflame anti-China feeling.

At the Vietnamese Communist Party's Fifth National Congress convened last March Le Duan, general secretary of the party, once again proclaimed it a Vietnamese national policy to fight China. He also named China as Vietnam's "direct and dangerous enemy" and declared "readiness" to fight "a large-scale" war with China.

How can all these statements and acts justify the Vietnamese allegation that in the past few years "the Vietnamese side has never taken the initiative to aggravate the relations between the two countries."

Their claim that "Vietnam has never created antagonistic tension or conflicts against China" is even more ridiculous. In the past few years, Vietnamese troops have often reopened fire at Chinese border towns and villages, killing local inhabitants, shelling Chinese hamlets and damaging farms. They have brought great losses in lives and property to the Chinese border inhabitants. In 1980 alone, the Vietnamese created armed clashes and intruded into Chinese territory on more than 1,900 occasions. In May, 1981, Vietnamese regiments, under the cover of artillery fire, launched attacks on the Fakashan area in Yunnan Province and the Koulin area in Guangxi Autonomous Region, seriously aggravating the situation in the Sino-Vietnamese border areas. Apart from that, Vietnamese troops have incessantly encroached upon Chinese territorial waters, killing or kidnapping Chinese fishermen and looting Chinese fighting boats. Vietnamese planes intruded into China's air space for reconnaissance provocations.

Facts about Sino-Vietnamese relations in the past few years show that Vietnam, while paying lip service to "negotiations", has been continuously aggravating the bilateral relations by befouling the atmosphere of negotiations between the two countries. In fact, "negotiation" has been used by Vietnam as a smokescreen to deceive public opinion both at home and abroad and to cover up its anti-China activities.

We hope that the Vietnamese authorities would give up their policy of hostility towards China and seeking regional hememonism, and show their sincerity by concrete actions. If they continue to play the trick to say one thing while doing another, they will come to no good end.

OPENING OF BORDER PASS WITH PAKISTAN CELEBRATED

[Text] Urumqi, August 27 (XINHUA) -- The opening of Khunjerab Pass on the Chinese and Pakistan borders was celebrated at a ceremony held at the pass today. It is one of the passes along China's ancient "Silk Road."

Ismail Amat, leader of the Chinese delegation and chairman of the people's government of the Xinjiang Uygur Autonomous Region, and Mohyuddin Baluch, leader of the Pakistan delegation and minister of communications, addressed the ceremony. Both spoke highly of the cooperation and great friendship between the two governments and two peoples.

Ismail Amat and Mohyuddin Baluch also cut the ribbon for the ceremony and unveiled a monument to the pass.

A protocol on the opening of Khunjerab Pass was signed in Islamabad August 22 between the Governments of China and Pakistan. The opening of the pass will help promote border trade and cultural exchanges.

Attending today's ceremony were Wang Chuanbin, Chinese ambassador to Pakistan; Chen Zhaoyuan, director of the Second Asian Affairs Department of the Chinese Foreign Ministry; Dr. Maqbool Ahmad Bhatty, Pakistan ambassador to China; and other government officials of the two countries.

After the opening ceremony, herdsmen of the Taxkorgan autonomous county of Tajik nationality in Xinjiang entertained the Pakistan delegation with horse-racing and other traditional games.

AFP Reports Indian Protest

OW281001 Hong Kong AFP in English 0850 GMT 28 Aug 82

[By Elisebeth Chang]

[Text] Beijing, Aug 28 (AFP) -- The Chinese Government today appeared to reject the recent Indian protest on the opening of a new pass on the strategic Karakoram Road linking China with Pakistan. "These are normal affairs between two neighbouring countries and do not involve the question of ownership of Kashir", a spokesman for the Chinese Foreign Ministry said.

The Khunjerab Pass was opened yesterday and the ceremony was attended by both Chinese and Pakistani officials.

"China and Pakistan built the highway linking the two countries and have opened the pass on their border to conduct border trade", the spokesman added. Pakistan has already rejected the Indian claim earlier this week that the Khunjerab Pass region was legally part of the Indian union.

Both Pakistan and India claim sovereignty over the whole of Kashmir, which has been divided between the two since 1948 -- half being administered by Islamabad and the half by New Delhi.

The official Chinese spokesman restated China's position that Kashmir "was a question between India and Pakistan". "China's position on this issue is consistent and known to all", he continued. China is in favor of self-determination for Kashmir and supports the United Nations' call for a plebiscite.

The Karakoram Road is 800 km (480 miles) long. Built in the 1960's and 1970's, it links the Chinese province of Xinjiang and the Pakistani province of Punjab. The opening of the Khunjerab Pass at 5,000 metres altitude will facilitate access on the Tibetan side.

INDIRA GANDHI LEAVES MAPUTO FOR HOME 27 AUG

[Text] Maputo, August 27 (XINHUA) -- Indian Prime Minister Indira Gandhi left here for home today after a two-day state visit to Mozambique.

The prime minister held talks with Mozambican President Samora Moises Machel on bilateral relations and international issues of mutual interest. They expressed concern over the increasing militarization and nuclearization in the Indian Ocean, and agreed to coordinate their efforts to transform the region into a demilitarized and denuclearized zone.

President Samora condemned the Pretoria regime for preserving colonialism in Namibia, occupying part of the territory of Angola, and organizing armed and terrorist activities against Lesotho, Botswana, Zambia and Zimbabwe.

In response, Mrs. Gandhi told the Mozambican leader that "India stands solidly behind you" in the growing conflict between the white-minority Pretoria government and the black-ruled states of Southern Africa, notably Angola, Mozambique, Zimbabwe and Botswana.

President Samora expressed dissatisfaction with the "passive" stand taken by the international community in the face of Israeli aggression. He reaffirmed the Mozambican stand: As a prerequisite to the solution of Middle East problem, Israel must withdraw unconditionally from the occupied Arab territories and recognize the rights of the Palestinian people to self-determination, the state of Palestine and the Palestine Liberation Organization (PLO) as the legitimate representative of the Palestinian people.

The Indian prime minister arrived in Maputo on August 25 after a visit to Mauritius. President Samora had visited India in April this year.

DPA: FRG'S BAHR COMMENTS ON BEIJING TALKS

LD271040 Hamburg DPA in German 0905 GMT 27 Aug 82

[Text] Beijing, SPD Chairman Willy Brandt will visit the People's Republic of China next spring. The Chinese side has affirmed the invitation to Brandt in talks with SPD politician Egon Bahr in Beijing. Bahr said in Beijing today that Brandt would link his first vist to China at the end of March or the beginning of April with his trip to a socialist international meeting in Australia.

For some time now the Chinese leadership has been trying to establish contacts with social democratic and socialist parties in Western Europe. The SPD does not yet have official links with Beijing.

Bahr, who has been in China since Monday, today met Zhang Wenjin, vice foreign minister responsible for Western Europe. In an interim assessment of his political talks in China so far, Bahr told DPA that his impression was that the differences and political disagreements between China and the Soviet Union are too great for them to be overcome in the foreseeable future. As a "large-scale normalization" is thus not possible, attempts are now being made to achieve small settlements, Bahr said, and pointed out the forthcoming resumption of trade between China and the USSR in the border area, sports contacts and other bilateral measures.

Asked about relations between China and the United States, Bahr said that his Chinese talks partners had stressed that for them the problem of American arms supplies to Taiwan has still not been solved by the recent communique agreed on between Beijing and Washington. Beijing regards this latest agreement with the United States merely as a first step and now wants to wait and see if the Washington administration adheres to the communique. In its relations with the United States the Taiwan question plays an "enormous role."

Bahr also said that he had a "very frank talk" with Vice Foreign Minister Zhang Wenjin about the world situation and the growing threat to world peace. They also discussed arms control questions.

Earlier, Bahr had also met Qian Liren, deputy director of the International Liaison Department of the CPC Central Committee. At the end of next week Bahr is travelling to Moscow.

[Text] Beijing, August 28 (XINHUA) -- The Standing Committee of the Chinese National People's Congress gave a banquet here this evening in honor of the delegation from the Bureau of the French National Assembly led by Louis Mermaz, president of the assembly. Representing N.P.C. Standing Committee Chairman Ye Jianying, Vice-Chairman Peng Chong presided over the banquet.

In his speech, Peng Chong said that China has consistently attached importance to enhancing its relations with France, and bilateral relations have continued to grow in various fields in the past year and more. He said: "The friendship between the two peoples is built on the basis of mutual respect and equal treatment. Though different are the social systems, histories and cultural traditions of our two countries, we both treasure our own national independence and national dignity, oppose the policy of expansion and make unremitting efforts to overcome the danger of war and safeguard world peace. In the face of the turbulent international situation, it is very important to consolidate and develop freindly relations of cooperation between the two countries."

He said: "Friendly ties have long existed between the French National Assembly and the National People's Congress of China. After the establishment of diplomatic relations between China and France, the friendly exchanges between the two parliaments have increased and become closer." He said that the National People's Congress is willing to continue its effort to enhance the friendly feelings between the two peoples.

Vice-Chairman Peng also referred to China's efforts to turn the country into a socialist state with a high standard of democracy and civilization and a fairly developed economy. "While relying on its own efforts, China needs to increase and strengthen economic, technical, scientific and cultural exchanges with all friendly countries on the basis of equality and mutual benefit," he said. He said France has a good foundation for developing economic and technical exchanges with China.

President Mermaz, in his speech, said that France and China had both suffered from wars and resisted foreign invasion. "Today our two countries firmly safeguard their national self-determination and rights to oppose outside interference. The French people deeply cherish peace and adhere to the principle of national dignity and independence, because we hold that peace can only be won on the basis of respecting the dignity of the people of various countries," he said.

Mermaz said: "It is unfortunate that in the present world, the non-interference policy is being trampled. Like China, France strongly condemns the infringement on the rights of the people in various regions, particularly in Asia, in Kampuchea and Lebanon for example. My country has played its role in restoring the sovereignty of the Lebanese people. We hope that the current solution permits Lebanon to restore its stability and development."

He said: "My country will exert its utmost to safeguard world peace and national rights. Together with the European community, we uphold some positive stands beneficial to North-South dialogue." In conclusion, he said that the current China visit of his delegation would help develop the existing "true and vital friendship" between the two countries. Before the banquet a cocktail party was held at which Louis and Mme Mermaz and other French guests chatted with members of the N.P.C. Standing Committee, N.P.C. deputies, leading members of related departments and people of various circles who had visited France.

EGYPT'S 'ALI CITED ON PALESTINIAN TALKS

[Text] Cairo, August 27 (XINHUA) -- Egyptian Deputy Premier and Foreign Minister Kamal Hasan 'Ali has advanced four conditions for the resumption of the Palestinian autonomy talks requested by Israeli and American officials, according to Cairo press today. The Egyptian deputy premier declared, first of all there must be a clear American-Israeli commitment on the withdrawal of Israeli troops from Lebanon so as to "create a climate for peace".

Secondly, he urged the United States to establish for itself a "clear concept of the points of difference" and a "viable framework for the proper interpretation of the Camp David accords."

The Cairo press noted that the American administration has so far only given a "vague promise" to work on Camp David agreements and still refused to have a dialogue with the Palestine Liberation Organization (PLO).

'Ali listed the recognition of the right of the Palestinians to self-determination as the third condition. He reaffirmed autonomy for both the Palestinian population and their land and made it clear in particular that self-determination should be applied to the inhabitants of east Jerusalem.

Finally, 'Ali called for a change in the Israeli concept of limited autonomy and in its policy of setting up settlements in the occupied territories. He stressed: "Israel also has to abandon its arbitrary practices on the West Bank and the Gaza Strip, including the dismissal of elected mayors and the disbanding of elected municipal councils."

It was reported that Israeli Foreign Minister Yitzhaq Shamir said in a recent article in THE WASHINGTON POST that "it is now time to resume the Palestinian autonomy talks for reaching a quick agreement." But he rejected any proposal for having the PLO join the negotiations and refused to recognize the Palestinians' right to self-determination. American State Department spokesman John Hughes has expressed welcome to Shamir's statement on resuming the autonomy negotiations.

U.S. REITERATES SUPPORT OF JORDANIAN SOVEREIGNTY

[Text] Washington, August 27 (XINHUA) -- U.S. State Department spokesman John Hughes reiterated today that the United States is committed to the territorial integrity and sovereignty of Jordan and its support for Jordan's "unique and enduring character". He made the statement at a news briefing when asked to comment on Israeli Defense Minister Ari'el Sharon's remarks in Washington.

Sharon, after meeting U.S. Secretary of State George Shultz this morning, bluntly told reporters that Israel "will never agree" to the creation of a Palestinian state in the occupied West Bank and Gaza Strip, claiming that "Jordan is a Palestinian state".

Sharon had visited the United States just before the Israeli invasion of Lebanon. He arrived here yesterday at a time when the evacuation of Palestinian fighters from west Beirut is under way in accordance with a U.S. sponsored plan and when there is talk about a "second phase" of withdrawal of "all foreign troops" from Lebanon and the resumption of negotiations for Palestinian autonomy.

He also met U.S. Defense Secretary Caspar Weinberger this morning. He discussed with U.S. officials the situation in the Middle East after the departure of PLO fighters and other issues.

PLO SPOKESMAN COMMENTS ON COOPERATION WITH JEWS

OW300926 Beijing XINHUA in English 0726 GMT 30 Aug 82

[Text] Washington, August 29 (XINHUA) -- The Palestine Liberation Organization (PLO) is planning to cooperate with the Jews in Palestine to build their part of the world together, a PLO spokesman said today in a television interview. When asked whether the Palestinians would accept the simultaneous existence of Israel, the spokesman, Bassam Abu Sharif, replied: "This is the PLO program. It was very clear. We would like very much to cooperate with the Jews in Palestine, and we are ready to go as long and as far as they are ready to go. We are really planning to build this part of the world together."

When one of the reporters spoke of Israel's intention to annex the occupied West Bank and the Gaza Strip, the spokesman reaffirmed that "the West Bank and Gaza are part of Palestine that was partly usurped in 1948 by the Zionist movement."

Therefore every meter of Palestine should be available for the Palestinians to live on and where they can establish their independent state, he said.

King Husayn of Jordan interviewed on the same program, when asked if he saw the PLO "as being finished as a fighting force" after it evacuated from Lebanon, said: "I don't believe it is finished. I believe that it is very much alive, the Palestinian issue, the Palestinian cause, the Palestinian just demands regarding to their rights on legitimate soil, and I believe that Palestine is the focus of attention of the world at this moment."

Refuting the allegation that there are differences between the Jordanians and the Palestinians on the sovereignty over the West Bank and the Gaza Strip, King Husayn stressed that "I will be supportive of all efforts to recover both the West Bank and Gaza for the people of Palestinian, for them to decide their future."

RENMIN RIBAO DISCUSSES MIDDLE EAST SITUATION

["Newsletter" by Lin Jiaoming [2651 4109 2494]: "PLO's Troop Withdrawal and Prospects for the Middle East Issue"]

[Text] After 77 days of arduous fighting in Lebanon, the PLO has finally withdrawan from west Beirut. This is a significant turning point in the quickly changing situation in Middle East. The Palestinians' struggle for the restoration of their national rights including the establishment of their own country has entered a new period.

The Israeli large-scale invasion in Lebanon this time has been aimed at wiping out the Palestinian military forces at a single stroke, destroying the military bases of the PLO and completely obliterating the existence of the Palestinian problem, thus enabling it to realize its ambition to control Lebanon and annex Gaza and the West Bank. Facts have proved that despite the tremendous price Israel has paid and despite the fact that it can run roughshod for a time because of its military position, it cannot achieve its aim. The Palestinian guerrillas in southern Lebanon continue to attack the enemy behind its front and the effective strength of the PLO has been preserved in northern Lebanon. The PLO fighters who have withdrawan from west Beirut will by no means give up their struggle because of a temporary setback. The Palestinians' struggle against Israel's occupation of Gaza and the West Bank will also go on. The leading members of the PLO headed by Yasir 'Arafat have firmly declared that the PLO is determined to continue its struggle for the establishment of a country of the Palestinians. Furthermore, through this war, the international prestige of the PLO has been greatly raised and the Palestinians' just struggle has won widespread support throughout the world including the sympathy and support of those Israeli people who have a sense of justice. This is something that Menahem Begin, Ari'el Sharon and their ilk never expected. The PLO's withdrawal from west Beirut has avoided, on one hand, the destruction of Beirut, and at the same time, enabled it to preserve its effective strength.

Now, people are talking about and paying attention to the PLO's struggle in the future. Some Arab public opinion upholds that the PLO will not abandon its armed struggle.

At the same time, people have also particularly noticed the political significance of PLO Chairman 'Arafat's public statement of his acceptance of "all UN resolutions on the Palestinian problem." The PLO has expressed its willingness to hold direct dialogue with the United States and to accept Israel as a party in the negotiations in the future. Thus, it has shown great flexibility in its political struggle which has drawn the attention of and been well-received by moderate Arab countries and West European countries. According to some newspapers in the Gulf countries, the PLO is making preparations to establish a provisional government in exile to shoulder the heavy responsibility for the political struggle in the future. According to estimates of some Arab press circle sources, Chairman 'Arafat will make an important statement about the PLO's position with regard to its future struggle, at the Arab summit conference that is to be held at the beginning of next month.

The United States is held unshirkably responsible for Israel's barbarous invasion of Lebanon. It has indulged Israel to carry out aggression and expansion in order to augment its military presence in the Middle East. Whether this will facilitate or harm the interests that it has already acquired in Middle East is a problem that some U.S. strategists, including some high-ranking intellectuals, have been considering. Some American newspaper columnists even said "the United States has already become mortgaged in Israel's political transactions." Through this war, the United States has cast an even worse figure in Middle East. Some of the Arab countries, such as Egypt and Saudi Arabia feel strong indignation toward the U.S. Government's policies in the Middle East and this cannot help but have a tremendous impact on relations between the United States and the Arab world. Some Egyptian newspapers have pointed out that the United has alleged that it will continue to safeguard the "Camp David accord," but now "the hope for a peaceful solution to the Palestinian problem has become increasingly thin." Recently, Secretary of State George P. Shultz and Secretary of Defense Caspar W. Weinberger have both said that "Israel should withdraw from the West Bank and Gaza" and that "the establishment of a Palestinian state will not pose any threat to Israel's security." Moreover, they have declared that the United States is seeking a new scheme for an overall solution to the Palestinian problem and thus it has attempted to clear itself of the bad impression it has given to the people and ease the tension in its relations with the Arab countries. Egyptian President Muhammad H. Mubarak has clearly stated that the premise for the resumption of the Middle East talks is that the United States recognizes the Palestinians' right to self-determination. Obviously, if the United States continues to refuse to recognize the Palestinians' right to self-determination, it will be impossible for it either to ease the tension in U.S.-Arab relations, which has been further worsened by the recent war, or to make any breakthrough in Middle East peace talks. The longer the United States delays the solution to this problem, the higher the price it has to pay.

The situation in Lebanon will continue to develop. Israel is deploying its army for a new war. People are paying close attention to whether a new conflict between Israel and Syria will break out in Al-Biqa' Valley. As the world press has pointed out, Israel will not withdraw easily from Lebanon. The holding of a general election in Lebanon does not mean that the situation will soon become quiet. The fifth Middle East war will influence the development of the overall Middle East situation for a fairly long time to come. As long as the Palestinian problem remains unsolved, there will be no peace or stability in the Middle East.

It adopted the following agenda for the congress:

1. Examine and approve the report of the Central Committee;

2. Examine and approve the constitution of the Communist Party of China;

3. Examine and approve the work report of the party's Central Commission for Discipline Inspection; and

4. Elect the central leading organs.

The meeting elected a 252-member presidium of the 12th national congress. Comrade Zhao Ziyang was elected secretary general of the congress.

The meeting was presided over by Hu Yaobang, chairman of the C.P.C. Central Committee.

Hu Yaobang said the 12th national congress of the party will sum up the victory in the great historic transition achieved in the past six years since the smashing of the gang of four, especially since the third plenum of the 11th Central Committee of the party. The congress will also define the great goal and fighting tasks for the new historical period so that the party, with a new outlook and added fighting power, will lead the people of all nationalities in the country in their effort to create a new situation in all fields of socialist modernization.

He said that the whole party, the whole army and the people of all nationalities in the country place great hope on the 12th party congress. All the delegates and staff of the congress should work hard and, under the leadership of the presidium, carry forward the fine tradition of the party, adhere to the principle of democratic centralism, work with one heart and one mind and draw on collective wisdom so that the congress will proceed vigorously and achieve complete success. [XINHUA Domestic Service at 1119 GMT on 30 Aug in its version adds: "...with Song Renqiong as chairman and Cheng Zihua and Gan Weihan as vice chairmen."] It also adopted a resolution confirming the decisions of the third and fourth plenary sessions of the 11th party Central Committee concerning the addition of members to the Central Committee.
It also adopted a resolution confirming the decisions of the third and fourth plenary sessions of the 11th party Central Committee concerning the addition of members to the Central Committee.

The resolution says that taking into consideration the practical changes in party life after the 11th national congress, and in order to enable a number of long-tested veteran comrades to play an important role in the political life of the party and the state, and strengthen the leadership of the Central Committee, so as to cope with the new situation and tasks, the third and fourth plenums of the 11th party Central Committee decided that the following 21 comrades be added to the 11th Central Committee: Huang Kecheng, Song Renqiong, Hu Qiaomu, Xi Zhongxun, Wang Renzhong, Huang Huoqing, Chen Zaidao, Han Guang, Zhou Hiu, Wang Heshou, Liu Lanbo, Liu Lantao, An Ziwen, Li Chang, Yang Shangkun, Zhou Yang, Lu Dingyi, Hong Xuezhi, Peng Zhen, Jiang Nanxiang and Bo Yibo.

The resolution says that it was then entirely necessary to adopt this measure, because when the party's 11th national congress was convened, large numbers of people who had been falsely charged and wronged were not yet rehabilitated and the above-mentioned comrades who should have been elected to the Central Committee were unable to attend.

The resolution points out that practice has proved that this measure adopted by the third and fourth plenums of the 11th Central Committee is entirely correct. The meeting unanimously endorses and confirms the decisions of the two plenums concerning the additional members of the Central Committee.

According to a decision of the fifth plenary session ofthe 11th Central Committee, a total of 1,600 delegates and 149 alternate delegates were elected to attend the congress.

The report said that from the nomination of candidates to formal elections, the party organizations gave full play to democracy and extensively canvassed the views of various quarters in line with the principle of democratic centralism, and made timely adjustment as was necessary to the namelist was finally fixed in accordance with the opinions of the majority of the electors. The elections were held by secret ballot, and the result of the elections well reflected the will of the elector.

The report points out that while the nominations were being considered, a number of veteran comrades sincerely asked party organizations not to choose them as candidates so that more young and middle-aged cadres that are qualified would be chosen. This, the report says, showed the veteran comrades communist spirit of placing the party's cause above everything else, and has won the praises of the masses of party members.

They include those who joined the party in its early years, or during the northern expedition, the agrarian revolutionary war, the war of resistance against Japan and the war of liberation, or during various periods after the founding of the People's Republic of China in 1949. Zhu Muzhi Briefs Journalists

OW301[illegible]0 Beijing XINHUA in English 1123 GMT 30 Aug 82

[Text] Beijing, August 30 (XINHUA) -- Zhu Muzhi, spokesman for the 12th National Congress of the Communist Party of China, announced at a press conference here today that the congress will sum up the great successes achieved since the smashing of the Jiang Qing counterrevolutionary clique in October 1976, elaborate and develop the correct line pursued since the third plenum of the 11th Central Committee, and formulate a program for which the party will work in the coming period.

The congress, he said, is expected to "bring about a splendid new situation for China's socialist modernization and write a glorious new chapter in the annals of the party.

Briefing more than 100 Chinese and foreign newsmen on the agenda and other matters related to the 12th party congress in the Great Hall of the People this afternoon, Zhu Muzhi said that the congress will open on Spetember 1 as scheduled and will last about ten days. Zhu was elected to the presidium of the congress at a preparatory meeting held earlier this afternoon.

He said that since the 11th national congress was held in August 1977 and particularly the third plenum of the 11th Central Committee in December 1978, the party has rectified the mistaken "left" ideology of many years standing and reaffirmed the Marxist ideological, political and organizational lines. Thus, the party has accomplished the historic task of correcting its guiding ideology and, through the efforts of the people of all nationalities, achieved significant successes in putting things to rights in all fields of endeavour.

Zhu Muzhi said: "A political situation characterized by stability, unity and liveliness has emerged in China at the present time, which is one of the best periods in China's history since the founding of the People's Republic. The leading bodies at all levels of the party and the state, which have been reorganized and consolidated, are in the main in the hands of cadres loyal to the party and the people. China's national economy has embarked on the road of sound and steady development." The 12th national congress is convened at a time when the party has effected this great historic transition.

He also briefed the newsmen on the new party constitution to be deliberated and adopted at the party congress. He said the "left" mistakes contained in the party constitution adopted at the 11th national congress will naturally be liquidated. The new constitution will include many new provisions concerning the requirements for party members and party cadres, and the improvement of the partys central and local organizational system.

Zhu Muzhi said many outstanding party members who have both ability and political integrity and are in the prime of life will be drawn into the central leading bodies of the party.

If the new party constitution (draft) is adopted, he said, the congress will also elect a Central Advisory Commission and a Central Commission for Discipline Inspection in addition to the party Central Committee. The Central Advisory Commission will work as a political assistant and advisor to the party Central Committee. This will make it possible for the work of old leading cadres to be handed over to new ones step by step.

He said the formulation of a fighting program for the new historical period, the establishment of new leading bodies, the cooperation between old and new leading cadres and the smooth replacement of old leading cadres by new ones will be a powerful guarantee of a long period of political stability in China and the continuity of the party's line, principles and policies.

Answering questions raised by reporters at the press conference, Zhu Muzhi said that a total of 1,600 delegates are attending the party congress and they were all elected by secret ballot after full discussion. More than six percent of the delegates are model workers and combat heroes. Specialists and technical personnel account for 17 percent.

He said the representatives of various democratic parties and other circles have been invited to attend the congress as observers. But, as was customary in the past, no delegations or delegates from foreign parties have been invited.

AFP: PENG CHONG ON DEMISE OF MILITARY COMMISSION

[By Charles-Antoine de Nerciat]

[Excerpts] Beijing, Aug 30 (AFP) -- The opening of the Chinese Communist Party National Congress here this week is expected to mark a change in the once powerful People's Liberation Army by ending some of the political importance it was given under Mao Zedong.

This prediction emerges from statements made today to a visiting French parliamentary delegation by a member of the party Politburo who indicated that the military committee of the party, formerly the supreme command of the army, would soon be abolished.

Peng Chong said that top leadership of the Chinese armed forces, estimated at four million men, would be placed in the hands of a Central Military Council to be created under the next constitution, the French sources said.

Vice Chairman Deng Xiaoping, as president of the party's military committee, is currently the supreme commander of the army.

High-ranking Chinese officials recently told foreign visitors that Mr Deng, a veteran of the Long March of 1934-1935, would maintain his role as leader of the armed forces.

But the transfer of the supreme command from the party to the government would signal the end of the important political role assigned the army by former Chairman Mao, observers here said.

Mr Peng, also vice-president of the National People's Assembly, told the French delegation headed by Socialist Deputy Louis Mermaz that the army's representation in the body, China's parliament, would be reduced from its current high of more than 14 percent of about 3,500 members.

Some military circles are thought to be the principal seats of opposition to the pragmatic leadership of Mr Deng.

Observers said this could be explained for political reasons and also by the effects of the introduction of private lots in the countryside under Vice-Chairman Deng.

Agrarian reforms have meant that the material gap that once separated the Chinese soldier from the rest of the people has narrowed now that peasants, 80 percent of the population, can earn a better living.

Chinese authorities are currently engaged in a vast effort to modernize the army, whose equipment consists for the most part of outdated weaponry from the days before the 20-year-old Sino-Soviet split.

Wang Zhen at Banquet

[Text] Beijing, 28 Aug (XINHUA) -- The general offices of the NPC Standing Committee and the CPPCC National Committee hosted a banquet at the Great Hall of the People this evening in honor of Mr and Mrs Liao Zhongkai's relatives and friends who had come to attend activities in memory of Liao Zhongkai and in commemoration of the 10th anniversary of He Xiangning's death.

Wang Zhen, member of the Political Bureau of the CPC Central Committee, presided over the banquet.

During his youth, Wang Zhen was fascinated by the revolutionary deeds of Liao Zhongkai and He Xiangning. When Liao Zhongkai was murdered in 1925, Wang Zhen, who was then serving with the pickets on the Guangzhou-Wuchang railway, attended the commemorative activities and the demonstration protesting the KMT reactionaries. After liberation, he visited elderly He Xiangning on many occasions.

Japanese friends Seimin Miyazaki, Chiyo Miyazaki, Toshio Kuroda and Akio Kuroda, as well as compatriots from Hong Kong and Macao. Mr and Mrs He Xian, Mr and Mrs Deng Guangyin and Mr and Mrs Ma Wanqi were also invited to attend the banquet.

Liao Mengxing, Jing Puchun, spouse of Liao Chengzhi, and their children also attended the banquet.

Wang Zhen Article

[Article by Wang Zhen [3768 7201]: "Deeply Cherish the Memory of Revolutionary Elder He Xiangning"]

[Text] Liao Zhongkai and He Xiangning, husband and wife, were bosom friends of Dr Sun Yat-sen and the earliest members of the Tong Meng Hui [Revolutionary League]. In their early years, they followed Dr Sun Yat-sen and devoted themselves to the national revolution to overthrow the Qing Dynasty. Later with the continuous progress of the times, they vigorously helped Sun Yat-sen formulate and carry out the three great policies of alliance with Russia, cooperation with the Communist Party and assistance to the peasants and workers, and made immortal historic contributions to the reorganization of the KMT, the promotion of the first CPC-KMT cooperation and the acceleration of the flourishing national revolutionary movement and they thus became outstanding revolutionaries who enjoyed the support of the masses of the people and became the shining banners of the Kuomintang leftists. In my youth, I was fascinated by their revolutionary deeds. In my view, these two revolutionary elders were the examples I should follow all my life. On 20 August 1925, the day when Mr Liao Zhongkai was unfortunately murdered, I was a picket on the Guangzhou-Hankou railway. At that time, together with vast numbers of the masses of people, we railway workers mourned him and took to the streets and demonstrated. The grievious and indignant mourning of the masses of people developed into a protest demonstration against the Kuomintang reactionaries and formed a revolutionary upsurge on an unprecedented scale since the first CPC-KMT cooperation. What is unforgettable for me was that after the death of her husband, He Xiangning -- this outstanding Chinese woman revolutionary -- was not scared by the horrible actions of the reactionaries and, setting store by the saving of the nation and the people, she indefatigably struggled for the fulfillment of the unfinished course of Dr Sun Yat-sen in a staunch and indomitable way.

In the early 1930's, the Japanese militarists launched a war of aggression against China. Bravely stepping forward, He Xiangning united the various anti-Japanese forces to resolutely struggle against Chiang Kai-shek's capitulationist policy of maintaining internal security first before resisting foreign aggression, and resigned her position as a member of the KMT Central Committee in anger. Together with Soong Ching Ling, she led the country's anti-Japanese national salvation movement, and in particular played a tremendous role in arousing the masses of the people to support the forefront of resisting Japanese aggression. In April 1934 the Chinese Communist Party put forth a "Basic Program of the Chinese People for Resisting Japan" which was published over the signatures of Soong Ching Ling, He Xiangning and 1,777 other democrats, calling for defending the Chinese nation by force and driving the Japanese militarists out of China, a program which was renowned at home and abroad. The dauntless spirit displayed by these two great women in a moment when the fate of the Chinese nation hung in the balance deepened my respect for them.

In the spring of 1933, Comrade Liao Chengzhi was detained by the Shanghai Bureau of Works of the imperialists and was released from prison only through the various rescue efforts of Soong Ching Ling, Liu Yazi, He Xiangning and others. At that time, He Xianging had realized that only the Communist Party could make the country strong and the people prosperous and able to live in happiness. After Comrade Chengzhi was released from prison, she enthusiastically supported his plunge into the revolutionary movement. Very soon Comrade Chengzhi came to the Red Army. When the news of the arrival of Comrade Chengzhi in the Red Army spread, officers and soldiers excitedly said: "The legendary son of the revered Mr Liao has joined us:" At that time, the Long March had begun and our party was in a state of very arduous war years. The fact that Comrade Chengzhi joined in the Long March fortified the people's confidence in carrying out the revolution through to the end. During this period, the relatives of He Xiangning all made contributions to the revolution, such as Jing Hengyi, Li Shaoshi and Liao Mengxing. The comrades of the Second and Sixth Army Groups, such as He Long, Ren Bishi, Xiano Ke, Guan Xiangying, Xia Yi and I talked about these matters on many occasions. At that time we all agreed that He Xiangning was a founding member of the KMT, enjoyed high prestige and commanded universal respect and would easily get a high position and handsome salary if she wished, but despite all this, after Mr Liao Zhongkai was assassinated, she determinedly sent her sons and daughters to the ranks of the communists and singly went around crying for help for the Chinese revolution, giving no thought to her life and death. Her noble spirit and integrity of working for the interests of the vast majority regardless of private interests was admired by all people and was also an example which we communists should learn from. The leading comrades of the Central Committee of our party will always hold He Xiangning in high esteem. In 1937 Chairman Mao wrote a letter to He Xiangning and praised her for "carrying on the tradition of Dr Sun and resolutely and indomitably struggling and thus setting an example for the Chinese nation."

It was only after the birth of New China that He Xiangning and I got to know with each other. As soon as I came to Beijing, I asked Comrade Mengxing to accompany me to call on this revolutionary elder whom I respected. That day as we entered the door, I respectfully cried in a marked Hunan accent: "Grandma!" She heard me calling her and smiled happily. Later on, my association with the revered elder He Xiangning became increasingly frequent. Every time I called on her, I was intensely influenced by her patriotism and lifty revolutionary values, which I will never forget for the rest of my life.

It may be because I was a railway worker when I was young and later in the 1950's I worked in the railway corps that I cherish a special affection for railway construction. In my talks with her, I also on many occasions talked about the railway construction of our country. She resented the Qing government's offering the right to build the railways to the foreigners and regarded it as an act of national betrayal and humiliation. After the 1911 revolution, she personally took part in the struggle to mobilize the students to oppose the foreigners grasping China's right to build the railways. Realizing that I worked in the railway corps, with sincere words and earnest wishes, she said to me: "The railways are the main arteries of a country. The amount of railways that are built has a direct bearing on the country's economic construction and defence construction. In those years, in his 'A General Plan for Building the Country,' Dr Sun planned to build 100,000 miles of railways. Now, we are gradually realizing the ideal of Dr Sun." When she came to this point, there was a gratified smile on her kindly face.

After I was transfered to work in the Ministry of State Farms and Land Reclamation, I remembered once in her talk she dealt with subjects ranging from the assistance to the peasants and workers -- one of the three great policies of Dr Sun -- to stationing troops to open up wasteland and to guard the frontier. He held that large tracts of our territory were grabbed by czarist Russia as the result of the Qing government's neglect of the building and safeguarding of China's northeast frontier regions. For this reason, she showed great approval for the PLA's establishing the production and construction corps in the border regions and the army reclamation undertakings in which the army safeguarded the frontier of the motherland while going in for construction.

She deemed this a manifestation of the far-sighted patriotism of the Chinese Communist Party. She said to me: "It has been so since ancient times to station troops to open up wasteland. There is an account of this matter in the 'Historical Records.' You have made considerable achievements in stationing troops to open up wasteland. You must not lose this good tradition in the years to come!" These remarks of hers have been forever engraved on my mind.

After Peng Lao Zong [Peng Dehua] returned home from Korea in triumph, I invited him to go with me to call on the reversed elder He Xiangning. Peng Lao Zong gave her a piece of panther skin as a present. Full of zest, she entertained us with almond tea, a product of her native place -- Guangdong Province. She greatly extolled the magnificient contributions the Chinese People's Volunteers had made. She said with praise that the Chinese People's Volunteers had worked hard and performed a valuable service and their patriotism and spirit of bravery were the pride of the Chinese people; the great victory in the war to resist U.S. aggression and to aid Korea had safeguarded the safety of our country and helped China gain a peaceful period for engaging in economic construction. She also said to Peng Lao Zong: "While you were heroically fighting on the forefront, we, the people in the rear, were also doing our best to support you; while the people were contributing aircraft and cannons to support the war to resist U.S. aggression and to aid Korea, I also drew some pictures and sold them to contribute to the war. Once, upon hearing the news of a victory from you, I drew a picture called 'Picture of Magpies Announcing Good News' while I was in a joyful mood. When Premier Zhou saw it, he inscribed a few words of appreciation on it, reading: 'magpies are announcing news of victory in aiding Korea and flowers are bequeathed to the heroes who resist U.S. aggression.'" At this moment, Peng Lao Zong said with a smile: "I earlier heard that this was not the first time you sold your traditional Chinese paintings to contribute to the battle front." She said with a smile: "I simply don't remember how many times I have sold my paintings to donate to the war." In his talk, Peng Lao Zong described the beautiful scenes of Korea to her and suggested that if there was an opportunity, she should go to Korea, our friendly neighbor and have a look there. Not long afterwards, she went and had a rest for a certain time in the Zhang Yi home of respect for the aged in Ham Bukdo of the Democratic People's Republic of Korea and drank in the beauty of the scenery of the local lakes and mountains. That was her only trip outside the country after liberation.

Ten years have elapsed since the passing away of He Xiangning. During these 10 years, great changes have taken place in our country. At present, we are carrying out the building of the two civilizations -- material and spiritual. The course of revolution she traversed, a course full of difficulties and frustrations, her revolutionary spirit of being neither intimidated by force nor subdued by wealth or rank and remaining firm and unshakable in strained and humble circumstances, the contributions she made to the Chinese revolution and her lofty moral character of educating and encouraging her sons and daughters to struggle and die for the revolution, may all be recited as good models for a generation. They are all valuable wealth for us in carrying out the building of spiritual civilization and are worthy of being earnestly learned from.

GUANGDONG'S WANG ZHONG EXPELLED FROM PARTY

[Report: "Wang Zhong Expelled From the Party, Arrested According to Law"]

[Text] Wang Zhong, deputy director of the Shantou, Guangdong, Prefectural CPC Committee's Political and Legal Committee and former secretary of Haifeng County CPC Committee and chairman of the county revolutionary committee, took advantage of his powers to misappropriate large amounts of seized contraband goods and take bribes from people applying to go to Hong Kong. The Guangdong Provincial CPC Committee recently approved the decision of the Shantou Prefectural CPC Committee on expelling Wang Zhong from the party and dismissing him from all his posts. His arrest has been approved by the Shantou branch procuratorate of the provincial people's procuratorate.

Wang Zhong was secretary of the Haifeng Country CPC Committee and chairman of the revolutionary committee from December 1976 to August 1981. In September 1981 he was transferred to be deputy director of the prefectural CPC committee's political and legal committee. While working in Haifeng County, he was in charge of the seizure of contraband goods. From April 1980 to August 1981 he took advantage of his powers to take without payment a large amount of seized contraband in the warehouses of Haifeng County, Chanwei Township, Shanwei Township Public Security Subbureau, and Zhelang Commune. This contraband consisted of the following items: More than 300 wristwatches of various types, 19 radio cassette recorders, more than 400 meters of various kinds of cloth, over 100 items of clothing, and some valuable drugs, daily-use goods, electric fans, bicycles and so on.

From the end of 1979 to July 1981 Wang Zhong also took advantage of his powers to resort to all kinds of illegal methods in allowing people to go to Hong Kong. In this way he received in bribes six television sets, two radio cassette recorders and one refrigerator.

Wag Zhong's criminal activities seriously harmed party work style and the popular mood and at one time caused chaos in social order in Haifeng County; smuggling and peddling contraband became all the rage on some communes and brigades, where production came to halt; a number of people responsible for seizing contraband perverted justice for bribes and privately distributed the goods seized; and certain party members and cadres became corrupt and degenerate. After Wang Zhong's criminal activities were exposed, far from making an honest confession, he actually went to all lengths to deny them and refused to admit his guilt. He also directed his dependents, relatives and friends to organize an alliance for attack and defense and transfer the stolen money and goods elsewhere, so as to escape responsibility. Wang Zhong's behavior has let down the trust of the party and people and betrayed the party and people.

The Central Discipline Inspection Commission and the Guangdong Provincial CPC Committee have attached great importance to the Wang Zhong case. They dispatched a work team which has done a lot of work together with the departments concerned in investigating the main crimes of Wang Zhong, and has also proposed that the judicial organs punish him according to law.

[Commentator's article: "Firmly Preserve the Party's Communist Purity"]

[Text] On 20 February we published a report entitled "Four Anticontraband Vessels in Haifeng County Flout the Law." The next day, the "Daily Chat" column carried a short article putting forward a number of questions: "Did the principal leaders of the Haifeng County CPC Committee and government know what was going on? If they did, then why did they not stop it and deal with it? Is there something unspeakable still concealed in the background?" Many readers also wrote to us asking questions like this.

Now the matter is clear. Wang Zhong, former secretary of the Haifeng County CPC Committee and chairman of the revolutionary committee, knew all about it; he was in fact a corrupt and degenerate chief criminal conspirator who bent the law for bribes. Judging by the materials exposed in various places, it is often the case that serious criminal activities in sabotaging the economy are carried out in collusion with a few power-holders and lawbreakers in the party and government organs and in factories and enterprises. Holding important county party and government posts, Wang Zhong bent the law for bribes, and stole things entrusted to his care, thereby affecting everything he did, with the result that smuggling and peddling contraband became all the rage in Haifeng County for a time, criminal elements did anything they liked, and certain antismuggling personnel and public security men flouted the law themselves. A foul atmosphere prevailed.

In order to preserve the party's communist purity and protect the country's socialist system and the interests of the people of all nationalities, it is extremely necessary to take sweeping action against a criminal cadre like Wang Zhong by expelling him from the party and severely punishing him according to law.

How could a dignified county party committee secretary who had made revolution for several decades and done some good things for the people degenerate into a criminal? The fundamental reason is that, in the new historical conditions, he was unable to withstand the attack by sugar-coated bullets, and so he betrayed the lofty communist ideal he swore to fight for when he joined the party, lost his fighting will and fell into disgrace, used his powers for private gain, and discarded the qualities a party member should have. In something over 1 year, Wang Zhong broke the law as many as 59 times, and apart from flouting the law himself, he dragged others down with him and enticed management personnel into dereliction of duty and into instructing and conniving with their families to break the law. Is there the slightest flavor of a party member in all this? Is there any trace of a revolutionary cadre? Wholeheartedly serving the people is our party's fundamental program, and its ultimate aim is to achieve the lofty goal of communism. Anyone who wavers on this fundamental stand and hankers for stand pursues a decadent capitalist way of life is taking the road of betrayal. People should deeply ponder the downfall of Wang Zhong.

The current struggle against serious economic crime is the most practical and effective measure for rectifying the party and its work style. We must get a good grasp of handling major and important cases, correct the cadre work style, and tighten up the control systems. We must cite typical cases to conduct vivid and specific education for the party members in party spirit and party and legal discipline, and encourage everyone to spontaneously wage resolute struggle against evil ways and criminal activities.

CPC DISCIPLINE INSPECTION OFFICIAL INTERVIEWED

[Text] Beijing, August 28 (XINHUA) -- A leading member of the Discipline Inspection Commission of the Central Committee of the Communist Party of China, said in a XINHUA interview here today that "now we can say with certainty that the style of work of our party has changed for the better."

He said that since the Third Plenary Session of the 11th C.P.C. Central Committee held in December of 1978, the party's style of work has improved year after year thanks to the efforts of all party members.

The main task of the Central Discipline Inspection Commission, which was elected by the third plenary session, is to help party committees at various levels carry on the partys fine style of work.

He said that the C.P.C. has attached great importance to its style of work and regards the carrying on of the party's fine work style as its paramount task in strengthening the building of the political party in power during new historical period.

He listed the following five aspects as indications of the improvement of the partys work style:

1. The principle of "seeking truth from facts" has been restored within the party to a great extent. This principle is one of the concepts of the C.P.C.'s traditionally fine style of work. However, it was seriously disrupted during the 10-year "Cultural Revolution."

Since the third plenary session of the C.P.C. Central Committee, the party has restored and carried forward the traditional work style of proceeding from facts in all cases. The "Resolution of Certain Questions in the History of our Party Since the Founding of the People's Republic of China" adopted by the sixth plenary session of C.P.C. Central Committee in June of 1981 has, in the spirit of seeking truth from facts, summed up the experience of the party in leading the socialist revolution and socialist construction, made a scientific analysis and criticism of the error of "left" deviation which existed for quite a few years, and at the same time upheld the scientific truth of Mao Zedong Thought and safeguarded Mao Zedong's historical role.

"In accordance with such a correct ideological line, we solved a large number of problems left over from past history. Among them the most important are the rehabilitation of the false charges against Liu Shaoqi and Pend Dehuai."

2. "We have strengthened democratic centralism and brought the inner-party political life back to normality. At present, our party's political life has been brought within the correct orbit of Marxism, which [is] mainly represented by the political life in the party Central Committee. When members of the Central Committee have differing ideas in discussing major questions, they always follow the principle of collective leadership under democratic centralism and unify their understanding and action through thorough discussion and criticism and self-criticism."

The "Guiding Principles for Political Life Within the Party" laid down at the third plenary session of 11th party Central Committee have helped the political life in many party organizations become normal. Since the general mood of our party took a turn for the better, "we have realized and improved the vivid and vigorous political situation of stability and unity. We are now in the most favourable period of time compared with the past years after the founding of New China."

3. "Closely rallying around the party Central Committee, the whole party carried out the lines, principles and policies laid down by the party at and after the third plenary session of the 11th party Central Committee, thus ensuring a vivid development in all aspects of our work and big strides in the production of industry and agriculture. Especially in the agricultural production, the C.P.C. Central Committee has reasonably adjusted various policies in accordance with China's concrete conditions and stimulated the rural economy, and therefore, the peasants are improving their material well-being, thus laying down a solid foundation for modernized agriculture."

4. "We have done vigorous work to correct unhealthy tendencies, and some have been restrained. In the past three years, the Discipline Inspection Commission of the C.P.C. Central Committee has sternly dealt with a number of cases violating the party discipline. At present, the unhealthy tendency of enrolling unqualified students and workers with powers or authority of office has been, in the main, corrected in most places. Such unhealthy tendencies as giving dinner parties and sending gifts in order to curry favor and using public money to eat and drink have been basically checked in the party and administrative departments above the county level. Many party leading cadres from the central level down to localities have set strict demands on themselves in implementing the guiding principles."

5. "We have unleashed the struggle against serious crimes in the economic field. In the last six months: investigations and decisions were made on quite a number of cases unsettled for a long time; a number of economic criminals were punished according to law; those party members who had committed serious economic crimes were expelled from the party; and party organizations deeply involved in economic criminal activities were straightenend out."

Great successes have been achieved in this struggle, from which the whole party has learned a lesson in fighting against corruption. In leading such a struggle, our party showed no apprehension in exposing problems within the party and its seamy side. This fully testifies to the strength and confidence of our party and has exerted good impacts on people both inside and outside of our party.

He said what he has mentioned above fully shows the Chinese Communist Party is a long-tested and tempered political party of the proletariat. Although it once suffered from serious wounds inflicted on it by the "Cultural Revolution," our party still can stand to any tests. After several years of rectification and reconsolidation of our party, the main trend in our party is good and its work style has become better and better.

"Of course," he said, "we aim at a fundamental change for the better in the work style of our party, and there is still a long way to go to achieve our goal."

FANG YI ADDRESSES SCIENTIFIC COMMISSION MEETING

OW290002 Beijing XINHUA Domestic Service in Chinese 1200 GMT 24 Aug 82

[Text] Beijing, 24 Aug (XINHUA) — On the eve of the victorious convocation of the party's 12th national congress, Fang Yi, state councillor and minister in charge of the State Scientific and Technological Commission, called on all working personnel on the scientific and technological front to heighten their spirits, strive to enhance the integration of science and technology with the economy and make still greater contributions to promoting national economic development.

Comrade Fang Yi spoke at a 24 August meeting of all working personnel of the State Scientific and Technological Commission. He discussed the significance of the commission's structural reform and the new situation emerging in scientific and technological work.

He said: Since the 3d Plenary Session of the 11th CPC Central Committee, the party Central Committee has implemented a series of new economic policies and reform measures which have greatly enhanced the integration of the economy with science and technology. As a result, attention in economic work is being paid to adopting new technology, developing new products and accelerating the pace of technological progress. This has opened unprecedentedly broad prospects for scientific and technological development. At the same time, scientific and technological development has given an impetus to production growth and the upgrading and updating of products, pushed forward the reform of the economic structure and an increase in economic results, and demonstrated the power of science and technology. The new situation in economic construction provides ample room for science and technology to demonstrate their power. A lively situation is beginning to emerge in which economic development and scientific and technological development are interdependent and mutually promoting.

In the last year the party Central Committee and the State Council issued a special document defining the country's present, general principle for scientific and technological development. In the past year and more, an unprecedentedly active situation has emerged in scientific and technological work in our country under the guidance of this new principle. Comrades of scientific and technological departments have strengthened their understanding of economic work. The economic departments have shown great enthusiasm in using and developing new technology. They have taken the initiative to cooperate with scientific and technological departments and research institutions in jointly carrying out research and the popularization of new technology, and in discussing the adoption of economic measures to support the development of new technology and new products. This has rarely happened in the past.

He said: The various localities have created many lively ways to promote the transfer of scientific and technological achievements. Various forms of associations have appeared between scientific research and production units. Compensated transfers of technological results have begun.

The scientific research institutions have developed various kinds of technical consultations and services, many forms of technical exchange activities, trade in technology and so forth. A number of valuable and important scientific and tecanological achievements have been made in various places which have played an important role in the technological transformation of the national economy and in increasing production and practicing economy, and have produced very good economic results.

In his talk Fang Yi also mentioned several tasks the State Scientific and Technological Commission must pay attention to at present. He said: Now the central authorities are considering drawing up a 15 year (1985-2000) long-range plan for developing the national economy. It can be predicted that with the development of the modernization drive, the key role of science and technology in the four modernizations will certainly become more and more visible and recognized by an increasingly large number of people. Therefore, it is inevitable that tasks on the scientific and technological front will become increasingly arduous. All comrades must go all out and courageously take up the heavy burdens.

He said that at present the State Scientific and Technological Commission should pay attention to the following tasks: It is necessary to act quickly and organize efforts to tackle key problems in the national economy. He said that with regard to the question of tackling key problems, the first group of 38 key problems to be tackled, as well as the division of labor between the scientific and technological commission and the economic commission have already been determined. The question now is to first organize demonstrations and problem analyses. In tackling each problem, we should clearly understand present developments concerning each at home and abroad the basic materials and data, views and controversies from various sources, the schedule which should be prepared to study the problem, future economic benefits and so forth. Then, make a necessary evaluation. Next, we should properly organize a division of labor and strive to carry out most of the work down to the grassroots level in the latter half of the year. While tackling each problem, attention should be concentrated on constantly producing results and constantly playing a role in the economy. Only by combining long-range and immediate efforts can our work be full of vigor and vitality.

Fang Yi said: From the experience of the three large associated ores mines [presumably the mines at Panzhihua, Baotou and Jinchuan], after the orientation and problems are determined, it is necessary to have a firm and indomitable spirit to inspect, supervise, summarize experience, never relax and carry the work through to the end. It is also necessary to solidly, patiently and meticulously organize a great coordination of all departments concerned.

Fang Yi said: While stressing the tackling of key problems and making it the focal point of our work, I also want to remind comrades of the State Scientific and Technological Commission that they must not neglect basic research.

Fang Yi also discussed the question of readjusting and consolidating research institutions. He said: At present, there are too many research institutions resulting in the scattering of research manpower, duplication of research subjects and many other problems. They must be readjusted and consolidated. Our general goals are: 1) to solve the problem of scatteredness, concentrate our forces step-by-step and form a number of fists; 2) to promote many forms of associations between scientific research and production units; 3) to support and strengthen scientific and technological work in enterprises. It is necessary to assign people to the leading bodies of research institutions who are revolutionized, younger, better educated and professionally competent. It is imperative that a large number of outstanding scientists and technicians who are in the prime of life and have managerial abilities are promoted into leading bodies. It is necessary to rely on scientists and technicians to run research institutions well.

CHAOTIC PRACTICES IN LOAN MANAGEMENT DESCRIBED

[Letter from XINHUA correspondent Tang Wei: "Rules and Regulations of Banking Departments Must Be in Good Order"]

[Excerpts] Guangzhou, 26 Aug (XINHUA) -- In recent years, many banks and credit departments have disrupted the effective rules and regulations in the past under the pretext of enlivening banking and loan businesses. This has created a chaotic situation in financial management and many loopholes, provided some lawless persons with an opportunity that can be exploited to their advantage and inflicted losses on the state.

According to the rules and regulations in the past, banks and credit departments must carry out the system of conducting "three checkups" in handling loan applications. They must check before the loan is approved, check again in the course of extending the loan, and check once more after the loan is extended. They must help the borrowing unit use the loan with great care and improve economic results. However, we have discovered that the banks in many localities throughout Guangdong have never asked how the loans are to be used, cared little about who the borrowing unit is or the economic results. This situation is quite serious.

In view of the chaotic management system in banking departments, many workers and staff in the field of monetary and economic affairs have suggested that it is now essential to earnestly summarize our experience and draw lessons, adhere to the correct orientation and consolidate our enterprises. Efforts must be made to deal telling blows at those who are engaged in graft and embezzlement in close connection with the struggle to strike at serious offenders in the economic field. It is essential to make an inventory of warehouses, work out measures, improve the system, plug all the loopholes and maintain a good order in doing banking and loan businesses.

The banks at all levels must check the source of their credit departments funds and the loans they have extended. Loans that have run counter to banking policy or make no improvement in the economic results should be retrieved within a prescribed period and included in the state plan for extending credit in an unified manner. The profits made by the credit departments must be delivered to the state treasury. They must not be used as bonuses for the bank's cadres, workers and staff.

ANHUI, JIANGXI, HUBEI REAP GOOD RICE HARVESTS

[Text] Beijing, August 29 (XINHUA) -- Three more Chinese provinces have reported good early rice harvest, according to provincial agricultural sources.

Anhui Province in east China is expected a harvest of 3.95 million tons of early rice, this year, at least three percent more than last year, despite successive downpours that began in mid-July.

About 23 percent of the early rice fields, totalling 370,000 hectares, were inundated by water in Jiangxi Province, also in east China, which was hit by big floods this summer. The total output, nonetheless, is estimated to be close to the figure of 1981. Last year Jiangxi gathered in 6.7 million tons of early rice, itself a good year.

Hubei Province in central China has harvested 4.1 million tons of early rice this year, 250,000 tons more than in 1981. The increase is attributed to the measurable expansion of double harvest rice areas.

Good early rice harvests were also reported in Guangdong, Guangxi and Hunan, according to earlier provincial reports.

VARIETY, OUTPUT OF IRON, STEEL PRODUCTS INCREASE

OW290130 Beijing XINHUA in English 0107 GMT 29 Aug 82

[Text] Beijing, August 29 (XINHUA) -- China has reported increased variety and output of iron and steel products serving the needs of agriculture and light industry.

The improvements are listed in a Ministry of Metallurgical Industry release to demonstrate the success of China's industrial readjustment.

In the first seven months of this year, according to the release, China produced 2.18 million tons of steel sheets and strip steel that were needed in expanding the production of consumer goods. This was 15 percent more than in the same 1981 period and double the figure for the corresponding 1978 period, the year before work began to shift the emphasis of industrial development from heavy industry to light industry.

From 1979 to 1981, according to the release, China's annual iron and steel output fluctuated between 34 million tons and 37 million tons, the 1981 figure being 35.63 million tons.

Under the policy of industrial readjustment, which became official at the third Plenary Session of the 11th Chinese Communist Party Central Committee held in December 1978, development of China's iron and steel industry has slowed down so that more funds and energy could be earmarked for agriculture, light industry, energy production and communications, weak links in the country's national economy.

Nevertheless, the release said, output of iron and steel products catering to market demand has continued to increase. Through efforts over the past few years, China has ensured ample supply of small-type section steel and wire rods, which were short of demand for many years. In the first seven months of this year, China's total output of steel plates and seamless steel tubes was up 20 percent over the same period of 1981.

Iron and steel enterprises have sent personnel to solicit opinions of peasants about what they could do to better serve rural needs. An example is the Anshan iron and steel complex, China's biggest, which has over the past two years produced two dozen kinds of steel structures for rural housing construction.

Variety of products, rather than high output figures serving publicity needs, is now the focus of attention, according to the release of the Ministry of Metallurgical Industry. In 1981, China developed 1,500 specifications of new steels and steel materials. The country is now able to produce 600 kinds of alloy steels, including alloy steel able to withstand exceptionally high temperature, which are vital to China's space program.

Increasingly great attention has been paid to energy conservation in iron and steel industry, said the release. The Anshan iron and steel complex, for example, from 1979 to 1981 saved oil, electricity and gas enough to be converted into 1.13 million tons of standard coal.

Iron and steel enterprises have, through technical transformation, improved their economic results. The Tangshan Iron and Steel Company in north China, for example, introduced 1,069 technical innovations from 1979 to 1981. This enabled the company to turn over during the same period to the state 387 million yuan in profit and taxes, 2.3 times its fixed assets, the release said.

GEOLOGIST HUANG JIQING ON OIL, GAS EXPLORATION

[Text] Beidaihe, August 29 (XINHUA) -- Chinese geologists will make a long-term survey of the major basins in western China, which are expected to be the nation's major inland oil sources in the years to come, according to Professor Huang Jiqing, president of the Geological Society of China and research fellow of the Chinese Academy of Geology. The geologist's remarks came today in an interview at this beach resort, marking the 60th anniversary of the founding of the society.

"The prospects for oil deposits in Tarim and Tsungarian Basins are particularly bright," he said.

He noted that in the light of immediate and long-term needs, China will continue to explore oil fields in the eastern continent, especially at the depth of the basins, while at the same time, carrying out off-shore oil exploration and development in submarine areas. These fields include the Pearl River Estuary, Beibu Bay, Bohai Bay and southern Yellow Sea (with some projects in cooperation with foreign companies). Another long-range goal, he said, is to strengthen the basic geological work of the oil and natural gas-bearing basins in the western part of the country for future exploration.

"This will place China on a sound footing on energy matters for modernization," he added.

He said that Chinese geologists are broadening their view on the theory of oil exploration. After having succeeded in locating oil in continental-facies sedimentation, Chinese geologists are turning part of their attention to marine-facies sedimentation -- the large-area Palaeozoic carbonate rocks in southern China, notably Guizhou, Yunnan and Guangxi. There have been discoveries of oil seepage in these areas. Many major foreign oilfields are discovered in this sedimentation.

"Prospecting for natural gas resources in some of Guizhou's basins is very inspiring," he said. "Work will have to be strengthened for an early breakthrough."

Studies will have to be carried out of the characteristics of Cenozoic sedimentation in Xisha and Nansha Islands in South China Sea which show very good propsects for oil deposits, he noted.

Oil prospecting on the Tibetan Plateau will be conducted mainly in the Jura-Cretaceous systems and the prospects in northern Tibet are brighter than in southern Tibet.

Efforts will be made to look for gas generated from coal -- an important chemical material and fuel. China started the general survey of coal gassitication just two years ago. The possibility for the discovery of large gasfields in coal-rich northeast China, north China and Xinjiang is very great, he noted. At the present time the Qinshui Basin in Shanxi Province and the Upper Palaeozoic group formations in north China are under general survey.

SPEED CALLED FOR IN DEVELOPMENT OF AGRICULTURE

[Editorial: "Accelerate the Development of Agriculture on the Huang He-Huai He-Hai He Plains"]

[Text] The Huang He-Huai He-Hai He plains consist of nearly 300 counties belonging to the Provinces of Hebei, Shandong, Henan, Jiangsu and Anhui and the Municipalities of Beijing and Tianjin with an area of more than 300,000 square kilometers, an agricultural population of 160 million and 270 million mu of farmland.

Accelerating the development of agriculture on the Huang He-Hua He-Hai He plains is of great strategic signficance in pushing forward the agricultural modernization as well as the whole four modernizations of our country.

Since the founding of the People's Republic, impressive progress has been made in the agricultural production of the Huang He-Huai He-Hai He plains. Total grain yield in 1980 reached approximately 9.5 billion jin, or double that in the early period of the founding of the People's Republic. The output of grain and oil-bearing crops both accounted for 15 percent of the total production of the whole country, and wheat and cotton accounted for 37 and 41 percent respectively of the total production of the whole country. There was also an increase in the output of corn, soybean, peanuts and cured tobacco. The state attaches great importance to the agricultural construction of the Huang He-Huai He-Hai He plains. In the last 20 years and more, the investment spent on water conservancy construction alone has exceeded 25 billion yuan. The water conservancy projects constructed are playing a very important role in preventing floods, draining waterlogged fields and combating drought. Farmland and water conservancy projects as well as projects for harnassing the Huai He and Hai He in particular have reduced the harm of flooding, waterlogging and saline-alkali soil, and laid a material foundation for the further development of agriculture in this area.

However, because of the influence of "leftist" guiding ideology over the years, some mistakes have also been made in the work of controlling the Huang He-Huai He-Hai He plains. Some of the investments made by the state have not achieved the desired economic results, and such unfavorable conditions as drought, waterlogging, alkalinity, sand and barren soil left over from the past have still not basically changed. According to statistics, of the 270 million mu of farmland on the Huang He-Huai He-Hai He plains, some two-thirds are still low and medium-yield fields with output of only 200 to 300 jin of grain per mu. The unit area output of farmland and the labor productivity of agriculture are both below the national average and at present they are still not self-sufficient in grain. The vast Huang He-Huai He-Hai He plains are rich in agricultural resources and natural conditions are favorable for agricultural production. However, frequent droughts and floods are bogging down the area in an impoverished state. We must sum up the experiences and lessons of the past, draw up correct plans, accelerate the tempo of development and further explore the enormous latent production potential of this area.

We must take the road of comprehensive treatment and all-round development in developing the agriculture of the Huang He-Huai He-Hai He plains, rationally readjust the structure of agriculture, gradually improve the ecological environment and set up a production system for the all-round development of agriculture, forestry, animal husbandry, sideline production and fishery with cultivation as the key factor. In the past, this area laid particular stress on engineering measures in the treatment of drought and waterlogging disasters and neglected biological measures. In production, it laid particular emphasis on grain production but neglected developing the diversified economy in a manner suited to local conditions and did not pay attention to integrating the use of land with the care of land. Such a one-sided way of doing things is an important reason why the features of production cannot be basically improved. At present, we must take transforming the low and medium-yield fields, including the continued treatment of the vast amount of saline and alkali land and the attempt to raise the output of low and medium-yield fields which account for two-thirds of the farmland in the plains, as the main direction of attack. For many years, practice carried out in different types of experimental areas has proved that the comprehensive treatment of water, soil, tree belts and fertilizer can basically transform the features of some low and medium-yield fields and double the output of agricultural crops in as little as 3 to 5 years or at most in 10 years. The Huang He-Huai He-Hai He plains have nearly 100 million mu of low-yield fields. If comprehensive treatment is carried out to increase the annual output by 100 jin per mu, that would come to 10 billion jin. This will be a great contribution to the state.

At present, there are more favorable conditions for accelerating the development of agriculture on the Huang He-Huai He-Hai He plains. As a result of the implementation of the party's economic policies for the countryside and the popularization of various responsibility systems, the enthusiasm of the peasants to develop production is very high and their capability to improve production conditions has increased. The cadres and commune members are all calling for the use of accumulated funds and surplus labor to transform the low amd medium-yield fields. As long as the state and the collectives carry out overall planning, make unified arrangements, provide proper organization and leadership and also give necessary support, the capability of the peasants to rely on their own efforts will be greatly strengthened. The key lies in integrating comprehensive treatment with the immediate interests of the peasants, paying attention to economic results and resolutely not going in for formalism and not engaging in egalitarianism and indiscriminate transfer of resources.

The comprehensive treatment of the Huang He-Huai He-Hai He plains is an important part of the national plan for agricultural development. At the symposium on the development of agriculture on the Huang He-Huai He-Hai He plains held recently in Jinan, more than 370 specialists, scientists, technicians and leading cadres of agricultural departments unanimously held that there must be coordinated cooperation between many departments and disciplines to build the Huang He-Huai He-Hai He plains into a commodity, grain, cotton, edible oil, bean, fruit and livestock production base for the comprehensive development of agriculture, forestry, animal husbandry, sideline production and fishery, with agriculture as the mainstay. The treatment of such a vast area is a long-term and arduous task and it must be introduced from the points to the whole area by stages and in groups in a planned and systematic manner. As long as the enthusiasm of the broad masses of scientists, technicians, cadres and commune members is aroused, the forces of various sectors are united, the scientific achievements already achieved and the many years of practical experience are put to use and the great practice of transforming nature is adhered to, our goal can certainly be attained.

NATIONAL MEETING HELD ON RURAL RADIO PROGRAMS

HK290327 Wuhan Hubei Provincial Service in Mandarin 1100 GMT 28 Aug 82

[Excerpts] The radio stations of Shandong, Jiangsu, Shanghai, Anhui, Zhejiang, Fujian, Hubei, Hunan and Jiangxi have held a forum at Lushan to discuss how to run good programs for the rural areas in the new situation. The rural areas department of the Central People's Broadcasting Station sent personnel to attend the forum.

The participants held: Ours is a country of 1 billion people and 800 million peasants. We certainly cannot get away from this basic national condition in discussing issues or doing things. Still less can we get away from 80 percent of the population in running radio programs.

The meeting held: Programs for rural areas are comprehensive, largely educational programs mainly aimed at serving the peasants and rural cadres. Their task is, guided by Marxism-Leninism-Mao Zedong Thought, to educate and guide the peasants to persistently follow the socialist road and promote the building of material and spiritual civilization in the rural areas. These programs reflect the political, economic, cultural and home life of the peasants and rural cadres, and thus guide the peasants, rural cadres, and other listeners concerned for the rural areas. That the programs are largely educational should not be interpreted to mean that they simply imbue people with ideas. Instead we must apply the method of having the peasants educate themselves and directly taking part in the broadcasts.

The meeting stressed: In the programs for the rural areas, at present and for a time to come, we must seriously propagate and implement the spirit of the 12th party congress and open up a new breakthrough in rural construction.

SHANGHAI COURTS SENTENCE JIANG QING FOLLOWERS

OW290522 Shanghai City Service in Mandarin 1130 GMT 28 Aug 82

[Text] After the judicial organs in Shanghai carried out investigations, gathered a host of evidence and made careful preparations, the Shanghai Municipal Higher People's Court and the Shanghai Municipal Intermediate People's Court held separate hearings from 13 July to 23 August to openly try the major offenders of the Jiang Qing counter-revolutionary clique in Shanghai Xu Jingxian, Wang Xiuzhen, Chen Ada, (Ye Changmin), Huan Jinhai, (Dai Liqing), (Ma Zhenrong) and Zhu Yongjia. The courts also passed sentences on 21 and 23 August.

The criminal court of the Municipal Higher People's Court sentenced Xu Jingxian to 18 years' imprisonment and deprivation of political rights for 4 years and sentenced Wang Xiuzhen to 17 years' imprisonment and deprivation of political rights for 4 years. The Criminal Court of the Municipal Intermediate People's Court sentenced Chen Ada and (Ma Zhenrong) to 16 years' imprisonment and deprivation of political rights for 3 years; (Ye Changmin), Huang Jinhai and (Dai Liqing) to 13 years' imprisonment and deprivation of political rights for 3 years: and Zhu Yongjia to 14 years' imprisonment and deprivation of political rights for 3 years.

In the course of the open trial, more than 13,000 people from all walks of life in Shanghai were at the ourt as visitors on a rotational basis. After the sentencing, all of the people were pleased. They held that this trial represented a victory for the line laid down by the 3d Plenary Session of the 11th CPC Central Committee and for the socialist legal system. This trial dealt blows to the enemies and educated the masses. It is conducive to further promoting stability and unity and to developing the four modernization program.

The host of criminal evidence shown at the court hearings indicated that in the 10 chaotic years during the Cultural Revolution, Xu Jingxian, Wang Xiuzhen and others actively participated in the Jiang Qing counterrevolutionary clique plot to overthrow the government and undermine the people's democratic dictatorship. They were directly involved in making plots and personally participated in usurping the party and government leadership in Shanghai. They took measures of fascist dictatorship to create a large number of unjust cases and to subject a large number of cadres and masses in Shanghai to serious persecution. Many people were persecuted to death or permanently disabled. When they heard the news of the detention of Jiang Qing, Zhang Chunqiao, Yao Wenyuan and Wang Hongwen, Xu Jingxian, Wang Xiuzhen and others decided to stage an armed rebellion and wage a deathbed struggle.

During the trial, Xu Jingxiang and Wang Xiuzhen confessed their crimes. Chen Ada and Zhu Yongjia showed a fairly good attitude in admitting their crimes. However, in face of a host of evidence, (Ma Zhenrong) still denied everything and refused to admit his crimes. In presenting the case and indictment, the prosecutor thoroughly exposed and refuted (Ma Zhenrong)'s reactionary stand.

After the court sentence, the presiding judge ordered that the defendants be taken out of court and sent to jail. The bailiff placed handcuffs on the defendants.

Ma Tianshui, another criminal of the Jiang Qing counterrevolutionary clique in Shanghai, suffered from reactive psychosis in 1978 during his detention and was unable to defend himself in the trial. His illness was confirmed by a judicial medical examiner. The Shanghai Municipal Public Security Bureau suspended the pretrial procedures according to law and will pursue his criminal liability after he recovers from his illness.

Radio Commentary

OW290526 Shanghai City Service in Mandarin 1130 GMT 28 Aug 82

[Station commentary: "A Stern Verdict Pronounced"]

[Text] The important culprits of the Jiang Qing counterrevolutionary clique in Shanghai have been sternly sanctioned by the socialist court. This was the inevitable outcome of their vain attempt to subvert the regime of the people's democratic dictatorship.

During the 10 years of civil strife, the people of Shanghai, like the people throughout China, suffered a great deal because of the Lin Biao-Jiang Qing counterrevolutionary cliques and hated them. After the stern national trial of Jiang Qing, Zhang Chunqiao, Wang Hongwen and Yao Wenyuan -- the chief culprits of the gang of four -- the criminal courts of the higher and intermediate people's courts of Shanghai again convicted, according to the law, Su Jingxian, Wang Xiuzhen and their ilks, the counterrevolutionary criminals who have brought untold miseries to the people of Shanghai and have done tremendous harm to the whole nation, and meted out the punishments they deserved. This conforms with the people's wish and gives them great satisfaction. The people of Shanghai have expressed their resolute support for this verdict.

The solemn trial of Xu Jiangxian, Wang Xiuzhen and other counterrevolutionary criminals has enabled the people to further understand the towering crimes and the reactionary nature of the Jiang Qing counterrevolutionary clique. Although these treacherous and ruthless crooks were bent on overthrowing the regime of the people's democratic dictatorship in China and undermining the socialist system, the people of Shanghai, alongside the people of the whole country, have waged long, hard, tortuous and heroic struggles against them and have finally achieved this great victory. History has again demonstrated that our people are a great people and that our party and the socialist system are full of vitality.

It should be pointed out that since the 3d Plenary Session of the 11th CPC Central Committee, political stability and unity in China has been markedly consolidated and socialist democracy and the legal system has been strengthened. However, we should be fully aware of the fact that Shanghai was an important base where the gang of four took great pains to cultivate their influence for 10 years and that the gang of four's remnant forces in political, organizational and ideological matters have yet to be completely eliminated. Those who have risen to power in the gang of four's footsteps in those years, as well as the smash-and-grabbers during the 10 years of civil strife and people who are obsessed with factionalist ideas, are still engaged in sabotage activities in political and economic fields and in production. Some of them are trying to stage a comeback.

Therefore, after convicting the important backbones of the Jiang Qing counterrevolutionary clique in Shanghai, we should never cherish the idea that things will henceforth continue smoothly, thereby becoming apathetic. We should continue to remain highly vigilant and take effective measures to eliminate the remnant forces and the lingering influence of the gang of four in political, organizational and ideological matters in order to further consolidate political stability and unity, and ensure the smooth progress of the four modernizations program.

[Excerpt] On the morning of 26 August, Chengdu PLA units Commander You Taizhong and Political Commissar Zhong Hanhua stressed at a forum of PLA progressive units and individuals in building socialist spiritual civilization: To build spiritual civilization centered on communist ideology is a long-term strategic task for us.

You Taizhong and Zhong Hanhua said in their reports: The first thing in building socialist spiritual civilization is to have revolutionary ideals. Revolutionary ideals are communist ideals. Every revolutionary activity the party has led since its establishment has been the communist movement. What we are currently engaged in is also a part of the communist movement and the communist way.

You Taizhong and Zhong Hanhua pointed out: Communist ideology with its extremely rich and profound content is the great spiritual force mobilizing the whole party, the whole army and the people of the whole country to achieve the four modernizations. It is the ideological basis for the 1 billion people's unity and combat. It is also the powerful motive for us in building a modern and regularized revolutionary army. We must clearly understand that conducting education in communist ideology is both fundamental ideological construction and also of urgent practical significance.

BAINQEN ERDINI INTERVIEWED ON XIZANG SITUATION

[Text] Lhasa, 24 Aug (XINHUA) -- Interviewed by a XINHUA reporter in Lhasa on the eve of his departure from Xizang, Bainqen Erdini Qoigyi Gyaincain, vice chairman of the NPC Standing Committee and honorary president of the Buddhist Association of China, said: I have inspected and visited Xizang for more than 50 days and witnessed that the Xizang regional party committee and people's government, in line with the central authorities' directive, has led people of all nationalities in Xizang to seriously carry out the party's policies, eliminate poverty and convincingly change Xizang's features. These changes prove that the central authorities' directive on Xizang's work completely conforms to Xizang's reality and is entirely to the fundamental interests of people of all nationalities in Xizang. The directive is very correct.

Asked about his impressions on his inspection tour in Xizang, Bainqen Erdini Qoigyi Gyaincain said: Today's Xizang really enjoys political stability and good social order. Relationships between all nationalities have improved, and unity among nationalities has been further strengthened. Our policies in all fields have been implemented. He said: Xizang's agricultural production, animal husbandry and nationalities' handicrafts industry is developing relatively rapidly. As a result, the masses' incomes have increased and their living standard has risen remarkably. At present, the political and economic situation in Xizang is becoming better and better. The motherland's southwestern border area is more consolidated.

Talking about the policy on nationalities, he said: Generally speaking, the policy on regional national autonomy has been implemented well in Xizang. As of now, direct elections have been extensively held in 1 municipality, 70 counties, 1 district under the jurisdiction of the municipality, and 2,050 communes throughout Xizang. The majority of the key leading posts in Xizang's party and government organizations at all levels are assumed by cadres of the Tibetan nationality. In accordance with the actual situation in Xizang, the regional people's congress Standing Committee has instituted 10 sets of local regulations and drafted the "Xizang Autonomous Region's Regulations on Exercising Autonomy." After these regulations are carried out, Xizang's regional national autonomy work will certainly be greatly promoted.

Vice Chairman Bainqen said: Since Xizang was peacefully liberated, it has trained a large number of cadres of the Tibetan nationality with communist consciousness and culture. This is an amazing achievement. Since the central authorities' important directive on Xizang's work was implemented in 1980, the regional party committee has done much work to train cadres of Tibetan nationality and achieved great results. He said: I have seen a large number of cadres of Tibetan nationality not only assuming key leading posts at all levels but also competently shouldering work responsibility and making great achievements. I hope cadres of Tibetan nationality will continue to raise their level of Marxism-Leninism-Mao Zedong Thought. They must work hard to study science, culture and professional knowledge and serve the masses wholeheartedly. I hope cadres of the Tibetan and Han nationalities will further strengthen unity and respect, learn from, help and understand each other to make up each other's deficiencies. They must conduct more self-criticism when questions arise, unite as one and develop the excellent situation in Xizang together.

Bainqen Erdini Qoigyi Gyaincain said: In my inspection tour I have found Xizang's united front policy has been implemented well with outstanding results. I have met many patriotic personages, who unanimously praise the party's present policy. Since the central authorities' directive was implemented, the party's policy on freedom to believe in religion has also been gradually implemented.

Touching upon the situation in rural and pastoral areas, Vice Chairman Bainqen said: After eliminating chaos and restoring order, Xizang has implemented more flexible economic policies in rural and pastoral areas. As a result, production has been restored, and developments have been rapid. In my field trip to the masses' households, I was most impressed by what I saw in most of the areas and among the great majority of the masses: The question of having enough to eat and wear has been basically solved. I took a special trip to Natan production team in Xigaze County, which had longstanding economic difficulty, and visited many households of the team members. I found they had basically solved their problem of grain shortage. In the past, when the new crop was still in the fields and the old one was all consumed, the majority of the villagers faced a grain shortage; now no households are running out of grain. The production team members heartily welcome and support the CPC's policy. I also saw some very well-off communes and production teams. Each household of the fifth production team in Zhaxijicai Commune near Xigaze has surplus grain. The 10-member household headed by a peasant by the name of Kasha has over 10,000 jin of grain in stock, some of which is heaped up even under the eaves. This shows that the party's more flexible economic policies in Xizang's rural and pastoral areas have produced remarkable results. Some peasants and herdsmen have become well off. A number of poor counties and production teams are eliminating poverty. This is a really amazing and encouraging tremendous change.

In conclusion, Vice Chairman Bainqen said: I have every reason to believe that under the party Central Committee's correct leadership and with the great support from the powerful socialist motherland and all fraternal provinces, municipalities and autonomous regions and people of all fraternal nationalities, cadres of all nationalities and the vast number of people in Xizang will work hard so that a united, well-off and civilized new Xizang can be in full bloom on the roof of the world like a splendid flower.

Yangling Duoji, secretary of the Xizang Regional CPC Committee, gave an important speech at the closing session. He said: The central task for the people of various nationalities of the whole region at present and for a relatively long time to come is to bring about a small change of the region in 3 years, a medium change in 5 years and a big change in 10 years and to build a united, prosperous and culturally developed new socialist Xizang. This is also the central task facing women of various nationalities of the region.

"Around this central task, he spoke about three points:

1. "The question of situation: since the 3d Plenary Session of the 11th CPC Central Committee, particularly since implementing the Central Committee's important instructions on work in Xizang, a series of undertakings to bring order out of chaos has been done and the policy of relaxing requirements has been pursued for the region to recuperate and build up strength. Consequently, a favorable situation of cadres and the masses of various nationalities making concerted efforts to build a new socialist Xizang has prevailed throughout the region. At present, the party's task of bringing order out of chaos in the region's guiding ideology has been fulfilled. The vast agricultural and pastural areas have taken on a new look. Comrade Yin Fatang gave important instructions at the meeting. (Yang Jin), vice chairman of the Xizang Regional Women's Federation, made a closing speech.

LIAONING RETRIES CULTURAL REVOLUTION CRIMINAL

[Text] According to our reporter (Au Gang), in line with court and supervision procedures, the Jinzhou Intermediate People's Court revoked the original verdict on (Jing Decun), a principal culprit guilty of beating, smashing and looting because his crimes were not properly measured and the penalty was too light. The court appointed another collegiate bench and held an open trial yesterday morning to try his case.

(Jing Decun) was a construction worker at the Liaoning [word indistinct] plant. He engaged in beating, smashing and looting on a big scale and engineered many bloody incidents of violence. By resorting to rebellion to build up himself, he later became vice chairman of the Jinzhou Municipal Revolutionary Committee, chairman of the municipal workers' congress and deputy secretary of the municipal CPC committee among other positions. He abused his position and power to engage in activities which violate the criminal code. He raped 12 women and embezzled public property worth over 1,000 yuan. In December 1978, the provincial CPC committee and government decided to dismiss him from all his posts inside and outside the party in accordance with the seriousness of his crimes. He was put under arrest with the approval of the procuratorial department. After being put behind bars, he refused to admit his guilt and continued carrying on unlawful activities in prison.

On 14 September 1981, the Jinzhou Municipal Intermediate People's Court opened a court session to try (Jing Decun). Upon entering the court, he began to abuse the state public prosecutor, raving that this case was a joke on history. He also threatened that once he is out, he will file a suit against the prosecutor and others. He was swollen with reactionary arrogance at the court.

A principal smash-and-grabber as guilty and stubborn as (Jing Decun) should have been severely punished in accordance with the law. However, due to the incorrect thinking on the part of some persons handling this case, the court failed to properly measure (Jing's) crimes of beating, smashing and looting and did not investigate his unlawful activities committed while he was in custody. As a result, he was not given a penalty commensurate with his crimes but was given a light sentence. A 5-year jail term is too light for a principal smash-and-grabber guilty of serious crimes such as (Jing).

When he was released on 6 April after serving the jail term, his wife, together with a dozen or so relatives, drove three jeeps and a motorcycle to greet him at the prison. They blatantly drove the cars through the streets to seek publicity.

The masses were indignant at the light punishment for (Jing's) serious crimes. They demanded his case be retried. In accordance with the masses' demands and under the supervision of the political and judicial organs of the provincial CPC committee and government, the Jinzhou Municipal Intermediate Court revoked the original verdict on (Jing) in line with court and supervision procedures. (Jing) was taken into custody again on 29 May. On 26 August the newly appointed collegiate bench began an open court session to handle (Jing's) case.

Resentenced 28 Aug

SK290849 Shenyang Liaoning Provincial Service in Mandarin 1100 GMT 28 Aug 82

[Excerpts] After a reexamination of the case of principal smash-and-grabber (Jing Decun), the Jinzhou Municipal Intermediate People's Court concluded that (Jing Decun) was guilty of murder, hooliganism and graft. At an open trial in Jinzhou on 28 August, he was sentenced to 20 years' imprisonment. At the court for retrial, (Jing Decun) tried every means possible to deny his crimes in the face of the testimony of witnesses and material evidence. In view of (Jing Decun's) many criminal offenses and his abominable attitude, the Jinzhou Municipal Intermediate People's Court, in accordance with the state criminal law, sentenced him to 15 years in prison for gathering a crowd to conduct acts of beating, smashing and looting and for murder, to a term of 6 years in prison for hooliganism and to 2 years imprisonment for graft. In line with the principle on penalties for numerous crimes, (Jing Decun) will serve 20 years in prison.

AFP REPORTS REACTION TO RELEASE OF U-2 PILOTS

[Excerpts] Taipei, Aug 28 (AFP) -- Chinese Nationalists today accused the Beijing regime of "playing another dirty trick" by using two old nationalist U-2 pilots to create the illusion of peace between China and Taiwan. "This the cruelest of act we have ever heard of as the two pilots had long been declared killed in action because of the lack of information from China that they were still alive," informants here said.

Yeh was declared missing in November 1963 and Chang in January 1965. In the absence of information from Beijing the Nationalist Government had declared the pilots martyrdom six months after their disappearance. Sources said the martyrs' families had received due care from the government for the past 20 years.

"The current Peking announcement that the two pilots are still alive will serve a serious blow to the family members as the two wives have been remarried and children grown up," informants said.

As to whether the two pilots would be freed, "the whole thing will probably depend on the two officers when they are actually freed and the attitude of the members of their families," the informants added.

DEFENSE MINISTRY REPORTS PRC WAR GAMES

OW281051 Taipei CNA in English 0940 GMT 28 Aug 82

[Text] Taipei, August 28 (CNA) -- Communist China has been conducting a series of amphibious exercises along the Fukien coast opposite Taiwan since Aug. 7, the Ministry of Defense reported today.

Maj. Gen. Wang Miao, spokesman for the Defense Ministry, made the disclosure when commenting on the U.S. Government's decision to continue co-production of the F-5E jet fighters in Taiwan next year.

"We would like to remind the free world of the fact that Communist China's peace overtures are just a smokescreen. It has never renounced the use of force against Taiwan and Penghu as a last resort," Gen. Wang said.

He said the military exercises are going on between the mouth of the Min River and Chuangshih Island. Tanks and transports were mobilized for the war game which has been going on intermittently since Aug. 7.

Gen. Wang said another indication of Peiping's "peaceful intention" toward the Republic of China is its interest in the recent Falklands war.

The Chinese Communist Party's military affairs 12 reams of British documentary on the Falklands campaign jointly shot by REUTERS and the BBC. [sentence as received] "Evidently, the Communists are interested in learning British tactics in preparation for their invasion of Taiwan," the general said. He added that only when the Republic of China is able to maintain air and naval supremacy in the Taiwan Straits can it check Communist expansion and assure the security of the western Pacific.

NEWSPAPER EDITORIALS ON U.S.-PRC COMMUNIQUE

[Editorial: "Don't Be Confused by the Chinese Communists' United Front Smokescreen in the Name of Peace -- Expounding Chairman Chiang's Remarks"]

[Text] Chairman Chiang of the Kuomintang of China presided over a meeting of the Kuomintang Central Standing Committee yesterday.

In his remarks on the "joint communique" issued by the United States and the Chinese Communists, he encouraged the compatriots of the whole country and the comrades of the whole party to demonstrate moral courage, strengthen themselves for the trials ahead in the face of adversity, relinquish all selfish ways of thinking and enhance solidarity and vigilance in order to overcome difficulties. There is a very important passage in Chairman Chiang's speech. He deeply hopes that the compatriots of the whole country and the comrades of the whole party "will never be confused by the Chinese Communist bandits' united front smokescreen in the name of 'peace,' nor be perplexed by transitory international developments." This passage precisely describes our policy for coping with the situation changes caused by the "joint communique" issued by the United States and the Chinese Communists. We think that we should expound and publicize the important guiding principle of this passage of Chairman Chiang's remarks among our compatriots throughout the country.

Just as we pointed out in yesterday's editorial, the Chinese Communists have made known their positon for peaceful resolution of the Taiwan issue in the "joint communique." From now on, they will surely intensify their united front work against us and constantly make peace talk offensives. Therefore, our immunity to confusion by the Chinese Communists' united front smokescreen in the name of peace is our important mental armament.

Of course, our compatriots at home and abroad profoundly understand the Chinese Communists' united front scheme in the name of peace and will never believe their lies. However, we cannot deny the fact that our compatriots at home and abroad inevitably think that in order to frustrate the Chinese Communists' united front scheme, we can turn their trick against them and hold talks with them on a trial basis.

They think: Such talks are not fearsome as long as we firmly hold to our position and stick to our conditions. The most desireable result is the Chinese Communists' acceptance of our conditions for reunifying China with the three principles of the people. In case the talks fail to reach an agreement and break, we can show our people and the people of foreign countries that we have done what is humanly possible to help and that it is the Chinese Communists who stubbornly cling to "four upholdings" which bring calamity to the country and the people. In this way, the compatriots at home and abroad will, of course, further understand the Chinese Communists' united front scheme. In this way, the 1 billion people on the China mainland will know more about the nature of the Chinese Communists' tyrannical rule and will no longer cherish illusions of the Chinese Communists' "four modernizations." In this way, the compatriots on the mainland will be prompted to wage struggles for freedom, democracy and human rights. Such results are also beneficial to us.

Conversely, if we flatly refuse to contact the Chinese Communists, not even to hold tentative talks, others may likely mistake us as too obstinate and inflexible, and may become unsympathetic and critical of us. Thus, we may allow the Chinese Communists' united front scheme to succeed in making it appear that the Chinese Communists want peace, yet we wouldn't even talk of peace, and that the Chinese Communists are willing to negotiate, but we insist on keeping them at a distance. This would give the Chinese Communists an excuse to use force against Taiwan in the future. The Chinese Communists may even use our refusal of peace talks as a reason to apply pressures on the U.S. Government to stop military sales to us, and the U.S. Government will find its position indefensible, unwilling to be blamed for militarily supporting us to undermine the peaceful solution of the China issue between the two sides of the Taiwan Strait. In the end we will lose both U.S. Government and public sympathy, and face the situation of an end to U.S. arms sales.

All of the above arguments may sound reasonable at first and can easily deceive people's intuition and commonsense. However, these arguments have in fact made the mistake of being confused by the Chinese Communists' united front smokescreen in the name of peace. Chairman Chiang pointed out not long ago when receiving the leaders of the 1982 national development seminar: We must not have any ideas about holding tentative talks with the Chinese Communists because if we do, we will fall into their trap of undermining our anticommunist public spirit and morale and rock our spiritual bastion. Therefore, Chairman Chiang has consistently adhered to the position and principle of "no contact, no talks and no compromise." Compatriots at home and abroad should understand that only by adhering to this position and principle can we avoid being confused by the Chinese Communists' united front smokescreen in the name of peace.

The Chinese Communists will certainly not give up their scheme to invade Taiwan by force. However, if they can spread a peace talk smokescreen to confuse us -- disarming us spiritually -- and disrupt U.S. military sales to weaken our defense forces, why shouldn't they do so? This is a strategy to defeat the enemy without fighting. We must not only strive to guard against the enemy's armed invasion but also to ignore his scheme to murder us while smiling at us. We must not allow the Chinese Communist to hurt us by the tactics of "destroying a fortress from within." We must understand and give publicity to the positive significance in the position and principle of "no contact, no talks, no compromise" with the determination never to be confused by the Chinese Communists' united front smokescreen in the name of peace.

[Editorial: "How Should We Look at the 'Joint Communique' Between the United States and the Chinese Communists?"]

[Text] The United States and the Chinese Communists published a so-called "joint communique" on 17 August. This was quite unexpected, but we did anticipate it. That the Reagan administration would finally publish this kind of thing with the Chinese Communists was unexpected. It is not easy to find an explanation from President Reagan's consistent talk of goodwill and friendship with China.

However, this was what we anticipated. Four U.S. presidents, starting with the Nixon administration, have shaped a consistent U.S. policy toward the Chinese Communists attempting to join forces with the Chinese Communists in countering Soviet Russia. This strategy is erroneous and dangerous. But the fallacies have spread to such an extent to sound rather appealing, and the strategy has become a taboo for U.S. presidents in interparty controversies. Keeping in mind the interests of his political party and administration, President Reagan found it difficult to achieve a breakthrough, not to mention the fact a pro-Chinese Communist State Department tries to deceive him and in many ways to mastermind him. Under these circumstances, no wonder President Reagan finally reconciled himself with the realities.

It has been said that this "joint communique" was to be called "Shanghai communique No 2." In reality, it comes quite close to the "Shanghai Communique," in which the method of each side airing its own views is still being used. This shows that the United States and the Chinese Communists have failed to work out a "final solution" on the arms sales question stated in the "communique." All they could do was compromise after airing their own views.

From the very beginning, the Chinese Communists have made a show of strength on the arms sales question, indicating they would downgrade diplomatic relations with the United States if it did not stop the sales.

They tried repeatedly and in many ways to emphasize and demonstrate this standpoint and posture. However, in the "communique," they could not but accept the U.S. policy of continuing arms sales to Taiwan and could only rather "feebly" state that "the two governments will make every effort to adopt measures and create conditions conducive to the thorough settlement of this issue." Here the Chinese Communists thoroughly exposed their nature of being fierce of mind but faint of heart. In a sense, the Chinese Communists are the losers, but it does not necessarily imply that the United States is the winner.

In this "joint communique," the United States made some pacifying and compromising commitments:

The most serious commitments are the recognition of the Chinese Communist regime as "the sole legal government of China" and the acknowledgement that "there is but one China, and Taiwan is part of China." On this premise, the United States reiterated that "it has no intention of infringing on Chinese sovereignty and territorial integrity, or interferring in China's internal affairs, or pursuing a policy of 'two Chinas' or 'one China, one Taiwan,'" thereby dancing completely to the tune of the Chinese Communists.

The other serious commitment is that in the "communique," the United States stated that "it does not seek to carry out a long-term policy of arms sales to Taiwan, that its arms sales to Taiwan will not exceed -- either in quality or in quantity -- the level of recent years since the establishment of diplomatic relations between the United States and China and that it intends to gradually reduce its arms sales to Taiwan." This kind of self-limitation is very wrong. The United States has falled into the Chinese Communist trap.

In past negotiations between the United States and the Chinese Communists, the United States has consistently urged the Chinese Communits to renounce in explicit terms the use of force against Taiwan, but the Chinese Communists have never promised this. However, in this "joint communique," the Chinese Communists rather clearly, though indirectly, expressed that it wants "a peaceful solution to the Taiwan question." This can be interpreted as a trick, a Chinese Communist united front ploy as well as their compromise in order to get a compromise from the United States. At least the Chinese Communists have retreated from their position.

After reading this "joint communique," we must point out that the United States has made two major mistakes that we cannot understand:

1. Although the United States has not agreed to set a date for ending arms sales to us, it has put a limitation on the quality and quantity of the arms to be sold without stating any conditions. This will lead to two situations: The United States will be unable to lift this self-limitation in the face of Chinese Communist peace negotiations and united front schemes, and it no longer has leeway to lift this self-limitation in case tension develops in the Taiwan Strait.

2. Although the United States has repeatedly said it will not play any mediation role between us and the Chinese Communists, it explicitly says in the "communique" that it "understands and appreciates" the Chinese Communists' peace negotiation proposal which is part of their united front work. This is tantamount to supporting the Chinese Communists' united front work against us.

In the "joint communique," we can see some U.S. efforts to reject the Chinese Communists' unreasonable demands. However, U.S. policy has strayed from the positive spirit of the Taiwan Relations Act. The United States has made further concessions to and compromises with the Chinese Communists, has further underminded its position of trustworthiness, morality and justice and has hurt the rights and interests of the Republic of China. This has made us very disappointed and indignant.

Nevertheless, we also attach great importance to President Reagan's statement on this "joint communique." In his statement, President Reagan reiterated that he has paid particular attention to the needs and interests of the people on Taiwan and that his longstanding personal friendship and deep concern for the well-being of the people on Taiwan are steadfast and unchanged.

He also said that he would make all efforts to maintain the cultural, commercial and people-to-people contacts between the people of the United States and the people on Taiwan and conduct such contacts with the dignity and honor befitting old friends.

Reagan stated in a positive way that arms sales will continue in accordance with the Taiwan Relations Act and with the full expectation that the resolution of the Taiwan issue will be peaceful. In conclusion, President Reagan expressed his wish to expand and promote the progress and prosperity of Taiwan. His friendly remarks remain to be proven by facts, but we have reason to believe that his remarks are sincere and hope that his sincerity will be embodied in his formulation of U.S. policy toward the Republic of China. Otherwise they will become rhetoric satirizing reality.

We cannot deny the unfavorable impact of the "joint communique" on us and its psychological blow on our compatriots at home and abroad and our compatriots on the Chinese mainland. However, we must face it squarely and struggle with self-reliance and vigor as long as the U.S. strategy of allying with the Chinese Communists to stop Soviet expansion remains unchanged. Foreign affairs are an extension of internal affairs. We do not have to worry about the present adverse situation in foreign relations as long as we can work in the spirit of self-reliance to improve, develop and make breakthroughs in our politics, economy, foreign relations and national defense. There are great possibilities for us to turn the tide and create new opportunities.

After reading the "joint communique," we would like to remind our fellow countrymen the following three things:

1. From now on, the Chinese Communists will surely strengthen their united front work against us and conduct various peace talk offensives against us one after another. At the same time, they will also surely intensify their efforts to sow discord and their infiltration and subversion in Taiwan. We must heighten our vigilance and strengthen our unity to cope with the enemy's intensified united front work.

2. In the future, the Chinese Communists will surely continue to pressure the United States to hold further talks on the arms sales issue. At the same time, they will concentrate on lobbying the U.S. Congress for a revision of the Taiwan Relations Act, to fundamentally undermine ROC-U.S. relations and to finally end U.S. arms sales to us. We must make early preparations for coping with that situation.

3. After the United States limits the quality and quantity of arms to be sold to us, our pressing question is how to find new sources of modern weapons to maintain our superiority in arms over the Chinese Communists.

CHUNG KUO SHIH PAO

[Editorial: "To Weaken the Republic of China's Strength Will Inevitably Escalate Tensions in the Asia-Pacific Region"]

[Text] The U.S. Government had held secret talks with the Chinese Communists on U.S. arms sales to the Republic of China since last December. A country's military sales are that country's own business and allow no foreign interference. This is the normal stand of a country on arms sales. However, the United States failed to insist on this stand. This failure paved the way for concessions on the part of the United States. Although the talks were conducted in secrecy, there had been reports leading to the outside, indicating that the United States would almost certainly make concessions. Just as we had expected, Washington and Peiping issued the so-called "joint communique" last night. Although the United States did not set a date for the end of the arms sales as demanded by the Chinese Communists, two major points contained in the communique clearly run counter to the provisions of the Taiwan Relations Act and cast doubt on the spirit of independent diplomacy, which the United States had emphasized.

Paragraphs A and B of Article 3 of the Taiwan Relations Act state: "The United States will insure that Taiwan has the defensive equipment and logistics necessary for maintaining an adequate self-defense capability. The President and the Congress will, in accordance with the legal procedures, decide the quality and quantity of such defensive equipment and logistics entirely on the basis of their judgement regarding Taiwan's needs. Such a decision should include the appraisals of the U.S. military authorities submitted to the President and the Congress." The words "an adequate self-defense capability" in this article naturally means a self-defense capability readjustable along with the increase of outside threats. The Chinese Communists' military capability is expected to increase steadily. Under such circumstances, if the Republic of China's military capability is maintained at a declining level, does the word "adequate" have any meaning? How can the U.S. President, the Congress and the military authorities possibly decide now that the present military strength of the Republic of China can stand future Chinese Communist attack? This is why we believe that restricting arms sales to Taiwan to the present level, both qualitatively and quantitatively, is not logical and runs counter to the original spirit of the Taiwan Relations Act.

As for terminating arms sales to the Republic of China in the end, this means disregarding peace and stability in the western Pacific region. The Taiwan Relations Act specifically states that defensive articles are provided to the Republic of China for the purpose of maintaining peace and stability in the western Pacific region as well as for other reasons. Can the United States be sure that there will be no need for maintaining peace and stability in the western Pacific region in the future?

We believe that the United States cannot possibly abolish the Taiwan Relations Act. As a matter of fact, to do so in the foreseeable future is out of the question. If the Taiwan Relations Act continues to serve as a cornerstone of U.S. foreign policy in Asia, it is very inappropriate to violate it for some practical political reasons.

In negotiating with the Chinese Communists on the question of arms sales to the Republic of China, the United States did make a six-point guarantee to the Republic of China. This guarantee has led us to believe that President Reagan himself still values the ties between the two countries, which are beneficial to both. He vetoed many of his staff's proposals, which could have led to major concessions to the Chinese Communists, and decided to continue the joint production of F-5E fighters in Taiwan. This has minimized the damage done to the China-U.S. ties as a result of the communique.

However, we still want to remind the U.S. Government that the Chinese Communists' goal is to capture Taiwan through peaceful gestures backed by force. They will never be satisfied with a single concession until they achieve this goal. Starting with the 1972 Shanghai Communique, every joint communique issued between the United States and the Chinese Communists has represented a step backward in U.S. support for the Republic of China. The current communique on arms sales came into being because there was no agreement on this question in the joint communique on the establishment of diplomatic relations between the United States and the Chinese Communists. We can say that every concession made by the United States encourages the Chinese Communists to plan the next move to exert pressure on the United States.

Although President Reagan refused the Chinese Communists' further demands during the current talks, we believe that the Chinese Communists will continue to pester the United States on such questions as sovereignty over Taiwan and abolishment of the Taiwan Relations Act in an effort to produce another joint communique in their favor. If the United States fails to recognize the Chinese Communists' tactics and draw a final line, which will be kept with firmness, it cannot hope to escape from the prolonged pestering and blackmail of the Chinese Communists. The Chinese Communists will achieve their goal when the U.S. stand is weakened to the degree that the United States can no longer resist their pressure.

President Reagan has said in his statement that the compromise between the United States and the Chinese Communists would contribute to the reduction of tensions and to peace in the Asia-Pacific region. We believe this is a wishful thinking. We believe, on the contrary, that any action that weakens the defense strength of the Republic of China will only escalate tensions and impair peace in the Asia-Pacific region.

BUY-AMERICAN MISSION LEAVES FOR U.S. 29 AUG

[Text] Taipei, Aug. 30 (CNA) -- The seventh "buy American" mission, led by Vice Economics Minister Chang Hsuin-Sheun, left Taipei for the United States Sunday.

The mission is another move to show the Chinese Government's sincerity in enlarging and promoting trade with the United States for the narrowing of trade gap between the two countries, Chang said upon his departure.

During this period of world economic recession, increasing purchase from the United States by this nation is of a special significance in advancing mutual trade development, he indicated.

The Republic of China has sent six purchase missions to the United States over the past several years. American trade and industrial circles have realized the efforts of the Chinese Government, he added.

The mission is organized by 50 representatives from the public and private companies in the country. The states they will visit during the 45-day tour include California, Kansas, Ohio, Virginia, Florida, Arizona and Washington, D.C.

They will buy agricultural, industrial and mineral products worth more than U.S. $500 million.

Trade seminars will be held in seven cities, enabling mission members to meet their American partners so as to make them better understand each other's market situation and exploit more trade opportunity.

WEN WEI PO VIEWS CHINA'S ECONOMIC SYSTEM REFORMS

["Newsletter From Beijing" by correspondent Cheng Hsiang: "Reforms of China's Economic System -- the Attention-Grabbing 12th CPC Congress, Part IV"]

[Text] To implement the line of the third plenary session, apart from the reforms of the leadership systems of the party and state, we should also carry out some important reforms in the economic field, including an overall reform of the economic management system of the past 30 years or so and a reform of the strategy of economic development.

1. The Reforms of the Economic System

Since the third plenary session, China has tried to reform its economic management system so as to remove some factors unfavorable to the four modernizations. This year, following the completion of the reforms of organs under the State Council, China immediately set up the "Economic System Reform Committee" personally led by Zhao Ziyang. Chinese officials and scholars have gradually established identical views on the reforms of China's economic system through the practice over the past 3 years. They have maintained that at present, three fundamental reforms of the existing systems should be carried out: 1) With regard to the economic policy-making system, the present highly unified policy-making system based solely on the state should be turned into a manifold policy-making system based on the state, economic units and individual laborers. 2) With regard to the system of economic regulation, the present unitary system of regulation by plan should be turned into a regulation system which integrates unified planning with market demands. 3) With regard to management organizations and methods, we should change the previous system of mainly relying on the party and government organizations and administrative organizations and using administrative methods to manage the economy into a system of mainly relying on economic organizations, economic methods and economic rules to manage the economy.

According to the above-mentioned general orientation of reforms, in recent years China has carried out the following 10 reforms of the economic system on an experiemental basis:

1. Enterprises which were formerly subsidiary bodies of departments and administrative units have been changed into relatively independent economic units.

2. Those scattered large and complete or small and complete economic units have been changed into integrated economic complexes based on specialized coordination and rational economic principles.

3. The closed product distribution and allocation system divided by administrative sections has been changed into an open commodity market under unified leadership.

4. Vertical and horizontal economic activities have been changed into those organized by economic centers.

5. The system of formulating guidance plans from top to bottom has been changed into the system of making guidance plans from bottom to the top and combining the efforts of the upper and lower units.

6. The system of mainly relying on administrative methods to manage the economy has been changed into the system of mainly utilizing economic means to regulate the economy.

7. The former practice of neglecting the legal system and contracts has been changed. China has now attached importance to strengthening the legal system, economic legislation, judicature and supervision.

8. The former system of overconcentration of power regarding economic management in the hands of the central authorities has been changed into the system of expanding the economic management power of localities under the unified leadership of the central authorities.

9. The former system of placing enterprises under the leadership of the party committees, with factory directors holding the main responsibility, has been changed into the system of a representative assembly of workers and staff members with factory directors holding the main responsibility.

10. Formerly, it was the party and government which directly managed the economy. It is now economic organizations which are mainly in charge of economic management.

From the above-mentioned examples, we realize that extensive work has been done over the past 3 years in the experimental stage of economic reforms, which are closely connected with the readjustment of the power, interests and responsibility of the central authorities, localities, enterprises and individual laborers. Therefore, this matter has aroused people's attention both at home and abroad.

II. Change of the Strategy for Economic Development

Since the third plenary session, China has greatly changed its strategy for economic development because it has realized that the reason why it suffered severe setbacks in economic construction over the past 30 years was due to the fact that for a long time (after 1958 in particular) China made deviations in selecting its strategic policy for economic development. As a result, a vicious circle of "high targets, high accumulation, low efficiency and low consumption" occurred. Since the third plenary session, China has put forth the guiding principle of "readjustment, restructuring, reorganization and upgrading" and criticized the "leftist" strategy for economic development. At the Fourth Session of the Fifth NPC, Zhao Ziyang put forth the 10 major guiding principles for construction to completely change China's strategy for economic development followed over the past 30 years.

Over the past 3 years, the changes in China's strategy for economic development are mainly shown in the following areas:

1. With regard to the objectives and speed of development, the previous practice of putting forth unrealistic slogans and targets has been abrogated. Tremendous consideration has been given to satisfying people's increasing needs in their material and cultural life. In other words, the practice of proceeding from reality, acting according to ability and advancing in regular order has been followed.

2. With regard to the structures of production, instead of placing undue emphasis on the development of heavy industry, China has put the production of consumer goods in first place. The service orientation of heavy industry has also been readjusted so that its service, mainly for new construction projects, has been switched to agriculture, light industry and the technical reform of the national economy.

3. With regard to the accumulation and use of development funds, instead of blindly seeking a high accumulation rate and using most of its accumulated funds in heavy industry, China has gradually reduced its accumulation rate from the previous 30 percent or so to about 25 percent. In this way, the proportion between accumulation and consumption has gradually become rational and the distribution and use of accumulated funds are beneficial to the coordinated development of agriculture, light and heavy industries and other departments of the national economy.

4. With regard to the methods of development, instead of mainly relying on the new construction projects and blindly seeking quantitative development, China has now attached importance to tapping the potentials of existing enterprises. On the basis of consolidating and reorganizing the existing enterprises, China has greatly promoted technical reforms of various departments of the national economy in order to enhance production capability, improve product quality and increase product variety and economic returns.

5. With regards to the systems of production relations and economic management, instead of disregarding the level of development of the many productive forces and blindly seeking the transitional form of ownership characterized by "bigger in size and of a more developed socialist nature," China has accepted the coexistence of various economic factors and permitted various management methods to exist under the prerequisite that the public ownership system assumes a predominant position.

6. With regard to making use of outside forces instead of pursuing a closed-door policy and being complacent and conservative, China can now bring into play foreign capital and technology to promote economic development at home.

WEN WEI PO EXAMINES PROSPECTS FOR CPC CONGRESS

["Newsletter from Beijing" by correspondent Cheng Hsiang: "Some Prospects for the 12th Party Congress -- the Attention-Grabbing 12th CPC Congress, Part V"]:

[Text] Since the third plenary session, gratifying changes have taken place in people's political and economic life. It is because:

1. The CPC, as a ruling party, has discerned a truth from its previous mistakes: The party is not allowed to place itself above the state and the people. It should not possess any right of status which is beyond the control of law. In particular, it should not monopolize everything. Having a correct understanding of this matter, the CPC has consciously adopted many measures in these few years, including streamlining government organizations, transferring cadres to new posts, revising the party constitution and so forth, the redress many of its mistakes. This has enabled the party to place its cooperation and unity with the government, masses and non-party personages on a new and more solid basis. This is beneficial for arousing people's enthusiasm and initiative. The fact that a political situation of stability and unity has occured in China in the past 3 years is closely connected with those measures.

2. Since the third plenary session, the CPC has adopted a policy of rehabilitating the people. Politically, it has ended the situation in which political movements spread unchecked for more than 20 years and the people did not know what course to follow. Thus, the people have been emancipated from those unending political movements and have gained a respite. Apart from that, false charges, wrong sentences and trumped-up charges have been redressed, and people's class status, which was wrongly determined, has also been corrected. People have freed their minds of all misgivings and have peace of minds. Economically, the CPC has implemented a strategic policy which benefits and enriches the people and invests the nation's wealth in them. Over the past 3 years, marked results have been particularly achieved in this respect.

Apart from that, democracy and the legal system have been strengthened over the past 3 years and the standing of intellectuals has been unprecedentedly enhanced. As a result, the line of the third plenary session has enjoyed the support of the broad masses of people.

We believe that the following are the focal points of the 12th party congress held under such circumstances:

1. It will reiterate the line, guilding principles and policies adopted since the third plenary session and make them more complete so that they will become a program for the Chinese-type socialist construction and play a guiding role in the four modernizations.

2. According to the new party constitution, the party's leading organs will be greatly changed, including the establishment of the three committees and the general secretary system so that the highest leading organ of the party will be in accord with the principle of collective leadership. At the same time, the new party constitution will contain important stipulations on democratic centralism.

3. It is expected that the congress will elect a number of persons who are firm and resolute in implementing the line of the third plenary session and let them take up various leading work in the party Central Committee. They will carry forward to the end various reforms (reforms in the leadership system and economic system) started since the third plenary session so that the four modernizations will be carried out smoothly.

4. It is expected that the 12th party congress will formulate plans for economic development that will continue to rehabilitate the people. The guiding thought and specific arrangements for the Sixth 5-Year Plan will be based on the requirements of the new strategy. According to these requirements, during the period of the "Sixth 5-Year Plan," the main efforts will be devoted to the following: 1) Readjustment of economic structures; 2) consolidation of the existing enterprises; 3) technical innovation of the key enterprises in order to accumulate strength and lay a foundation for further technical innovation of the existing enterprises during the period of the "7th 5-Year Plan." The principle of "readjustment, restructuring, reorganization and upgrading" will remain the traits of the Sixth 5-Year Plan. Therefore, economic development during this period will not be very fast. China intends to lay a solid foundation during the period of the "Sixth 5-Year Plan" and strive to speed up the development of the national economy after a complete improvement of the state's finance and economy. During the last 5 years of the 1980's, the speed of economic development will be faster than that of the "Sixth 5-Year Plan." The speed of economic development during the 1990's is expected to be even faster. Such being the case, China will be able to usher in a new period of economic prosperity during the last 10 years of this century.

WEN WEI PO RAPS 'CERTAIN PEOPLE IN JAPAN'

[Special feature by Li Tzu-sung: "Failure To Correct Mistakes Is Unfriendly"]

[Text] Certain people in Japan are always taking a foot when you give them an inch. When we yield an inch to them, they take a foot or even a yard.

Certain people in Japan are always devoid of gratitude. When we return good for evil, they return evil for good.

Certain people in Japan are always concealing and changing their real feelings; they can both fawn over people and also act in an arrogant manner toward them. They can bow low to you in the morning and angrily abuse you as "a pig" in the evening. (We recently received letters from Japanese abusing us as pigs).

If we practice boundless leniency toward certain people in Japan, we will not only get the worst of it ourselves but will also encourage them to make up their minds to bully and humiliate us again.

"The whole world will suffer if you let the enemy go for one day!" All kinds of feelings well up in our minds on reading this old saying:

Following the defeat of Japan's aggression against China, certain people bowed and scraped and were full of talk about "self-reproach" and "bitter regret." Then, when old scars have just healed, they strut about and give themselves airs. The Japanese Education Ministry proceeded to revise school textbooks and distort the history of aggression against China; "aggression" became "marching in." As they saw it, the protests of the Chinese people and the peoples of various countries could be ignored.

And now they want a "postponement" formula and stalling tactics: "The textbooks cannot be changed again, we will talk about it again in 2 years' time."

What will happen after 2 or 3 years? Will they again come up with "talking about it again in 3 years' time?"

We must loudly warn the Japanese Government power-holders: You should rapidly correct the error of distorting the historical facts of aggression against China; you should rapidly curb the revival of militarism. The sooner the mistake is corrected, the better.

So long as you fail to correct the error, you are being unfriendly to the Chinese people. If you do not correct the error for 2 or 3 years, that means you are being unfriendly to the Chinese people for 2 or 3 years.

"It is better to make friends than enemies." We have never recited the evils of the past; do you mean you mean you want to consolidate enmity?

In fact certain people in Japan have no intention of being friendly to China. How can the Chinese people accept the "great kindness" of people wishing to come to China to talk about friendship?

INCREASE IN CHINESE CUSTOMS DUTIES REPORTED

[Text] Residents returning to China today with gifts of electrical appliances for their relatives and friends will be in for a shock.

It was learnt yesterday that the Chinese customs at Shenzhen had just increased the customs duty on several popular brands of radio cassettes, cameras and paper copiers.

The increase varies from 25 percent to 67 percent.

Sources said that the increases were necessary to safeguard the electronics industry in China. The most-affected electronic item is the Aharp GF-777 radio/cassette player. The duty on it has been increased to 1,000 yuan ($3,000) from 600 yuan ($1,800). New customs duty on other three popular models of the same brand is now up to 600 yuan $1,800), against 400 yuan ($1,200) charged hitherto. However, the duty on the other radio cassettes remains unchanged.

Two popular models of Cannon paper copier also have had their customs duty increased from 4,000 yuan ($12,000) to 5,000 yuan ($15,000). On the other hand, while the duty on several brands of expensive single-lens reflex cameras has been increased, it has been reduced for cheap and small-sized models.

Distributors are expected to feel the pinch soon. Marketing manager of Sharp Corporation, J. Lai, said that the changes would affect their business. Mr Lai noted that the continual increase in the customs duty on electronic items taken to China had hampered the local re-export business. Government statistics show that 80,000 local imported radio cassettes were re-exported to China in the first half of this year, compared to 110,000 in the same period last year, representing a drop of 27 percent.

Mr Lai said that the decrease resulted from China's encouragement to its domestic electronics industry.

NONALIGNED SUMMIT MAY TAKE PLACE IN INDIA

OW301934 Beijing XINHUA in English 1831 GMT 30 Aug 82

[Text] New Delhi, August 30 (XINHUA) -- The Indian offer to host the 7th summit of nonaligned countries is acceptable to most countries and if there is a consensus in its favour, the summit is likely to be held sometime in March next year, PTI reported this evening.

The report said the venue of the summit will now be decided through a process of consultations and correspondence, instead of a meeting of foreign ministers as was once claimed by Iraq where the summit was originally scheduled to take place early next month.

Iraq's abandonment of the claim was announced by its ambassador to India, Adnan al-Obaidi [name as received] here today.

Meanwhile, a special envoy of Iraqi President Saddam Husayn, Hamid 'Alwan, arrived here this evening, reportedly with a message for Prime Minister Mrs. Indira Gandhi on the same matter.

UN, EEC SPONSOR ENERGY MANAGEMENT TRAINING CLASS

OW290642 Beijing Domestic Service in Mandarin 1200 GMT 25 Aug 82

[Text] The opening ceremony for the second national study and training class on energy planning and management sponsored by China's Beijing energy training center, the United Nations Development and Planning Agency and the European Economic Community was held at the Graduate School of Nuclear Energy Technology of Qinghua University on 25 August.

Fifty trainees are enrolled in this class under an international cooperation program. They are from 26 provinces, municipalities and autonomous regions, as well as the ministries and commissions at the central level and energy research organs. The training class hires Chinese and foreign experts to teach eight courses on energy planning and management and offers special lectures on energy conservation and rural energy.

Sponsoring this study and training class on energy planning and management will help promote the study of China's energy policy and its energy industry.

RELATIVITY PHYSICS MEETING OPENS IN SHANGHAI

[Excerpts] Shanghai, August 30 (XINHUA) -- The third Marcel Grossmann meeting on the recent developments of general relativity physics opened here this morning. Nearly 300 physicists and professors from 27 countries and regions attended the opening ceremony of the symposium, named in honor of the late Hungarian mathematician.

Addressing the group, Zhou Peiyuan, noted Chinese physicist and chairman of the China Association for Science and Technology, said that the meeting provided both Chinese and foreign physicists who are involved in research on general relativity an opportunity to exchange experiences and enhance cooperation in the fields of common interest. The meeting is of special significance because this year marks the 60th anniversary of the visit to China of Albert Einstein who had mathematical help in developing his theory of relativity from Grossmann.

Zhou Peiyuan expressed the hope that the participants would take a step toward the creation of a truly international community of scholars.

The meeting is jointly sponsored by the China Association for Science and Technology, the Chinese Society of Gravitation and Relativistic Astrophysics, the Shanghai Municipal Association for Science and Technology, the International Center for Theory Physics and the University of Rome. The first and second Marcel Grossmann meetings were held in Trieste, Italy, in 1975 and 1979.

RENMIN RIBAO ON U.S. ECONOMIC DIFFICULTIES

[Article by Zhang Dezhen [1728 1795 4176]: "The Supply-Side Advocates' Loss of Influence As Seen From U.S. Economic Difficulties"]

[Text] After a series of intensive lobbying activities by Ronald Reagan, the U.S. Congress recently passed a $98.3-billion tax increase over a 3-year period. People still remember that a year ago, Reagan persuaded Congress to pass a large-scale tax-reduction plan. This 180-degree turn has shocked and infuriated both supply-side theoreticians and Republican conservatives. They have denounced the President for "betraying" the traditional supply-side stand of opposing tax increases, saying that this constitutes a public ridicule of the President's tax-reduction plan of a year ago. Reagan himself also admitted: "The tax increase, an economic medicine, is unpleasant but necessary." He also said that his action "is like hugging a pig with a pinched nose" and that he has done this against his will.

What does this dramatic change, from actively advocating a tax reduction to being forced to push for a tax increase, show?

As is known to all, the economic policy of the Reagan administration is based on the supply-side theory. The core of this theory, a tax reduction, is a major recipe for curing the U.S. economic ills. A year ago, when Reagan set forth his "economic revival plan" in accordance with the supply-side theory, he highly praised the function of reducing taxes. He treated some supply-side economists as distinguished guests and entrusted them with important tasks. Reagan's chief economic adviser, Murray L. Weidenbaum, boasted: Once taxes are reduced, the U.S. economy will "develop at a fast speed, far exceeding any possible speed in history." The unemployment rate will drop to about 7 percent; the financial deficit which has perplexed the U.S. Government for a long time will gradually dwindle; and a balanced budget will be achieved in 1984. In short, it seemed as if the U.S. chronic economic maladies could be removed once the tax reduction was implemented. However, reality has turned these magnificant prospects into a soap bubble.

First, a tax reduction has not alleviated the current U.S. economic recession. According to the original idea of supply-side advocates, a tax reduction would increase the income of individuals and enterprises. This would encourage people to save more and invest more and thus stimulate the all-round prosperity of the economy. Facts have proved that although a tax reduction could increase the incomes of certain individuals and enterprises, these incomes have not been invested as had been wistfully hoped. This is because, for a long time in the past, the United States has been confronted with the problem of high interest rates. The prime lending rate offered to big companies by big banks reached 21.5 percent at its highest point and has fluctuated around 16 percent for a long time. Therefore, enterprises cannot afford to borrow money for investment. The greater part of the individual and enterprise income deriving from tax reduction has been spent for the most part on the consumer market or used to pay debts. Very little has really been used to increase savings or expand investment. Therefore, it has not markedly stimulated the economy. As a matter of fact, the U.S. economic recession has constantly intensified since the implementation of the tax-reduction plan. The GNP dropped by about 5 percent in the fourth quarter of last year and the first quarter of this year. Although it picked up slightly in the 2d quarter of this year, industrial production again dropped by 0.1 percent in July and the unemployment rate even shot up. After the unemployment rate topped the postwar record and reached 9.4 percent in April this year, it again rose sharply to 9.8 percent in July. In the words of Joseph L. Kirkland, president of the AFL-CIO, this means that the ranks of the unemployed extend 4,000 miles, forming a line from the U.S. East Coast to the West Coast. The continued intensification of the U.S. economic recession proves that reducing taxes cannot bring about the marvelous result of creating economic prosperity in a short time.

Second, not only has a reduction in taxes failed to achieve a balanced budget, it has, on the contrary, expanded the financial deficit. According to the wishful thinking of supply-side advocates, reduction in taxes will stimulate production and increase the profit of enterprises. If the profit increases, the government tax revenue will also increase correspondingly and a balanced budget will also be achieved. Actuated by this consideration, the Reagan administration last year asked Congress to approve a bold plan of reducing taxes by $285 billion in 3 years. Since income was to be reduced by such a great amount and expenditures by a small amount, how was the big deficit to be made up for? Obviously, Reagan planted the "stake" for a speedy economic prosperity on the tax reduction. However, the prolonged economic recession has turned Reagan's plan for financial revenue into one like water without a source, or a tree without roots. Thus, the old budget deficit has not been reduced while the new deficit caused by the reduction in taxes has constantly increased. According to a White House economic report estimate recently released, the financial deficit for fiscal year 1982 may be as high as $109 billion (more than 100 percent higher than the $42 billion deficit approved by Congress last year) and that for the 1983 fiscal year will increase to $115 billion. If no tax increase is implemented, the deficit for fiscal year 1983 may be as high as $180 billion.

High interest rates have hindered the increase of investment while a huge fiscal deficit has brought about prolonged high interest rates. This is because, in order to achieve a balanced budget, the government has to compete with enterprises to borrow money from the credit market. This has made it difficult to lower interest rates. On the other hand, high interest rates have dimmed prospects for an economic recovery. Therefore, U.S. economic circles almost unanimously hold that reducing the fiscal deficit is the key to the present problem. It is precisely against this background that President Reagan departed from his past stand of opposing a tax increase and decided to raise taxes. Nevertheless, a tax increase is a temporary arrangement, because increasing $98.3 billion in taxes over the next 3 years is practically of no avail to an annual deficit as high as $100 billion. However, besides this, there is no other contingency plan available. That is why Reagan has to hug a pig with a pinched nose.

These difficult circumstances show that the panacea proposed by the supply-side advocates is not effective. The supply-side advocates have fallen into disgrace in the government and some prominent supply-side figures have resigned one after another. However, they still refuse to admit defeat. With the deterioration of the U.S. economy, the two big conservative economic schools in the Reagan administration, the supply-side advocates and the monetarists, are attacking each other on economic policy. The supply-side advocates charge that the monetarist policy of tightening money supply has resulted in the current high interest rates and the failure of the tax reduction plan to bring about the anticipated results. The monetarists, on the other hand, charge that the tax reduction of supply-side theorists is the chief culprit responsible for the huge deficit.

The squabble between the economists of the two schools is not without reason, for the economic policy of the Reagan administration itself is self-contradictory in many respects. Reagan originally intended to integrate the advocates of the supply-side with the monetarists, complementing one with the other and, by stressing the theory of supply-side on stimulating production and expanding "supply" and by making use of the monetarists to control money supply and tightening the economy, to revive the U.S. economy. However, the deep-seated U.S. economic malady is accessible to neither tonic nor laxatives. It seems difficult for either of the economic schools to cure this persistent capitalist ailment.

Japanese Government Attitude

OW301331 Beijing XINHUA in English 1217 GMT 30 Aug 82

["Roundup -- Japanese Government Adopts a Wrong, Ambiguous Attitude Towards Textbook Issue" -- XINHUA headline]

[Text] Tokyo, August 30 (XINHUA) -- To confirm nothing and shoulder no responsibility -- this is the official attitude of the Japanese Government towards the criticisms of Japan's distortion of history in textbooks both from China and other countries.

On whether the war launched by Japan in the past is "aggression" or "advance," the Japanese official side takes an ambiguous attitude. While saying it "should be left to historians of future generations for judgement," it also said the government "is keenly conscious of the responsibility" and "deeply reproaches itself."

Such an attitude is utterly self-contradictory -- since the official side dare not admit that the war is an aggressive one, how could it be "keenly conscious of the responsibility" and "deeply reproaches itself?"

Long ago history concluded that Japan's war against China was an aggressive one. During the 15-year war against China, the Japanese militarists killed over 10 million Chinese, caused damage to China of 50 to 60 billion U.S. dollars. Meanwhile, they also made 2 million Japanese women widows. Such cost is enough to make any sober mind conclude that the war was one of aggression.

Many international documents issued over 30 years ago had condemned it as such.

The "Cairo Declaration" signed by China, U.S. and Britain on December 1, 1943 says: "We three great Allies are fighting this war to restrain and punish the aggression of Japan."

The "Potsdam Proclamation" which was agreed by Japan on August 15, 1945 says: "The term of the Cairo Declaration shall be carried out."

Japan signed the surrender agreement with the Allies on September 2, 1945 and first of all stated it accepted the provisions in the declaration and pledged to "carry out the provision of the Potsdam Proclamation in good faith."

The Charter of the United Nations published in 1945 calls for members to "take effective collective measures for the prevention and removal of threats to the peace, and for the suppression of acts of aggression..."

In November 1948, the Far East Military Tribunal pronounced Hideki Tojo and other 24 chief war criminals guilty of aggression. Such international rules and regulations are not only accepted internationally, but also accepted by the Japanese Government. These are enough to prove that the war launched by Japan in the past is an aggressive one.

Prime Minister Zenko Suzuki said Chief Cabinet Secretary Kiichi Miyazawa is making his efforts to study ways to solve the textbook issue.

Miyazawa said in a talk on the textbook issue on August 26 that Japan will "play full heed to the criticism from the neighboring countries" and will "make the necessary amendments."

Questioned about how the mistakes would be corrected, Miyazawa said that the minister of education will issue a policy statement.

At another news conference on the same day, Education Minister Heiji Ogawa did not mention any concrete ways they would correct the mistakes on the textbook issue. He only said it had been decided to quickly consult the Textbook Authorization Research Council and ask them to study the matter.

The prime minister asked the chief cabinet secretary to "study" the issue, and the chief cabinet secretary asked the education minister to "explain." While the education minister asked the Textbook Authorization Research Council to "study" -- the textbook issue has become a ball they are kicking about. Therefore, one has reason to believe when they say: "The government is responsible for correcting the mistakes" that their words are just empty talk.

Writers Call for Corrections

[Text] Tokyo, August 29 (XINHUA) -- Japanese textbook writers have come out one after another to call for an immediate correction of the erroneous passages in the textbooks by the government. They believed it only natural for China to disagree to Japanese Government's view on the textbook issue.

Professor Sasaki of the Hitotsubashi University told KYODO that the Japanese Government has had no sincerity at all to show repentance; that is why China naturally cannot accept its view. The Japanese side should correct right away the erroneous passages in the textbooks, if it was to show genuine sincerity, he said.

TOKYO SHIMBUN today quoted Professor Keiichi Eguchi of the Aichi University as saying that it was only natural that China had showed dissatisfaction over the view of the Japanese Government on the textbook issue. As a textbook writer himself, Keiichi Eguchi called for an immediate correction of the distortions in the textbooks by the Japanese authorities in accordance with China's demands.

Another textbook writer, Professor Keiji Nagahara of the Hitotsubashi University wrote to TOKYO SHIMBUN recently that the view expressed by the Japanese Government on the textbook issue meant that the textbooks would be used as they were now for the next two years. The Education Ministry has insisted on the existing screening system instead of recognizing its mistakes frankly, Nagahara said, adding that this was indeed something to worry about. China's attitude has been consistent and its request is a just one, he noted.

TOKYO SHIMBUN said today editorially that if the past war was not called "aggression", what would one have to blame the Soviet Union for its action in Afghanistan and in the Japanese northern territories? There was an old saying: Once you commit a mistake, do not refrain from correcting it. The assertion that the revision will be made under "outside pressure" has rightly proved that the Japanese Government is lacking conscientiousness in correcting its mistakes, the editorial said.

Dietmen Demand Changes

[Text] Tokyo, August 29 (XINHUA) -- The Japanese Broadcasting Corporation today broadcast telespeeches by dietmen of different parties demanding the government correct mistakes in history textbooks without any further delay.

Takagi, president for the special committee over the textbook issue of the Socialist Party, accused the Education Ministry of "playing little tricks" to delay the correction in the past month.

To change the word "aggression" into "advance" is a matter involving the appraisal of the nature of the past war as well as of the contemporary Japanese history, he said.

When the joint statement on the establishment of diplomatic relations between Japan and China was made public ten years ago, Takagi said, China didn't ask Japan for war reparations in view of Japanese reproaches on itself. However, he stressed, the war should explicitly be recognized as an aggressive one and the mistakes in textbooks should be corrected.

Chairman of Education Council Arima of the Komei Party said "aggression" and "advance" each has its own definition and the textbooks shouldn't be ambiguous about it.

Arima believed it is within the power of the education minister to have the mistakes in the present history schoolbooks corrected in time.

Talking about the harm caused by the textbook issue to the Japanese-Sino relations which have been established and developed by arduous efforts in the past ten years, Arima stressed that those Japanese in power should be held responsible for it.

Yohei Kono of the New Liberal Club said he couldn't feel any genuine intention of the Japanese Government to solve the textbook problem and couldn't agree to the statement of Chief Cabinet Secretary Kiichi Miyazawa on the issue.

Kono said it is wrong to leave the judgement of this problem to the next generation. He demanded Japan should give its younger generation a correct education on history so that youngsters could realize the error of the aggression and treasure the post-war peace.

RENMIN RIBAO CASTIGATES JAPANESE WAR FILM

[Article by Jia Neng [0163 5174]: "A Historical Tragedy Must Not Be Allowed to Repeat Itself"]

[Text] In August a film called "The Great Japanese Empire" was shown in Japan. This film distorts history and brazenly reverses the case of Hideki Tojo. This matter merits people's attention.

The film "The Great Japanese Empire" describes events which occurred during the Pacific war. In the winter of 1941, the Japanese militarists launched the Pacific war and attacked Pearl Harbor. After that, they invaded and occupied Hong Kong, Singapore, Southeast Asia and other places. They ran rampant for a time. The entire film lavishes praise on war criminal Hideki Tojo. This archcriminal of war, whose hands were stained with the blood of the people of various countries in the Asian and Pacific region, has been described by the film as a "buddha" who was benevolent and magnimous and showed concern for the masses. In the film, Hideki Tojo was a hero with foresight and great talent. The film makes use of the masses to shout: "Long live Premier Tojo." Such an unprecedented act of distorting history has never been seen before.

Now let us compare the scenes in "The Great Japanese Empire," which chant the praises of Tojo, with historical facts and see whether Tojo was a war criminal or the "goddess of mercy."

In front of a small courtyard of the family of a soldier sent on an expedition, Tojo conveys his greetings to the mother and children who line up to welcome him. The excited masses wave small multicolored flags and shout "Long live Tojo." Reporters and press photographers are extremely busy doing their work.

The narrator announces the "magnificent achievements" of the officers and men of the great Japanese empire sent on the expeditions:

"On 10 December, two warships of the British Far East fleet were bombarded and sunk in the naval battle of the Strait of Malacca."

"On 22 December Guam Island was occupied."

"On 22 December the 14th Army landed at the Philippines."

After that, escorted by his two secretaries, Tojo elbows his way through the masses and gets into his limousine. One of the secretaries sighs and says: "This is really a matter of human feelings of the century." Tojo is extremely modest and says seriously: "There is light only under the radiance of his majesty. To pass the edicts of his majesty to the people so that they will be loyal to the emperor, this is the duty of the prime minister, the son of the people..."

Here, Tojo is described as the savior. In particular, during and after the Di Wai Zhuang [5441 1120 1641] meeting, Tojo is depicted as a person who "is concerned about his country and his people" and does his utmost to "avert the national subjugation of Japan." Actually, the Di Wai Zhuang meeting was Tojo's turning point, and he overthrew Ayamaro Konoye, who had not made up his mind to launch the war, within 4 days and ascended the throne of the prime minister. Thereafter, Tojo formed a war cabinet which disregarded human nature.

According to investigation data provided by the Far Eastern International Military Tribunal and the accounts in a number of Japanese historical books, the Di Wai Zhuang meeting was a meeting of the Japanese Cabinet held on the afternoon of 12 October 1941. At that time, the contradiction between Japan and the United States was very acute. However, to obtain some war materials, Japan proposed the restoration of trade with the United States. The United States accepted the proposal under the conditions that Japan withdraw its troops stationed in China. The meeting debated this problem. The faction headed by Ayamaro Jonoye advocated stalling tactics whereas the other faction, headed by Tojo, the minister of the army, maintained that all problems should be solved by war. Tojo raised a terrific hue and cry at the meeting: "The problem of stationing troops is the lifeblood of the army and no concession should ever be made." He assumed a fascist tone by saying: "People should have the courage to jump from the 'stage' of Kiyomizu Temple." The Kiyomizu Temple is a very famous building in Kyoto. People call its main hall, which is facing a steep cliff, the "stage." Those who had intended to commit suicide jumped from this cliff very often. Tojo's remarks meant staking everything on a single throw. At the Cabinet meeting held on the 14th of the same month, Tojo forced the Cabinet to accept his views. At 2300 of the same day, he was too anxious to wait any longer and threw away all his inhibitions to force Konoye to resign. On 16 October, Konoye resigned and on the next day, Tojo ascended the throne of prime minister and thereby fulfilled his long-expected hope. Three weeks after his assumption of power, Tojo formulated "Main Points for the Implementation of the National Policy of the Empire" (draft). The "Main Points" explicitly said: "In order to find a way out of the present dangerous situation for the benefit of its self-existence and self-defense, the empire should establish a new order of the great east Asia and should determine to make war with the United States, Great Britain and Holland and adopt the following measures: 1) The time for launching armed attack will be early December and the army and navy should complete their preparations for war...

2) We should try our best to strengthen our cooperation with Germany and Italy... As a result, the Pacific war broke out in December 1941. This was Hideki Tojo after the meeting of Di Wai Zhuang. Not a hint of the character of "being concerned about the country and the people" could be found in him. On the contrary, his true features as a war criminal were fully shown. However, the film lauds such a person to the sky. This is a matter which has provided much food for deep thought.

The problems revealed in the film "The Great Japanese Empire" merit attention, because the film openly encourages people to worship the Yasuguni Shrine, to revise textbooks, to beautify militarism and so forth. An atmosphere which runs counter to our times is spreading in Japan. However, we also firmly believe that the broad masses of the Japanese people will not tolerate this atmosphere. Since they respect history, they will never let historical tragedy repeat itself.

PRC-JAPAN COPRODUCED FILM PREMIERES IN TOKYO

[Text] Tokyo, August 27 (XINHUA) -- A Japan-China co-produced feature film, "The Game Yet To Finish", was premiered her last night to commemorate the tenth anniversary of the normalization of Sino-Japanese relations. The film was well received by 1,500 Japanese people from all circles. It will be shown to the general public beginning September 15.

During the premiere, producers, directors and leading actors and actresses from both sides presented themselves to the audience. Yasuyoshi Tokuma, the film's Japanese co-producer, said in his speech that "the film clearly shows that during the 15 years of the Japan-China war, Japan was the aggressor. It also tells us how the people of both countries had survived those unfortunate years and founded by joint efforts the long-standing friendly relations." Wang Yang, the Chinese co-producer of the film, said the film, showing the joys and sorrows of the families of two "go game" players, a Chinese and a Japanese, "starkly reveals the profound misfortunes inflicted by Japanese militarism upon the two peoples. At the same time, it warmly extols the friendly relations between the two peoples. It will contribute to helping the Chinese and Japanese peoples understand history, safeguard peace and promote friendship."

Later, some spectators told XINHUA that they "learned historical facts from the film. True friendship stems from a knowledge of history."

Takeo Miki, the former Japanese prime minister who attended the premiere, said: "This film presents one aspect of history of Sino-Japanese relations. Therefore, it is a very timely show now. The plot is very moving and I'm deeply touched by it." Mitsuo Tomitsuka, secretary general of the General Council of Trade Union of Japan, said: "At present, some Japanese want to resume the path of the aggressive war. This film once again tells us what we Japanese should not forget the days when Japan was the war initiator. This really is a very significant film."

Present on the occasion were Yoshio Sakurauchi, Japanese foreign minister; Motoharu Morishita, minister of health and welfare, and Wang Xiaoyun, charge d'affaires ad interim of the Chinese Embassy.

AFP: SIHANOUK MEETS WITH PRESS IN BEIJING

[Text] Beijing, Aug. 30 (AFP) -- Prince Norodom Sihanouk of Cambodia said at a press conference here today that the Khmer Rouge, his allies in the broad anti-Vietnamese coalition over which he presides, no longer pose a real danger to Cambodia.

The former head of state said, though, that the alliance with his former jailers, the Khmer Rouge -- generally held responsible for the massacre of hundreds of thousands of Cambodians until their overthrow by the Vietnamese in 1979 -- is a "never-ending nightmare." But Prince Sihanouk added at the press conference that an "even more mortal danger" his country faces today is "colonisation by Vietnam and the Soviet Union." The prince called the Vietnamese "people of no faith or law" and "ungrateful and immoral."

Anticommunist himself, Prince Sihanouk said he had agreed to join the coalition with the Khmer Rouge and the anticommunist Son Sann so that the United Nations would not recognize the Vietnamese invasion of Cambodia as a fait accompli. Such a move "would be the end of independent Cambodia," he said.

Despite the near control over Cambodia exercised by the present pro-Hanoi government, Cambodia's seat at the U.N. is still held by the former Khmer Rouge Democratic Kampuchea regime, under whose aegis the anti-Vietnamese aliance was formed last June.

Prince Sihanouk will go to New York next month to participate in the session of the U.N. General Assembly and to defend Democratic Kampuchea's claim to the Cambodia seat. The prince revealed that he would go on to Washington, where -- even if uncertain of having discussions with President Ronald Reagan -- he would "at least meet" U.S. Vice-President George Bush and U.S. Secretary of State George Shultz.

"The Americans ask us not to talk about aid -- but I think they will help us," said the prince in reply to questions about possible U.S. support for the anti-Vietnamese coalition. Prince Sihanouk made similar remarks about Japan, saying that he had met today with the Japanese ambassador to China, Yasue Katori, and he hoped Japan would provide food and medical help.

In another round of diplomacy, Prince Sihanouk today invited to dinner the president of the French National Assembly, Louis Mermaz. When asked about France's attitude, the prince said he hoped it would supply some humanitarian aid to the population living in zones controlled by the anti-Vietnamese coalition. The prince said he met Mr Mermaz, a close political associate of French President Francois Mitterrand, on a "purely friendly basis". The rest of the French delegation accompanying Mr Mermaz on an official visit to China were not present at the dinner.

"France should remain impartial," added Prince Sihanouk. "Having given financial aid to the Vietnamese who occupy Cambodia, it should, as a friend of the Cambodian people, also help that part of the population subject to the authority of the Democratic Kampuchean Coalition Government."

Prince Sihanouk added that next December he would visit France, which has recognized neither the pro-Vietnamese government in Phnom Penh nor the anti-Vietnamese alliance, and at that time would ask for a meeting with President Mitterrand.

PLA BORDER GUARDS SAID TO FRUSTRATE SRV SABOTAGE

[Text] The PLA commanders and fighters defending Fakashan are determined to greet the convocation of the forthcoming 12th CPC National Congress with high vigilance in defending the border area. The commanders and fighters defending Fakashan have studied and discussed the communique of the 7th Plenary Session of the 11th CPC Central Committee and happily reviewed the great changes in China's urban and rural economic construction brought about by the line, principles and policies adopted since the 3d Plenary Session of the 11th CPC Central Committee on their defense positions.

They have said: The vigorous deeds of the people throughout the country in energetically supporting the effective border defense by the Fakashan defenders prove that stability and unity prevail in the political situation in China.

Since the beginning of August, the Vietnamese troops have continously shelled and fired at our Fakashan and made armed incursions. The cadres and fighters defending Fakashan, keeping high revolutionary morale and vigilance and braving the hot sun and heavy rains, have repaired all the trenches and shelters on the defense positions and turned the positions into a strong fortress in which they can attack, hide, move quickly and dwell.

On 6 August three Vietnamese special agents sneaked on to an unnamed point of high ground not far from and to the left flank of Fakashan and was conducting sabotage there. After our patrol discovered them, the Fakashan defenders immediately smashed the enemy sabotage attempt.

THAI TROOPS ON ALERT ALONG KAMPUCHEAN BORDER

[Text] Bangkok, August 29 (XINHUA) -- Thai troops along the Thai-Kampuchean border are on the alert for any Vietnamese incursion resulting from an anticipated offensive to "break" the newly formed Coalition Government of Democratic Kampuchea, said reports from Thailand's eastern border areas.

The alert followed the recent Vietnamese military build-up in the areas bordering Thailand. Intelligence reports reaching here said that fresh troops flown in from Vietnam are ready for operations near the Thai frontier. They are reportedly armed with Soviet T-54 tanks, 130mm artillery pieces and AKM-47 rifles.

Today's BANGKOK POST reported that official Thai observers are watching for signs of Vietnamese military moves designed to "test" the Democratic Kampuchean coalition. They believe that the indications are clear that the crucial assault is imminent, though there are still two more months of the rainy season left. Thai military sources noted that all this activity had given the lie to Vietnam's propaganda about a "partial withdrawal" of Vietnamese troops from the Kampuchean-Thai border areas.

Meanwhile, the NATION REVIEW reported today that local authorities along the border with Laos have also been put on alert.

The report quoted a police source in Uttradit Province as saying that about 700 Vietnamese soldiers were dispatched to a village and other areas opposite the province. Vietnamese troops were also sent to areas bordering Loei Province.

JAPAN CONTINUES SUPPORT TO DEMOCRATIC KAMPUCHEA

[Text] Bangkok, August 28 (XINHUA) -- Japanese Foreign Minister Yoshio Sakurauchi assured Thailand yesterday that Japan will work closely with the Association of Southeast Asian Nations (ASEAN) over the Kampuchean issue in the upcoming United Nations General Assembly session, reported the NATION REVIEW today.

Sakurauchi made the assurance during a brief meeting with Arsa Sarasin, director-general of the political department of the Thai Foreign Ministry, while making a stopover in Bangkok on his way to India yesterday.

Arsa quoted the Japanese foreign minister as saying that Japan will keep close consultations with ASEAN so that they will adopt a common stand in their efforts to drum up support for the Kampuchean coalition at the United Nations.

The Japanese minister, according to Arsa, also proposed to talk to countries in Africa and the Middle East friendly to Japan for their support for Democratic Kampuchea.

Sakurauchi also reiterated the Japanese Government's pledge to continue its relief aid to Indochinese refugees in Thailand, Arsa said.

BEIJING REVIEW ON U.S.-INDIA NUCLEAR ACCORD

HK280348 Beijing BEIJING REVIEW in English No 34, 23 Aug 82 pp 11, 12

[Article by Liu Zhengxue: "A New Trend in India-U.S. Relations"]

[Text] India and the United States reached an unexpected agreement on nuclear fuel during Indian Prime Minister Indira Gandhi's visit to the United States which ended on August 4. The new pact eased a decade of strained relations between the two countries and appeared to indicate a "new spirit of dialogue and co-operation."

Nuclear Fuel Dispute

The nuclear fuel dispute between India and the United States dates from a 1963 agreement signed by the two countries. At that time the United States agreed to help India build the Tarapur nuclear power plant and to supply 19.8 tons of enriched uranium annually for three decades. The conditions of the agreement were that India could only use U.S. nuclear fuel, would accept U.S. inspection and would not reprocess any of the spent fuel without U.S. approval. India also guaranteed that the fuel would only be put to peaceful use.

When India exploded its first nuclear device in 1974, the United States suspected that India had secretly reprocessed the Tarapur nuclear power plant's spent fuel and converted it into weapons-grade plutonium. The U.S. Congress adopted a U.S. Nuclear Non-Proliferation Act in 1978, which prohibited the United States from providing India enriched uranium. India issued a strong objection and stated that the 1963 agreement functioned as an international treaty, so the United States had no right to use an internal act to abrogate it unilaterally. India also denied that it had reprocessed the spent fuel, reaffirming that it had always observed the agreement and limited the plant's use to provide nuclear energy. Former U.S. President Carter adopted a flexible policy in dealing with this problem. He advised Congress that if the United States refused to provide India with nuclear fuel, it would probably ask the Soviet Union for it. In this "particular condition," the U.S. Congress reluctantly agreed to provide India the enriched uranium it should have provided in 1978.

After coming into office, President Reagan took a hard policy towards India, curtailing political and economic aid. When India asked the United States to honour its agreement to provide the nuclear fuel for 1979 and 1980, the Reagan administration refused, citing the 1978 U.S. Nuclear Non-Proliferation Act. India and the United States held two rounds of talks in Washington and New Delhi. The first round was characterized by sharp exchanges. The United States repeatedly demanded that India clarify whether it had used spent U.S. nuclear fuel for weapons. The Indians demanded that the United States honour the 1963 agreement to supply nuclear fuel. The talks stalemated. No agreement was reached during the second round of talks either, although the atmosphere was described as fairly "friendly."

The issue remained unresolved for a year. Before Prime Minister Indira Gandhi visited the United States, news analysts doubted that it would be resolved during these talks. However, the Indian prime minister and U.S. President reached a new agreement that includes concessions from both sides. This must be considered a breakthrough in India-U.S. relations. Under the new agreement India may purchase nuclear fuel from France, but must use it with the same restrictions applied to U.S. fuel in the 1963 agreement.

Strategic Interests

The recent pact serves the respective strategic interests of the two countries. The Reagan administration has changed its views on India since a new U.S. ambassador was appointed and President Reagan met with Prime Minister Gandhi at the Cancun meeting. The U.S. view is that India is a big country that could contribute to stabilizing Southeast Asia in face of the Soviet occupation of Afghanistan. It is fairly independent in foreign relations and is one of the major voices of the Third World. In recent years India's domestic economy has been strengthened and it has carried out an open investment policy. Stronger ties with India will benefit the United States politically and economically.

India also considers friendly relations with the United States favourable to its "equidistant" policy between the Soviet Union and the United States, and that it will improve India's position among the non-aligned countries. India also would benefit economically from increased U.S. capital funds, advanced technology and equipment.

At the end of her visit, Mrs Gandhi repeatedly described the achievements as "limited." Although relations between the two countries have improved, leaders of both say that there are still many differences on major diplomatic policies and bilateral relations.

[Text] Beijing, August 31 (XINHUA) -- Deng Xiaoping, vice-chairman of the Chinese Communist Party Central Committee, called on Louis Mermaz, president of the French National Assembly, Mme Mermaz and the party he is leading at the state guest house this morning.

Upon arrival, Deng Xiaoping was welcomed by President and Mme Mermaz, followed by a handshaking and photo session.

The vice-chairman and the French guests then had a cordial and friendly conversation. Deng Xiaoping said that his comrades wanted to reduce his work due to advanced age. But, he said, he had to meet personally with his French guests as he once lived in France for five years, and visited the country again in 1975, when he was the recipient of warm hospitality there.

"There are deep and friendly sentiments between the peoples of our two countries," he said.

Mermaz said the French people knew very well about the great deeds of Deng Xiaoping. "We feel it a great honor that you can spare some time to call on us in person on the eve of the convocation of the 12th National Congress of the Chinese Communist Party," he said. The president also conveyed French President Mitterrand's respect to Deng Xiaoping.

Deng Xiaoping asked Mermaz to convey his good wishes to President Mitterrand. "I am looking forward to meeting him soon," he added.

Present at the meeting were Zeng Tao and Xing Yimin, both deputy secretaries-general of the National People's Congress Standing Committee, Chinese Ambassador to France Yao Guang and French Ambassador to China Charles Malo.

[Text] Beijing, August 29 (XINHUA) -- Ye Jianying, chairman of the Standing Committee of the Chinese National Peoples Congress, met here with a delegation from the Bureau of the French National Assembly led by Louis Mermaz, president of the assembly, his wife and their party this afternoon. Upon their arrival at the reception hall of the Great Hall of the People, Chairman Ye greeted them with handshakes.

Ye said: "I am very pleased that the French National Assembly Bureau has sent its first delegation headed by assembly president since the establishment of diplomatic relations between our two countries. The friendly relations between China and France have a long history. The current visit by the president of the assembly and other guests will further enhance the friendly relations between us.

Chairman Ye said: "Sino-French friendship has a sound foundation. Many Chinese leaders, both deceased and alive, had worked and studied in France in their earlier years."

He said: "China has consistently attached importance to enhancing its relations with France. In recent years, the contacts between the Chinese National People's Congress and the French National Assembly have increased. This is satisfying."

Ye asked President Mermaz to convey the friendly sentiments of the Chinese people to the French people as well as his good wishes to President Mitterrand. He said he is looking forward to the French president's visit to China next year.

Mermaz said: "We know that the role you have played in China's history and in the socialist construction with late Chairman Mao Zedong. It is our great honor to meet you today."

He said: "As you have said, there exist long-standing relations between France and China. This conforms to the interests of the two peoples and world peace." Mermaz conveyed President Mitterrand's greetings to Chairman Ye Jianying. He said President Mitterrand will visit China next May.

Meet Deng Yingchao

[Text] Beijing, August 30 (XINHUA) -- Deng Yingchao, vice-chairman of the Standing Committee of China's National People's Congress (NPC), met here today with Louis Mermaz, president of the French National Assembly, his wife and the delegation from the Bureau of the French National Assembly led by him.

Deng Yingchao extended her welcome to Louis Mermaz, his wife and other French guests. She said that she can still remember clearly the warm reception accorded to a delegation from the Chinese People's Congress led by her on a visit to France in June 1980. She once again offered her thanks to the French National Assembly, the French Government and the French people.

She said although that was her first visit to France, she did not feel a stranger there. In the 1920s, many Chinese students, including her late husband, Comrade Zhou Enlai and many other leading comrades of the People's Republic, went to France on a work-study program to seek truth. Even at that time, she had a very good impression of France. Through her personal visit to France in 1980, she said she personally felt the friendliness of the French people toward the Chinese people.

She said it is of vital importance for the deepening of the mutual understanding between the two peoples, the strengthening of contacts between the Chinese People's Congress and the French National Assembly, and the furthering of cooperations between the two countries in international affairs in the present turbulent world. This will be both beneficial to peoples of the two countries and world peace.

Louis Mermaz said China is a country of vital importance to France. President Mitterrand attaches great importance to the development of Sino-French friendship. It is the first time for most of the members of the present delegation to visit China. They believe their present visit and talks with the Chinese side will be a new impetus to the development of the relations between the two countries. "We hope the friendship which exists between the two countries will be further developed firmly and continuously," he said.

After the meeting, Deng Yingchao entertained the French guests with roast Beijing Duck at a banquet.

Present at the meeting and banquet were Wang Feng, a deputy to the National People's Congress and Zeng Tao deputy secretary-general of the N.P.C. Standing Committee, who accompanied Deng Yingchao on her visit to France, Yao Guang, Chinese ambassador to France, and Charles Malo, French ambassador to China.

RENMIN RIBAO NOTES ESCALATING PIPELINE DISPUTE

[Report: "U.S.-European Conflict Over Natural Gas Pipeline Escalates"]

[Text] According to reports, the French Government ordered "Dresser-France" to ship natural gas pipeline equipment to the Soviet Union after that American company in France had refused to provide that equipment to the Soviet Union. As a result, the Reagan administration decided to take sanctions against this U.S.-affiliated company, as well as another company. The row between the United States and Europe over sales of natural gas pipeline equipment to the Soviet Union will intensify further.

The provisions issued by the U.S. Commerce Department on 26 August stated that since they had violated the U.S. 1979 Export Control Act by selling compressors to the Soviet Union, Dresser-France and the Creusot-Loire Company would be unable to obtain U.S. goods, services or technology for a certain period. These two companies are currently being investigated by the Commerce Department.

U.S. Commerce Secretary Baldridge also publicly declared that the U.S. embargo was aimed at deterring other companies from violating U.S. regulations.

He said that this move is "very important and will have an effect;" it is "a signal to others who might violate the embargo." The Commerce Department statement said: "We will take appropriate measures wherever we have reason to believe that there has been a violation of U.S. export regulations."

The previous day, Hughes, the chief State Department spokesman stated that the U.S. Government would "institute sanctions" against companies violating President Reagan's ban on providing the Soviet Union with natural gas pipeline equipment.

According to reports, the U.S. sanctions may include restricting the foreign trade of those companies, fining them and cancelling contracts signed by them and the U.S. Government.

The U.S. decision to institute sanctions against Dresser-France was made at a time when the conflict between the United States and Europe over providing the Soviet Union with natural gas pipeline equipment is growing sharper every day. France, West Germany and Italy unanimously opposed the U.S. June decision on expanding the embargo against the Soviet Union.

The British John Brown Engineering Company has also recently announced that it would continue to supply natural gas pipeline equipment to the Soviet Union, adding that a Soviet freighter would arrive in Britain on 28 August to carry the first batch of 6 of the 21 steam turbines to be made by the company. Some parts for these machines were supplied by the U.S. General Electric Company. The machines and parts have been loaded into 500 large containers, which are now awaiting shipment.

At the same time, the EEC has met to discuss the U.S. expansion of the embargo on the Soviet Union. Gaston Thorn, chairman of the EEC Executive Commission said in a press interview on 25 August that Western Europe has determined to go right through with the deal on supplying the Soviet Union with natural gas pipeline equipment. He said that the European companies and enterprises concerned should honor the contracts they had signed for the manufacture of the natural gas pipeline materials and that the U.S. denial order was unjustified. He also expressed the hope that U.S.-European relations would ease, "especially in the current economic situation." "We must at all costs avoid the outbreak of a trade war between us (Europe and the United States)."

FRANCE'S CHEVENEMENT CITED ON USSR CONTRACTS

[Text] Paris, August 27 (XINHUA) -- French Minister of State for Research and Technology Jean-Pierre Chevenement reiterated today that France could not give in "over principles of national independence and respect of contracts."

Chevenement made the announcement at a press conference here after the United States imposed sanctions against two French firms, Dresser-France and Creusot-Loire. The two firms have continued to honor their contracts with the Soviet Union for supplying equipment to be used in the controversial trans-Siberia gas pipeline in defiance of U.S. President Ronald Reagan's embargo order.

Chevenement said the contracts France has signed with the Netherlands, Algeria and the Soviet Union were aimed at reducing the country's dependence on oil, mainly imported from the Middle East and "often delivered by U.S. companies."

The U.S. embargoes against the French firms demonstrated that "a technological dependence has been established which could, in the future, limit our national independence in energy or in other domains," he said. He said "no fact" can support the U.S. sanctions. But there "cannot be a good alliance, which fails to respect national independence," he added.

"Europe holds a position of solidarity" on the issue, he said. But current problems between Washington and Paris should not be exaggerated, he stressed.

Meanwhile, West German Defence Minister Hans Apel said today, when addressing the German-Atlantic Society in Frankfurt, that the row between Western Europe and the United States over the pipeline issue could jeopardise the defence of the West.

Apel said the North Atlantic Treaty Organisation "could not live long with such an aggravation of tension" between the United States and Europe.

EEC'S THORN SAYS USSR CONTRACTS WILL BE HONORED

OW271630 Beijing XINHUA in English 1530 GMT 27 Aug 82

[Text] Brussels, August 26 (XINHUA) -- West European countries will carry on their pipeline deal with the Soviet Union to the end in defiance of the U.S. ban, declared Gaston Thorn, president of the EEC Commission here yesterday. Thorn was speaking to newsmen on U.S.-European relations, particularly the dispute arising from the Siberian pipeline deal between West European countries and the Soviet Union.

He accused the United States of not responding to an EEC note to U.S. on August 12, in which EEC pointed out that the extension to U.S. firms abroad of the U.S. embargo against the Soviet Union is an "unacceptable interference" and it asked the United States to reverse its decision.

He held that the European firms concerned should honor their signed contracts with the Soviet Union and the U.S. ban on equipment supplies to the pipeline project by European firms is unjustifiable.

Thorn called for a common position by the ten EEC nations to solve the crisis over the issues of pipeline, steel exports and agricultural policies. However, he indicated that dialogues between the two sides of the Atlantic must be restored to avoid a widening of differences.

POLAND PROTESTS WESTERN 'PROPAGANDA SUBVERSION'

OW240342 Beijing XINHUA in English 0239 GMT 24 Aug 82

[Text] Warsaw, August 23 (XINHUA) -- Poland has lodged strong protests with the United States, France, Britain and West Germany against "propaganda subversion" put on by their radios, the Polish news agency PAP reported today.

Heads of diplomatic missions of the four countries were summoned to the Polish Foreign Ministry to hear the protest in the past few days.

The Foreign Ministry pointed out that radios financed by the four countries had carried out activities "instigating for violations of the present Polish law and order, slandering the Polish state authorities, backing activity of illegal groups and broadcasting false reports and commentaries with a view to deliberately misinforming the Polish public opinion". All these, the Foreign Ministry pointed out, constitued a violation of the principles of international regulations and a gross interference in the internal affairs of Poland.

The Foreign Ministry demanded a halt to such activities and declared that it reserved its right to take "appropriate measures" against them. This is the first time that the Polish Foreign Ministry lodged the protests on the matter though similar accusations against the West had been made since the imposition of the martial law in the country.

Describing the Israeli forces as the "most vicious war machine of modern times," 'Arafat said, "Beirut accomplished a miracle of heroism and gave the example of a challenge in the most difficult circumstances the Arab nation has ever known."

'Arafat said in the message, "words will never be enough to express my feelings of love and respect for all those I knew in this country, which welcomed our peoples' revolution at the cost of the greatest sacrifices and with the greatest generosity."

SYRIAN REGULAR ARMY PULLS OUT OF BEIRUT

[Text] Beirut, Aug 30 (XINHUA) -- The 85th Armored Brigade of the Syrian regular Army began pulling out from Beirut today.

The first batch of about 1,000 men, carrying heavy weapons and holding the portrait of Syrian President Hafiz al-Asad, began their move for the Al-Biqa' Valley at 6 a.m. along the international highway.

The evacuation of the armed Palestinian personnel has almost ended. About 1,700 Palestinian guerrillas withdrew to Syria by land and sea yesterday. PLO military leader Abu Jihad also left Beirut by sea with his fighters.

Until last night, about 9,000 Palestinian guerrillas had reportedly left Beirut.

According to Israeli radio, a Israeli Cabinet meeting yesterday rejected the U.S. idea of establishing an "unarmed" Palestinian state in West Bank and Gaza. The idea was communicated to Israeli Defense Minister Ari'el Sharon who is visting the United States.

The radio quoted Israeli Prime Minister Menahem Begin as saying that Israel would exercise jurisdictions over the occupied land if the United States and Egypt violate any articles of the Camp David accords concerning the Palestinian autonomy.

Meanwhile, Begin told the American newspaper NEW YORK TIMES that his troops would pull out from Lebanon simultaneously as the withdrawal of the Syrian Army starts.

Talks With Huang Hua

OW281403 Beijing XINHUA in English 1241 GMT 28 Aug 82

[Text] Beijing, August 28 (XINHUA) -- Huang Hua, state councillor and minister of foreign affairs, and Louis Randall Tull, minister of foregin affairs of Barbados, held talks here this morning.

It was learned that the talks proceeded in a sincere and friendly atmosphere. The two ministers agreed that "although China and Barbados are far in geography, both are Third-World countries facing common tasks of developing their economies, and of building their own countries. Both countries love peace, and have shared views on many major international issues.

During the talks, Tull gave an account of the situation in the Caribbean Sea region and Central America.

Referring to the international situation, Huang Hua said "the two superpowers rivalry for hegemony is the root cause of present tense and turbulent world situation. Third-World countries are direct victims of such a rivalry."

He also gave an account of China's views on the situation in Europe, the Middle East, and South Africa, and on Afghanistan and Kampuchean issues and elaborated on China's foreign policy.

[Text] Beijing, August 28 (XINHUA) -- Visiting Barbados Minister of Foreign Affairs Louis Randall Tull, Mrs. Tull and their party were honored at a dinner here tonight given by Huang Hua, Chinese state councillor and minister of foreign affairs.

In his speech, Huang Hua praised Barbados for pursuing a foreign policy of having friendly relations with all countries but not being anybody's satellite.

He said: "China has consistently carried out an independent foreign policy of peace and is willing to establish and develop relations with various countries of the world on the basis of the five principles of mutual respect for each other's sovereignty and territorial integrity, non-aggression, non-interference in each other's internal affairs, equality and mutual benefit and peaceful coexistence. In our view, the turbulences and crises occurring in various regions of the world now are in most cases caused by the instigation and interference of the superpowers for hegemonism, and we Third World countries are the first to suffer from hegemonism.

"As a member of the Third World, China will, as always, work to strengthen her unity and cooperation with other Third World countries and carry out her bounden duty of opposing hegemonism and preserving world peace."

Huang Hua said: "The Chinese Government and people highly cherish their friendship with peoples of Barbados and the other Caribbean states. Though we are geographically far away from each other and have different characteristics, our hearts are linked together. We all have our own strong points and can supplement each other. There is a broad prospect for our bilateral exchanges and cooperation."

In reply, Tull said: "This visit has given me the opportunity to exchange with you views on many of the very grave questions that confront the international community."

"The greatest need today," he said, "is for the nations of the world to accept and fully implement those principles enshrined in the Charter of the United Nations primarily, the adherence to the rule of law, the rejection of the use of force in the settlement of international disputes, the right of peoples to self determination and the settlement of disputes by peaceful means."

Discussing Sino-Barbados relations, Tull said: I hope my visit will help to strengthen and further extend the very cordial relations which exist between our two governments. These relations were enhanced by the visit in 1980 of the prime minister of Barbados and the agreements he signed at that time for co-operation in the economic, technical and cultural fields and in sport have already begun to bear fruit. Barbados looks forward to the widening and deepening of the contacts which have developed as a result of that visit.

Taiwan, Fujian Delegations

[Newsletter by XINHUA reporter Xu Xinhua: "We Are Accommodated at Zhongnanhai!"]

[Excerpts] Beijing, 29 Aug (XINHUA) -- "We are accommodated at Zhongnanhai!" The members of the Taiwan and Fujian delegations to the 12th National CPC Congress are excitedly talking about this.

Lin Liyun, head of the Taiwan delegation and president of All-China Federation of Taiwan Compatriots, said: "While we are here, we naturally recall the great achievements of the revolutionaries of the older generation. The motherland's reunification and prosperity are the causes which they strived hard for during their lifetime. The 12th congress is a meeting of very important significance in the history of our party. We must sum up our past experiences and open up a new prospect for our socialist modernization. We must concentrate our energy on holding the congress well and do a solid job after the congress. We must work hard to fulfill the tasks that will be set by the 12th congress."

Cai Xiao, deputy head of the Taiwan delegation and chairman of the Taiwan Democratic Self-Government League, said: Of all the delegations to the 12th congress, ours is the smallest in terms of the number of members. The party Central Committee and the preparatory organization of the congress put us up at Zhongnanhai. This once again shows the party Central Committee's loving attention to Taiwan party members and Taiwan compatriots residing on the mainland. We will certainly live up to the expectations of the party and the people. We will do our work still better.

With regard to the party's concern for Taiwan compatriots, the Taiwan delegates have much to talk about from their personal experience and from what they have seen and heard. Zhu Tianshun, associate professor of Xiamen University; Xu Jinxing, vice president of the Guangdong Provincial Federation of Taiwan Compatriots; Wen Shawu, director of the Fujian provincial physical culture work team party committee office and Chen Heng, deputy general engineer of the Tianjin dyeing stuff plant attended a Taiwan cadres' training class at the Central Higher Party School from March 1981 to January 1982. During that period, Deng Yingchao, Liao Chengzhi and other comrades received them and earnesly encouraged them to study well. Today, they are still touched when they recall all this.

Ma Zhongheng, member of the Fujian delegation and general engineer of the Minjiang hydro-electric power engineering bureau, just returned to China from Equatorial Guinea after carrying out an assignment of aiding that country. He said: After staying abroad for more than a year, upon returning to Beijing I feel that it has changed a great deal. There are commodities in plenty of the market. Traffic order has obviously turned for the better. The city has become clean and tidy, and many trees have been planted. I feel at ease wherever I go. While abroad, I deeply felt that all the Third World countries wish for China to become powerful. A powerful China is favorable to world peace. We must work hard to construct the motherland well and make contributions for the Chinese people and the people of the world.

ARTICLE ON PLA GREETS 12TH CPC NATIONAL CONGRESS

OW302355 Beijing Domestic Service in Mandarin 2320 GMT 26 Aug 82

[Part 1 of special article by (Xie Xuan) greeting the 12th CPC National Congress: "The People's Liberation Army Is Marching Forward in Big Strides on the Road To Revolutionize, Modernize and Regularlize Itself"]

[Text] On the eve of the convocation of the 12th CPC National Congress, recalling achievements since the 3d Plenary Session of the 11th CPC Central Committee has further strengthened our confidence and fighting will. We are determined to make new contributions to accelerating our army's revolutionizing, modernizing and regularizing itself and to defending and building our socialist motherland.

The 3 years since the 3d Plenary Session of the 11th CPC Central Committee was a period in which our army marched forward with big strides on the road to revolutionizing, modernizing and regularizing itself. With the shift of stress in work of the whole party, our army, like other fronts in China, has achieved much. Particularly since Comrade Deng Xiaoping took charge of the Military Commission, the PLA has made tremendous achievements and taken new strides in strengthening political and ideological work, in stepping up military and political training to enhance combat effectiveness, in logistics and scientific research for national defense, and in participating in socialist construction to promote army-government and army-people unity.

Let us discuss its achievements in the four aspects mentioned above:

1. The PLA has strengthened political and ideological work among the troops. Political work is the lifeblood of all work in our army. Modernization and regularization must be put under the command of revolutionary progress to keep to firm and correct political orientation. In the new historical period, our army will adhere to the fundamental principles of political work, inherit and carry forward its fine traditions and work style and create new experiences under the new situation to make its political work more powerful and guarantee the completion of all tasks assigned to the People's Army by our party. In order to ensure the implementation of the line, principles and policies adopted since the 3d Plenary Session of the 11th CPC Central Committee in the entire army, our army has firmly strengthened political and ideological work by paying attention to its heart -- ideological education -- in the new circumstances. In past years, the whole army has systematically conducted education on the line, principles and policies adopted since the 3d Plenary Session of the 11th CPC Central Committee and on upholding the four basic principles.

It has universally carried out education in patriotism, with contents calling for loving the CPC, the socialist motherland, the people and the army. It has systematically promoted the study of basic theories in order to have a comprehensive and accurate understanding of Marxism-Leninism and Mao Zedong Thought as a scientific system. It has conducted in-depth discussion on the criteria for truth, emancipated the minds and eliminated the pernicious influence of Lin Biao and the gang of four and the influence of "two whatevers."

Since the 6th Plenary Session of the 11th CPC Central Committee, all PLA commanders and fighters have seriously studied the "Resolution on Certain Questions in the History of Our Party Since the Founding of the People's Republic of China." The PLA has used the guidelines of the resolution to unify the thinking and action of all commanders and fighters. While continuing to eliminate the influence of leftist guiding thought, the PLA has resolutely criticized and overcome the influence of bourgeois liberalization and other erroneous thinking.

By carrying out education on the excellent national economic situation and rural economic policies, the PLA has promoted the cadres' and fighters' understanding of the correctness of the open-door policy and the policy of enlivening the domestic economy. This education has enhanced their understanding of the system of responsibility for agricultural production, dispelled their doubts and worries and firmed their confidence.

The party organizations at all levels have seriously studied and implemented the guiding principles for inner-party political life, strengthened and improved party leadership and brought into better play the role of party committees at all levels as the core of leadership, the role of the party branches as fighting bastions and the role of party members as exemplary vanguards. In addition, the PLA has carried out education on striking blows at serious economic crimes and opposing corruption by capitalist thinking. The studies and education have raised remarkably the political consciousness and ideological level of the broad masses of commanders and fighters, evidently strengthened their sense of organization and discipline, and made them firmly trust the correct leadership of the party Central Committee and have faith in the line, principles and policies adopted since the 3d Plenary Session of the 11th CPC Central Committee.

Facts prove that the People's Army is forever loyal to the party and the people, that it resolutely obeys party leadership and commands and adheres to the purpose of serving the people wholeheartedly. Therefore, the PLA is invincible. The party Central Committee has repeatedly emphasized that, in order to build a modern and powerful socialist country, we must have a high degree of socialist ethics as well as of material development. The PLA, following the instruction issued by the party Central Committee that the army should be a Great Wall of steel guarding our motherland as well as a glorious pace setter in establishing socialist ethics, has considered its actual situation and carried out the activities of striving to be revolutionary armymen with four haves, three stresses and two fearnots throughout the army. Four haves, three stresses and two fearnots mean having ideals, morality, knowledge and physical strength; stressing soldiers' appearance and bearing, courtesy and discipline; and fearing neither hardship nor bloodshed and sacrifice.

These activities have received warm responses from large numbers of commanders and fighters and have been affirmed and praised by leading comrades of the party Central Committee. Mass activities have been conducted to foster advanced companies and individuals with socialist ethics throughout the army. This is an important measure in building socialist ethics in the army as a regular system. These activities are basically aimed at training a generation of new men with revolutionary ideals, morality, culture, discipline and a high political consciousness and with an ability to defend and build the motherland so that our army's glorious tradition will be passed on and carried forward from generation to generation.

Proceeding from its actual conditions, each unit of the army has done practical work in a down-to-earth manner, strengthened its organizational leadership, set an example and commended the advanced. Various measures have been taken to conduct extensive mass activities to foster advanced companies and individuals. As a result, a profound change has taken place in the mental outlook of the army and the political consciousness of its commanders and fighters has been greatly raised. This has effectively promoted the fulfillment of the army's tasks in education, training, preparedness against war, construction and production.

A large number of advanced units and individuals in building socialist ethics have emerged in the army, such as the Fakashan heroic battalion of the Guangzhou PLA units, the (Houlinshan) combat-heroic battalion of the Kunming PLA units, the flight-safety red-banner independent group of a certain air force unit, the patriotic, island-loving sentry of a certain navy unit, the iron checkpoint at Karakorum of the Urumzi PLA units, the corruption-proof, good 2d company of a certain regiment under the Zhuhai Garrison District, the good Gulangyu 8th Company of the Fuzhou PLA units, (Qian Demen), a model in cherishing the people, (Dang Fanshen), a model in cherishing soldiers, (Li Junjia), a fine political cadre in following the Lei Feng style, (Guo Jun), a fine cadre who risked his own life to save people, (Zhang Yilu) an old cadre who has persisted in doing people good turns in the countryside during his 12-year retirement, and so on and so forth. They are outstanding representatives of our army in building socialist ethics.

Among the advanced units and individuals, there are veteran models who have made fresh progress, as well as new models who have made remarkable achievements in various fields, fighters as well as cadres at various levels, and models in accomplishing important tasks, as well as advanced individuals who have performed moving deeds at their ordinary posts. Their advanced deeds embody the gratifying achievements made by the army in building socialist ethics.

In building socialist ethics, leading army cadres at various levels have led fighters to nearby rural villages, factories, schools and neighborhoods, where they have made efforts to build socialist ethics by learning from Lei Feng and fostering new habits along with local people. In the first half of this year alone, the army organized more than 100,000 service teams to do good turns in society. Together with the masses, these teams made efforts to build socialist ethics, advanced villages, factories, neighborhoods and schools. This has strengthened army-government and army-people unity and contributed to improving the general mood of society.

All army commanders and fighters have profoundly realized that only when a good job is firmly done in building socialist ethics will it be possible to quickly revive and carry forward the fine tradition and work style of our party and army, to rapidly improve the army's military and political qualities, to promote the building of a modernized, revolutionary regular army and to make new progress in the correct direction. Now activities to build socialist ethics are in full swing, and the army is persistently and extensively carrying out such activities.

2. The PLA has stepped up military and political training and enhanced the troops' combat effectiveness. In order to heighten their combat readiness and consolidate defense of the motherland, the broad masses of commanders and fighters of the PLA ground, naval and air forces, seriously adhering to the positive defense strategy adopted by the Military Commission, have strategically placed education and training to meet the demands of real combat. They have thus strengthened our national defense capability and improved our military quality. Various PLA units, considering the characteristics of future war and their combat duties, have intensified and reformed their training programs and increased the contents of training according to specific purposes. All services and arms pay attention to basic training. They have also added special combat subjects to training, stepped up tactical and joint operational training of various services and made new progress in improving the joint operational capability of task forces in modern warfare.

In order to build a modern and regular revolutionary army, we must have a large number of well-trained commanding cadres and specialized and technical personnel. The cadres' training is the crux of our army's training program. The PLA has strengthened training of middle- and high-level cadres. It has universally organized training classes for military campaigns. In those classes, the trainees studied questions concerning the operations in the early stage of a future war in the light of their units' duties and the characteristics of certain war zones. They have thus improved their strategic and tactical concept and enhanced their organizational and command ability. PLA schools, seriously training leading army cadres at various levels, have supplied PLA units with a large number of commanders and specialized and technical personnel at various levels. The PLA units pay great attention to on-the-job training for cadres according to their training capability. Group after group of competent cadres in their prime have been promoted to leading posts. They have accelerated the process of making the PLA cadre force become revolutionary, more educated and professionally more competent, with a younger average age. The grassroots PLA units have conducted regularization training, strictly in accordance with the training plan, enabled commanders and fighters to master skills in weapons handling and thus enhanced their combat effectiveness. In the fall of 1981 the PLA held a military exercise in a certain place in north China. Various arms of the army and flight and airborne units of the air force participated in the exercise, which was the largest military exercise held since the founding of the People's Republic of China and the PLA. It was a military exercise approximating real battle conditions, using modern methods for combatting invaders.

The exercise examined the results of the armed forces' revolutionary progress, modernization and regularization, gained experience in coordinated operations of various arms and services under modern conditions, enhanced the armed forces' military and political qualities and performance level under simulated combat conditions, and was highly appraised and commended by the party Central Committee, the State Council, the Military Commission of the party Central Committee and leading comrades of various provinces, municipalities and autonomous regions.

The success of the exercise showed that our army has attained a higher standard in military command, political work, logistic support and so forth, and has taken a new step forward in its ability to fight in coordination as a composite army and in using modern means to deal with the enemy. It indicated that our army has marched steadily into a new period of army building. It proved that the PLA, founded by the party and armed with Mao Zedong Thought, is a well-trained and strictly organized and disciplined army with a strong fighting capacity and capable of defeating any enemy who dares to invade.

The PLA is effectively performing its sacred duty of defending the great motherland and safeguarding world peace, vigilantly guarding the motherland's territories, territorial air space and territorial waters, and permitting no enemy to intrude. We will not attack unless we are attacked; if we are attacked, we will certainly counterattack. This has been the principle consistently followed by our army.

From 17 February to 5 March 1979, under the circumstances of repeated encroachment of our territory and the killing and injuring of our frontier guards and inhabitants by Vietnamese aggressors despite repeated warnings by our government, our frontier guards in Guangxi and Yunnan, driven beyond endurance, were forced to fight back in self-defense and protect our border regions. In the counterattack, our frontier guards punished the Vietnamese regional hegemonists, won great victories, politically and militarily, and successfully achieved the goals set for them.

The PLA units taking part in the counterattack demonstrated high patriotism and fearless revolutionary heroism, were brave and tenacious, and feared no sacrifice. Many heroic collectives and individuals came forward, fearing neither hardship nor death, were victorious, both in attack and defense, and outstandingly accomplished their combat missions. Among the units which took part in the counterattack, 160 heroic units and 218 heroic individuals were conferred honorary titles by the Military Commission of the party Central Committee and the frontier units.

The victory of the self-defense counterattack greatly boosted our national and military pride, enhanced the international prestige of the People's Republic of China and encouraged the struggle against hegemonism by the people of all countries in Asia and other parts of the world. The heroic People's Army made great contributions to defending the dignity of the motherland, opposing hegemonism, maintaining world peace, and safeguarding the smooth progress of the motherland's four modernizations drive and the peaceful life and work of the people of the whole country, thus adding a brilliant new page in the PLA's glorious history.

In May 1981, units of our frontier guards in Guangxi and Yunnan heroically fought back against Vietnamese enemies who had invaded our territory at one stroke, repulsed many furious attacks by the enemy in regimental and battalion strength and held fast to their positions, one against inspiring the fighting will of all PLA commanders and fighters and the people of the whole country to defend and build up the motherland.

[Part 2 of special article by (Xie Xuan) to greet the 12th CPC National Congress: "The People's Liberation Army Is Marching Forward in Big Strides on the Road of Revolutionization, Modernization and Regularization"]

3. The PLA has built up its logistic services and raised the level of national defense scientific research. In stepping up the modernization of national defense and adapting to the requirements of modern wars, our army has also made tremendous achievements in logistics and national defense scientific research.

Comrade Mao Zedong pointed out: To a modern army, the organization of good logistic services is of very [ji qi 2817 0366] great importance.

In the new historical period, based on the requirements of modern warfare and in view of the actual conditions of its logistic services, our army, under the general goal of building a modern, regular, revolutionary army, calls for building a fighting logistic force and striving to raise logistic work to a higher level. It calls on logistic organs and units to have the ability to provide comprehensive logistic support guaranteed to meet the requirements of modern wars, fight defensive battles, organize and command, and be prepared at all times and under the most difficult conditions to fulfill logistic tasks.

Since the 3d Plenary Session of the 11th CPC Central Committee, our army has strengthened the ranks of its logistic cadres, logistic units preparedness against war and various logistic services, stepped up the building of a fighting logistic force and made progress in providing reliable logistic support and ensuring victory in future wars against aggression.

While fulfilling their day-to-day tasks, the logistic departments at various levels pay serious attention to studies on providing reliable logistic support under modern war conditions and have achieved considerable success in logistic training and scientific research. The proportion of logistic cadres who have received training in academies and schools has increased. A large number of logistic cadres, who are revolutionized, younger, well-educated and professionally competent, are growing up. In the past 3 years and more, the army's logistic services have won 910 class four or better awards for achievements in preparedness against war, scientific research and technical innovations. Rather important results have also been achieved in logistic research.

Logistic cadres at various levels have gone to the companies and grassroots units to strengthen logistic work at the grassroots level. Their work style has markedly changed and the level of management has been greatly improved.

The whole army has firmly implemented the party Central Committee's principle on readjusting the national economy and the Military Commission's instruction on strictly practicing economy. All PLA units have proceeded from the overall interest, consciously showed understanding of and willingness to share the difficulties of the state, acted on the principle of getting more things done with less money, carried forward the tradition of hard struggle and plain living, strived to increase income and decrease expenditure, strengthened management and ensured fulfillment of the army's combat, training, construction and other tasks.

In accordance with the principle that national defense construction should keep pace with the nation's economic construction and making the best use of limited funds, all units have done their work strictly in order of importance and urgency and have reasonably planned and used their financial and material resources, thereby ensuring the smooth progress of the key projects in preparation against war.

The whole army has also appropriated money for speeding up barrack construction, solving the practical problems of army units, readjusting meal allowances, raising cadres' wages, increasing fighters' subsidies and so on, thereby improving the army units' living standards.

All army units have displayed the Nanniwan spirit and tried their best to make a success of army-peasant and army-worker production. In this way the army units have not only tempered themselves and ensured an adequate supply of necessities, but have also rendered support for national construction and lessened the people's burdens.

From 1979 to 1981 factories in the form of enterprises in the whole army registered 7,808 million yuan and 1,044 million yuan, respectively, in terms of industrial output value and profits. In agricultural and sideline production, the output of grain and soybean was 4,453 million jin; edible oil, 179 million jin; meat, 356 million jin; and vegetables, 5,302 million jin. In those 3 years, the whole army conserved, according to standarized measures, 392,100 dun of oil, 786,500 dun of coal and 137 million kilowatts of electricity.

With the implementation of the principle of national economic readjustment, the steady growth of China's national economy and the rising standards of scientific research in national defense and of the defense industry, the PLA has considerably improved its weapons and armament and has constantly raised its level of modernization. It has not only constantly improved the conventional weapons, but has also developed China-made self-defensive missiles, rockets and nuclear weapons. The Chinese Government has repeatedly announced that under no circumstances will China be the first to use nuclear weapons. However, at a time when the superpowers are frantically engaged in a nuclear arms race with a devious design to fight a nuclear war, we cannot but become prepared, develop space technology and manufacture our own self-defensive weapons.

In May 1980 China achieved complete success in launching its first carrier rocket to the destined area in the Pacific Ocean. This was another new and important achievement for China in the most advanced branches of national defense science and technology following successes in the repeated tests of atomic and nitrogen bombs, nuclear missiles and in the launching and recovery of satellites. In September 1981 China successfully launched a group of three spacephysics experiment satellites with a single carrier rocket for the first time in its history.

The launching of a carrier rocket to the Pacific Ocean and the launching of a single carrier rocket with three satellites signified the new standard achieved by China in carrier rocket technology. This is of tremendous significance for the development of science and technology and the speedy accomplishment of the four modernizations in China.

Bearing in mind the heavy duty entrusted by the party and the people, scientists, technicians, cadres, fighters and workers on the national defense science and technology and the defense industry fronts have worked hard day and night without receiving any publicity and have rendered meritorious service to and won honor for the motherland and the people.

It can be expected that following the progress of China's socialist modernization program, the PLA's conventional and sophisticated weapons will be greatly improved and the degree of modernization will be further raised. Combining their high political awareness with the advanced weapons, the broad masses of commanders and fighters will be like tigers that have grown wings. They will be even more confident in winning victories in their future war against aggression.

4. The PLA has strengthened the unity between the army and the government and between the army and the people.

During the new historical period, the PLA has carried forward and brought into full play the glorious tradition of supporting the government and cherishing the people, wholeheartedly worked for the interests of the people, enthusiastically participated in and supported the socialist construction of the motherland and further strengthened the great unity between the army and the government and between the army and the people. The People's Army has maintained close relations with the masses and the people's government like flesh and blood and fish and water. The army has strictly observed mass discipline, respected the people's government, firmly implemented the laws and decrees of the state and the government, and cadred for and protected the interests of the state and the people.

While fulfilling its own tasks, the army has always done its best to spare manpower and material resources to carry out public welfare work for the people. The PLA units stationed in the countryside have adopted all kinds of measures to help communes and production brigades revitalize the collective economy, develop agricultural production, and perform, in a planned manner, good deeds which directly benefit the people. The PLA stationed in cities have also adopted various measures to help some industrial and mining enterprises overcome their production difficulties, assisted railway stations, ports and warehouses in transporting supplies and in loading and unloading, and joined the people in improving environmental sanitation and maintaining social order. The PLA units stationed in pastoral and fishing zones have regularly dispatched cadres and fighters to help various localities build grasslands and breeding grounds for livestock and fish in order to ensure the rapid growth of livestock and fish breeding. Many units have also dispatched instructors to help nearby schools educate students in revolutionary traditions and strengthen ideological and political work among the students. While performing many good deeds, various PLA units have also organized many service teams to take care of the infirmed, old persons in those households enjoying the five guarantees, as well as the sick and disabled military dependents and family members of revolutionary martyrs so that they can feel the warmth of the party.

During 1981 the whole army contributed 21 million working days in support of local industrial and agricultural production. It dispatched 46,700 medical teams to treat civilian individuals on 147 million occasions. Since 1979 the armymen have planted 157 million trees around their barracks, grown 208,700 mu of forests and cultivated 71,400 mu of saplings.

When the people suffered from natural disasters such as floods, earthquakes, floods, typhoons and snow storms, the PLA commanders and fighters have always gone all out to combat the natural disasters, carry out relief work, save state supplies and protect the people's lives and properties. They also helped the masses overcome their difficulties and those in disaster-stricken areas restore production and rebuild their homeland. For the past 3 years, the army provided various localities with 1.01 million sets of bedding and 4.5 million jin of grain crops to areas stricken by natural disasters.

Serious floods hit Sichuan, Liaoning, Qinghai, Gansu, Ningxia and Nei Monggol in 1981. The PLA dispatched 926,300 men to combat the natural disaster and rushed to deal with the emergency. It mobilized aircraft, vessels and motor vehicles, saving 117,290 people. The people praised the PLA fighters as the most reliable people saying that wherever there is danger, there will always be PLA armymen.

The leading comrades of the Sichuan Provincial CPC Committee have set a high value on the contributions made by the PLA commanders and fighters to combating natural disasters and doing relief work. Every battle in the struggle to combat natural disasters and carry out relief work is fought with armymen sharing the hard work. Every victory won in this struggle represents an achievement by the PLA fighters. The facts in the struggle to combat floods and do relief work have once again proven that the Chinese People's Liberation Army is not only the ironclad Great Wall in safeguarding the great motherland, but also a shock brigade and a vital force in socialist construction.

To achieve the magnificent goal of turning China into a powerful modernized socialist nation is the joint target of the armymen and people throughout the country. To join the people in opening a new vista for the development of the four modernization program is an important assignment given the army by the party Central Committee for the new historical period. Commanders and fighters of the PLA technical forces such as the Railway Corps and the Capital Construction Engineering Corps have directly participated in the building and maintenance of some large mining, railway, bridge, oil field and power station facilities. Units of the PLA Railway Corps have always worked in high mountains and dense forests, in barren and remote areas and in deserts throughout the year to build roads and bridges for the motherland. For the past 28 years, they have completed more than 13,000 kilometers of railways -- equivalent to one-third of the total length of new railways built since the nationwide liberation. During the past 3 years, they have finished the first stage of the Qinghai-Xizang railway and completed and repaired the south Xinjiang railway, the (Tongho) railway and the (Tashi) railway, totaling 1,141 kilometers and making fresh contributions to smoothly transporting iron and steel to all parts of the country.

The broad masses of cadres and fighters in the Capital Construction Engineering Corps have worked hard on all capital construction sites in the motherland, suffering untold hardships and scoring tremendous achievements. The PLA units in charge of construction and equipment installation have completed 23 large, medium-sized and small construction and installation projects including the installation of the No 1 power generator of the Panjiakou Reservoir and the completion of the 1.7 meter rolling mill project of the Benxi Iron and Steel Company, the Fangshuping large colliery in Shaanxi, the Hubei chemical works and the Nanjing alkyl-benzene plant. They have built and installed power generating, steel rolling, coal extracting and dressing, water conservancy, iron mining and dressing facilities for the chemical and military industries. The total labor done by these PLA units is worth of 3.3 billion yuan. They have also repaired and built 7 bridges and 12.25 kilometers of underground railways in Beijing, and completed more than 20 buildings for teaching and scientific research at universities and colleges in the capital with a total floor space of 350,000 square meters. They have built living quarters for civilians in over ten cities including Beijing, Tianjin, Nanjing and Tangshan. People in 60,000 households have jubilantly moved into their new homes.

The commanders and fighters of a certain PLA unit have overcome difficulties from the lack of oxygen in the plateau and the stormy weather. They have built the new Tianshan highway and improved the Sichuan-Xizang and Qinghai-Xizang highways, totaling 691 kilometers.

Crossing mountains and rivers and enduring and overcoming the hardships of arduous fieldwork, the geological prospecting corps has completed a survey on 88,000 square kilometers of land and has also verified a number of gold, silver and uranium mines as well as underground water resources.

In accordance with the needs of national defense construction and the unified plan of the CPC Central Committee's Military Commission, the PLA Engineering Corps has successfully completed the construction of national defense projects.

While guaranteeing the availability of the essential funds for all kinds of military work, the whole army has been enthusiastic in subscribing to treasury bonds in support of national construction. Now, the whole army has subscribed to 339 million yuan worth of treasury bonds, exceeding the target set by the state. Since 1979 the whole army has delivered and sold 649 million jin of grain to the state.

"The Nanchang uprising gave birth to the new army,
"Workers and peasants rejoice to have their own regular army,
"If the revolutionary banner is firmly in our grasp,
"The ultimate victory is sure to belong to the people."

As was depicted by the esteemed and beloved Commander in Chief Zhu De in his verse above, our army has scored all its victories under the guidance of the brilliant banners of Marxism-Leninism-Mao Zedong Thought. The honor should go to the great party and the great people.

Looking back at the course we have traversed since the 3d plenary session of the 11th Central Committee, we are full of pride and enthusiasm. Looking into the future, we are filled with greater confidence. The glorious and time-tested Chinese PLA, always mindful of the heavy tasks entrusted by the party and the state, will forever stand closely by the Chinese people and wage an unremitting struggle and press ahead triumphantly to defend the nation's security, realize the reunification of the motherland, safeguard world peace and reach the grand goal of building a powerful, socialist state with highly-developed material and spiritual civilization.

AFP REPORTS JIANG QING NOT TO BE EXECUTED

OW310545 Hong Kong AFP in English 0520 GMT 31 Aug 82

[Text] Beijing, Aug. 31 (AFP) -- Mao Zedong's widow Jiang Qing, condemned to death two years ago for trying to seize power during the Cultural Revolution, will likely not be executed, Communist Party Chairman Hu Yaobang indicated here today.

Jiang Qing, 68, was given a two-year suspended death sentence on January 25, 1981, following the spectacular trial of the so-called gang of four leaders of the Cultural Revolution of 1966-76.

During wideranging conversations here with French journalists, Mr Hu indicated that Jiang Qing's case would be examined by a court, adding: "But I think this court will take account of the circumstances and reduce her sentence."

Jiang Qing, a former starlet of the Shanghai cinema in the 1930's, was one of the foremost figures in China during the turbulent Cultural Revolution years.

At the end of the drama-packed two-month trial of the gang of four, she was handcuffed when the verdict was announced and dragged out of the courtroom, shouting Red Guard slogans.

Under Chinese criminal law, a person sentenced to a suspended death penalty can escape execution through good behavior and repentance.

However Chairman Hu said Mao's widow had persisted in her antagonism to the post-Maoist regime in China.

"Jiang Qing lives well in her prison, but she persists in behaving as an ideological and political enemy of our people," he said.

Today's statements by the party's leader confirmed speculation by observers here that the current regime would not be able to go ahead with the execution of the widow of the founder of Communist China.

Executions in China are normally by a bullet in the neck.

Jiang Qing was condemned by a special court set up to try the ten disgraced leaders of the Cultural Revolution for "counterrevolutionary crimes."

She was charged with usurping power as chief of the "gang of four" leftist leaders who surrounded Mao in the last years of his life, and with ordering mass persecutions while she was in power.

Mr Hu was questioned only about the case of Jiang Qing, although the gang's ideologue, Zhang Chunqiao, 64, was also given a similar sentence.

The other two members, Wang Hongwen, 46, and Yao Wenyuan, 50, were jailed for life and 20 years respectively.

The special court also imposed heavy jail sentences on five generals, although one, Wu Faxian, has since left prison for health reasons.

Jiang Qing was arrested barely a month after the death of the "great helmsman," in September 1976. The arrest of the gang of four marked the end of the Cultural Revolution which was launched in 1966 by Mao to recover the power that was slipping away from him.

Mr Hu refused to give any further details on the commutation of Jiang's sentence.

The probable reprieve for Jiang comes as the communist government is preparing for the 12th congress, which opens here tomorrow, with the accent heavily on the need to unite China.

But at the same time, the run up to the congress has been marked by a vast purge of nonrepented supporters of the Cultural Revolution.

Jiang Qing is probably serving out her sentence in the Qincheng prison to the north of the capital near the tombs of the Ming Dynasty. The prison has housed many disgraced leaders ordered jailed by the communist regime.

GONGREN RIBAO ON REALIZATION OF COMMUNISM

HK310353 Beijing GONGREN RIBAO in Chinese 23 Aug 82 p 4

[Article by Wen Xueliang [5113 1331 5328]: "Communism Is Attainable"]

[Text] Whenever communism is now mentioned, some people will immediately say: "Communism is something in the far-distant future, as if distant water cannot quench the present thirst." This is a wrong saying.

It is true that as a social system, the realization of communism is an undertaking that is still far from us; it requires the painstaking efforts of many generations. However, communism is also very realistic, not "within sight but beyond reach." Our socialist society today is a lower stage of a communist society. Today's building of socialist modernization is regarded as laying a solid foundation for the fine edifice of communism. Along the long journey toward communism are many milestones. We draw ourselves nearer to communism whenever we travel a distance and realize a concrete goal, and we also bring to the people huge practical benefits. For instance, the victory of the new democratic revolution in our country led the laboring people to successfully rid themselves of exploitation and oppression of the three big mountains and become masters of the country. The development of the socialist construction has increased production forces and improved the people's livelihood. Moreover, the current drive of building the four modernizations is bringing to us more and more benefits which are clear to all. In this sense, the "water" of communism is not a distant thing and can slake "present thirst." Along the journey of struggling for the realization of communism there are, indeed, many milestones. Probably not all of us can attain the goal. Nor can we enjoy the huge benefits which a communist society will bring to people. But will we regret this? We can do our small part to help build the communist edifice and to benefit our future generations just as one saying says: "One generation plants the trees under whose cool shade another generation rests." Without the hard struggles and sacrifices of the elder generation of revolutionaries, we would still be moaning and groaning under the oppression of imperialists, landlords and capitalists.

It is thus clear that we are now just enjoying the cool shade of the trees which our elder generations planted, but today we should not "enjoy the cool shade" without "planting trees" for future generations. If we make no effort to safeguard the motherland and build the four modernizations, the most bright, magnificent communist society will not evolve. The proletarian revolutionary cause should be progressively carried on by generation after generation acting as a link between the past and the future.

In a letter written to his younger brother on the battlefront in the Korean War, combat hero Huang Jiguang said with encouragement: "You have a brother, now 21. He might die before he can do more for his motherland. He will not regret that he cannot enjoy the happy life of a communist society. But he is rather disturbed about whether he could do more than he can in building the motherland." What noble and lofty thinking: All our comrades should have such a great breadth of vision. They should rid themselves of the idea of only "enjoying cool shade" without "planting trees" for others, and should foster the noble idea of being concerned about the affairs of state above all others, and enjoying comfort above all others. And they should work with perseverance for the realization of communism all their life.

We are still beset with difficulties on the road toward communism. It is also impossible to quench all of "the present thirst" at one time. We must be aware that since the party's third plenary session the state has made immense efforts to improve the people's standard of living by spending more than 140 billion yuan, employing 260 million people and providing hundreds of thousands of people with new houses. The state has indeed done everything in its power to "slake the present thirst." However, when we are "feeling thirsty," we should not wait for water. We should make full allowances for the difficulties facing our country. We should by no means draw a wrong conclusion that communism is somewhat like "distant water which cannot quench the present thirst," only because some immediate difficulties in our livelihood have not yet been surmounted.

The ideal for communism is the most glorious one in the history of mankind. Communist society is the most magnificent, reasonable and progressive society. Communism must be attained, and unquestionably can be attained. The communist movement is continuously achieving new victory one after another in practice. Any pessimistic and disappointed feelings are not to be tolerated.

DISCIPLINE INSPECTION COMMISSION HOUSING NOTICE

[Text] Beijing, 28 Aug (XINHUA) -- The Discipline Inspection Commission of the CPC Central Committee recently circulated a notice: "Resolutely Correct the Unhealthy Trend in the Distribution of Residential Quarters." It emphatically pointed out: To correct the unhealthy trend in the distribution of residential quarters is an important aspect in maintaining party discipline and rectifying party style. The discipline inspection commissions at all levels must conscientiously examine and handle the major problems in this connection.

The notice said: We have received letters from people in some provinces and municipalities which showed that in doing the work of distributing living quarters -- an issue involving the immediate interests of the masses, many units often act solely on the basis of written instructions from the leaders who mention persons by name for housing assignments. They have adopted methods of assigning houses on a crash basis and issuing individual notices giving preferential treatment to their relatives, friends and people with whom they have maintained under-the-table relationships to make illegitimate deals. Some of the leading cadres try one thousand and one ways to ask for more and better houses for their sons and daughters as well as relatives, although they themselves already occupy fairly spacious quarters. In the distribution of residential quarters, some of the cadres in charge of housing assignments employ trickery, deceive their superiors and delude their subordinates, make use of their authority to seek private gains or even resort to extortion.

These ugly practices which have completely ignored the interests of the party and utilized one's official position and authority to seek private gains are not permitted by party and government discipline and even the national law. They run counter to the qualities of the commune party members and the CPC party style.

The notice pointed out: The reasonable distribution of living quarters is not only an important task in daily life but also a major issue which affects the immediate interests of the masses. Therefore, it is necessary to maintain and carry forward the party's fine traditions and work style, persistently do things according to the "guiding principles for innerparty political life," and resolutely correct the unhealthy trends and practices in violation of law and discipline carried out by some party members and cadres in making housing assignments.

The notice called for efforts to carry out the following tasks:

1. Cadres in charge of housing assignments must strictly abide by the policy, rules and regulations on assigning living quarters, stick to the principled stand and handle all cases impartially. They are not allowed to utilize their official positions and authority to carry out fraudulent practices for the benefit of their relatives and friends or to ask for gifts or accept bribes. Offenders will be strictly handled.

2. It is absolutely impermissible to divide, or to divide in a disguised form, living quarters among the leading cadres or a few people. Standards for the assignment of living quarters to the leading cadres at all levels must be strictly maintained according to the related rules and regulations of the central authorities and the State Council. Issues concerning living quarters for their sons and daughters who are working should be solved by the units where they work. The leading cadres must not interfere. As for those who have utilized their positions and authority to carry out unhealthy practices in assigning living quarters, it is necessary to pin down their responsibilities. Disciplinary actions must be taken by the party or the government against any one who uses his power in making housing assignments to carry out practices which violate discipline and law. Those who are involved in extremely serious cases should be expelled from the party.

3. In making housing assignments, it is essential to follow the mass line. In handling all applications for housing, it is necessary to meticulously conduct investigation and study each case under the unified leadership of the party committee or administrative department, and then work out a reasonable principle and plan for housing distribution. Such a principle and plan should be made public to the masses for extensive discussion, opinions solicited from the masses and strenuous efforts made to reasonably assign living quarters.

4. The departments of leadership at all levels must show concern for the living conditions of the masses. Particularly, they must regularly examine the situation in making workers' and staff housing assignments in their units, summarize their experience and commend good people and good deeds. Whenever unhealthy practices are found, they must be seriously handled according to the guidelines laid down by this notice.

RENMIN RIBAO URGES OPENING RURAL MARKET

[Editorial: "Open Up the Vast Rural Market"]

[Text] China's rural areas, with 800 million peasants, are an enormous market. It is an extremely important task for governments and economic departments at all levels to further open up this extensive market and supply more and better manufactured goods to the rural areas in order to meet the growing needs of the peasants.

Since the CPC Central Committee and the State Council made the strategic decision of putting the production of consumer goods in an important position, the production of consumer goods in our country has developed very rapidly. Some commodities which were in short supply in the past can now be bought easily. Some commodities which could be easily marketed in the past are now unsalable. Some commodities whose patterns and varieties are market-oriented and whose quality is good, especially name-brand commodities, are still in short supply. This situation is even more prominent in the rural market.

The fundamental question in supplying the rural areas with more and better marketable manufactured goods is that industrial and commercial departments should organize production and supply according to the needs of the peasants. The reason why some commodities do not meet the needs of the rural areas is mainly because industrial and commercial enterprises do not carry out deep and careful investigations and do not have a clear understanding about the peasants' demands and consumption level. As soon as they heard that many peasants had become well off, they blindly produced and supplied high- and medium-grade commodities. Consequently, their goods were not marketable and overstocking occurred. We must go deep into the rural market and make efforts to carry out concrete analysis of rural purchasing power and its trend of changes and development. Our country is big and our national conditions are complicated. In considering market supply, we must study the question of coordination between the scale of the productive forces with that of the market and the scale of production must be based on the scale of market. Generally speaking, the peasants at present are still not well off and only a small number of relatively well-off peasants can afford to buy high- and medium-grade commodities. Although the peasants' income has increased by a big margin in the past 2 or 3 years, they first have to spend their money on building new houses and purchasing means of production. In buying daily-use consumer goods, they mainly buy those which are economical and practical, lasting and cheap. They do not like products which are poor in quality and whose patterns and models are outdated. We must strive to produce and supply commodities welcomed by the peasants. This is the most important thing in opening up the rural market.

The aim of socialist production is to better meet the needs of the people. At present, some enterprises one-sidedly seek output value and profits. They are only interested in high- and medium-grade commodities which are mainly needed in cities, and are not willing to produce cheap and good commodities, particularly small daily-use commodities, which are needed by the rural areas. As a matter of fact, if we orient our production to the rural market and produce cheap and good commodities, we can still increase our income because our products will be more salable although the profit from each of them may be less. Of course, we must also analyze changes in profits and losses of our products, study price parities between goods of different grades and readjust the relation between output value and profits so that our enterprises may obtain rational profits.

Recently, the State Council made the "decision on widening the commodities circulation channels between cities and rural areas and increasing the supply of manufactured goods to rural areas." This is an important strategic decision for making urban and rural markets prosperous. Commercial departments must enthusiastically organize wholesale and retail enterprises at all levels in carrying out activities to promote sales to the 800 million peasants in various forms. This year, there are relatively sufficient sources of commodities. In the first half of this year, commercial goods in stock continued to increase and some commodities were even overstocked. So long as we regulate the existing commodities and actively promote their sale, we will have much business.

Our country has a vast territory. The economic level of the peasants and herdsmen in different places vary greatly and their customs and habits are not the same. They have different tastes for the varieties, patterns and styles of manufactured goods. Many commodities are overstocked in one place but are in short supply in another. Some of them are not needed in cities but are welcomed in rural areas. The reason why many manufactured goods are not sent in good time to the peasants is mainly because circulation is not satisfactory. In order to improve the circulation of commodities, we must solve the following problems: Commercial enterprises must first straighten out their operation ideology and overcome the idea of working extremely hard on business which will bring about many profits, working not so hard on business which will bring about less profits and not working at all on business which will not bring about any profits. At present, small commodities such as matches, kerosene, needles and threads are often in short supply in the rural areas. This involves insufficient production as well as poor circulation of commodities. Since small commodities concern the national economy and the people's livelihood, commercial departments must earnestly do a good job in handling them. We must also act in accordance with state policies and gradually open up the market of small commodities. Their prices should appropriately float according to market supply and demand. This will not affect the people's livelihood much, but will be conducive to arousing the enthusiasm of commercial and industrial enterprises in producing and managing small commodities. State-run commerce must overcome the idea of monopolizing management and must adhere to the principle of having diversified economic components and various circulation channels. This will be conducive to increasing the supply of manufactured goods to the rural areas. We must also give full play to the role of purchasing and marketing agencies of purchasing and marketing cooperatives in production brigades and production teams. In Shandong's Zhucheng County, there were formerly over 800 purchasing and marketing agency shops. On a voluntary basis, they have gradually changed into brigade-run shops which operate independently and assume sole responsibility for their profits and losses. They are brisk at buying and selling and have played an important role in developing the rural commodity economy and providing conveniences to commune members.

At present, another measure to increase the supply of manufactured goods to rural areas is to increase sales through sales exhibitions, country fairs, mobile sellers, and so on. In regard to products, which according to policies can be sold by industrial enterprises themselves, industrial enterprises can directly send more of these products to the peasants as quickly as possible through sales exhibitions, meetings for trial sales and placing orders and by means of covered carts. At the recent national meeting to exhibit samples and to place orders held by the Light Industry Ministry in order to promote sales of light industrial products to rural areas, the transaction volume totaled more than 1 billion yuan. Many products which had been overstocked in cities, such as chemical fiber garments, were in great demand at the meeting.

In organizing goods to be sent to rural areas, industrial and commercial departments must closely coordinate and cooperate with each other and overcome selfish departmentalism. Socialist industrial and commercial enterprises depend on each other and should support each other. Value created in the process of production by industrial enterprises is materialized in the process of circulation. Whether or not the management of commercial enterprises is good directly affects plans for production, raw materials supply and sales of products of industrial enterprises. On the other hand, if industrial production is not developed, commerce will then become water without a source. Therefore, industry and commerce must work hand in hand in making new contributions to opening up the rural market.

RENMIN RIBAO DISCUSSES GUIDELINES FOR WRITERS

[Article by Hu Cai [5170 6846] "On Several Problems of Revolutionary Realism"]

[Text] Since smashing the "gang of four," there have emerged in the literary and art fields some works exposing the dark side of life, works labeled as "exposure literature" or "scar literature." Some of the works were well written and have had a positive impact. These works exposed the serious disasters and their immeasurable calamitous influence which Lin Biao, Jiang Qing and their like as well as their ultraleftist line have brought to our party, our country and the people. Generally speaking, the effect and impact of these works coincide with the spirit of our party's resolution to thoroughly expose and criticize Lin Biao and the "gang of four," to clear away their poisonous influence and to bring order out of chaos. However, during a certain period, some people put forth a theory which deserves our study. This theory held that the emergence of the "exposure literature" and the "scar literature" shows that the literature of critical realism has great vitality and that it is the right time to reevaluate the position of critical realism in current literary creation. Some holding this view went a step further to reveal that there must be different assignments to realism according to different subjects. It is the task of critical realism. I hold that this view is at least a misunderstanding of revolutionary realism. With Marxism-Leninism as its guiding thought and theoretical basis, revolutionary realism is a principal creative method of the socialist literature of the proletariat. It is a principal creative method, but not the only method. Practices of creation have shown that revolutionary realism, as a creative method, accords more reasonably with the creative practice of moving from life to art and is more scientific. On the issue of reflecting real life and depicting a certain ideal strength coherent with life itself, revolutionary realism shows its great vitality. As a principal creative method of socialist literature, revolutionary realism does not in the whole course from life to art, confine its own function to one side only, but functions on two sides concerning the issue of extolling and exposing. This is apparent if an investigation is conducted into the history of its development since its appearance and its practical effect on literary creation. It extols as well as exposes things. What it extols is the healthy, revolutionary and positive things in our life; and what it exposes and criticizes is the unhealthy, reactionary and negative things in life. If revolutionary realism does not act in this way, but evades contradictions and struggles in the face of contradiction, the dark side and the reactionary and negative things, and fails to expose and criticize them, its existence will then become meaningless.

The two functions of extolling as well as exposing and criticizing things as performed by critical realism are associated with the two factors and two contradictory and conflicting strengths which exist in real life. The two factors and two strengths exist as well as fight at different times, in different places, under different conditions and in different forms of expression. During the period of 10-year chaos, on the one hand, Lin Biao, Jiang Qing and the reactionary forces ran wild and threw their weight around, thinking themselves overbearing; on the other, the gigantic revolutionary forces represented by the veteran proletarian revolutionaries such as Comrade Zhou Enlai and including the vast number of revolutionary cadres and masses and those who were loyal to the people, to the party and to the socialist cause, waged various kinds of struggles against Lin Biao, Jiang Qing and their like. The revolutionary spirit of dedication revealed by Comrade Zhang Zhixing and the heroes of the Tien Men Square incident shows that the broad masses of the people know clearly how to distinguish right from wrong on the prime issue of revolution or counterrevolution. It was due to this powerful revolutionary foundation and the mass foundation, plus the people's hatred for the "gang of four" for their numerous evil deeds, that the people suddenly settled with these conspirators in response to the order issued by the party's Central Committee.

This is the victory of the people, the victory of truth and justice over falsehood and evil, and of course the victory of our party. In the chaos of the 10 years and in the struggle to smash the "gang of four," our party, our country and the people suffered, fought and acclaimed triumph together. When saying that we must see the healthy, revolutionary and positive things in life, it means that we must see the strength of the people, who are the powerful backing and mainstay of the party. It is precisely on this point that of all the works exposing the dark side of life which have emerged after the smashing of the "gang of four," some were well written and of positive significance as they were based on life. However, we cannot neglect that there is too much depiction of tragic and miserable experiences as well as the development of the event itself in some works, and less observance and reflection of the positive side of life and the dauntless fighting spirit embodied by the people and the cadres. As a result, some works are downcast and gloomy in ideology. They cannot inspire the people and offer better future prospects, but make the people more puzzled and distressed and destroy their confidence in life. We cannot merely explain some people's utterance of "broken heart" and behavior of "seeing through the vanity of the world" as a consequence of the unhealthy ideology of some literary and artistic works. Revolutionary literary works, however, must play a positive role in pushing forward and guiding the readers and helping some people extricate themselves from the ideological predicament of "seeing through the vanity of the world." It is precisely with this aim that we hold the view of paying attention to the social effect of the works.

In the complicated real life, whether one can see the positive and healthy things or the strength of the broad masses is closely associated with one's position, viewpoint, ideology, feelings and world outlook. A thought often comes to my mind involving why Li Zhizheng and the vigorous peasants' movement led by him would appear under the rule of the feudal emperor. When the first national congress of the CPC was held, there were only 12 delegates. Even under such difficult circumstances, the CPC was bold enough, with the broad mind of a great revolutionary and with great foresight, to put forward: liberate the old China, overthrow the big mountains on the people's head and place the task of realizing socialism right on the shoulders of the newly born Chinese Communists. To make a review of how the party has led the Chinese people in taking a tortuous and arduous road of pioneering a great cause, we will certainly realize how difficult it was to fight for the establishment of today's socialist motherland. We must always cherish the memory of those revolutionaries of the old generation, martyrs and persons with lofty ideals who have made a great contribution to the Chinese revolution and construction , and learn from their noble integrity. We must never lag far behind, be backward and give ourselves up as hopeless on the road of revolution. Neither shall we, due to the mistakes made by our party and the occurrence of the Lin Biao and Jiang Qing counterrevolutionary cliques in the 10 years of "Cultural Revolution," negate the many achievements and the progress we have made in the past 30 years, since the founding of the PRC, without making any distinctions and neglect the remarkable reform and great progress the party has made since the 3d plenary session of the party's 11th national congress, uttering that we cannot accomplish anything as if the Communist Party and socialism are no good, and saying that the ideas and deed of worshipping foreign countries are more popular, as if it is not humiliating to fawn on the bourgeoisie and as if we are living a more miserable life in new China than in old China and old society. Are such ideological feelings, stands, viewpoints, and methods correct or not? Do they conform with reality, and are they justified? A comparison between these and those of the revolutionary pioneers, martyrs and people with lofty ideals will certainly yield some fresh revelation.

Let us return to the discussion of the problem of realism. We would like to put forward the argument that it is impossible for one to write a genuine work of revolutionary realism if he fails to see the strength of the masses, the revolutionary future and the orientation of development in life. It seems like a problem of creative method, but it is actually something of a writer's or an artist's attitude toward life and something of his ideological feelings and world outlook. Without resolving this basic problem, we can accomplish nothing by just paying attention to the problem of creative method. If we act in accordance with some people's method of different assignments by appointing the task of extolling the bright side to revolutionary realism and exposing the dark side to critical realism, we can hardly imagine that a writer would extol the bright side if he fails to see any positive, healthy and revolutionary things in practical life due to the limitation of his own world outlook. Conversely, if a writer is filled with downcast, unhealthy and passive ideological feelings and lacks victorious confidence and revolutionary fighting passion for life, how can he fulfill the task of exposing the dark side of life? To revolutionary writers and artists, to those genuine writers and artists of revolutionary realism, both exposing the dark sides and extolling the bright side are the fights which should be carried out with the ideological feeling of Communist fighters. If we lack communist ideology and feeling, how can we fulfill the tasks of genuinely exposing the dark side of our life, getting rid of the running sores in our revolutionary ranks and thoroughly eliminating the poisonous influence spread by Lin Biao, Jiang Qing and their like?

RENMIN RIBAO CONTINUES SHIDAI DI BAOGAO DEBATE

["Literary and Art Trends column" by Wen Yi [5113 0001]: "Some Newspapers and Magazines Continue Publishing Articles in a Debate on SHIDAI DI BAOGAO's 'Explanations'"]

[Text] Since the publication of the "Explanations" in the No 2, 1982, issue of SHIDAI DI BAOGAO, some newspapers and magazines in Shanghai, Beijing, Anhui, Liaoning, Hunan and other provinces and municipalities have kept publishing articles and excerpts of forum speeches in a debate on certain viewpoints represented by the "Explanations."

In an article entitled "Questions About a Viewpoint" (WENHUI BAO, 23 April 1982), Di Ying pointed out: Speaking of the 16 years since the "Great Cultural Revolution" is a strange and harmful way of putting things. The 10 years of the "Great Cultural Revolution" and the 6 years since the smashing of the "gang of four" were lumped together. This way of putting things "has unconsciously negated the fact that the 3rd Plenary Session of the 11th CPC Central Committee represented a great turning point in the history of the party since the founding of the PRC." "Since the smashing of the 'gang of four' and especially since the 3rd Plenary Session of the 11th CPC Central Committee, there has all along been a struggle between two fronts in literature and art. If there has been an emphasis, it was that the first part of the period was chiefly devoted to turning chaos into order, eliminating the remnants of ultraleftist poison and criticizing the 'two whatevers' viewpoint. In the past 2 years, attention has been directed toward erroneous ideas that run counter to the four basic principles. While the 'left' is being continously criticized, the emphasis has been on the struggle against bourgeois liberalization. If it is considered that since the smashing of the 'gang of four,' there has existed only the tendency toward bourgeois liberalization in literary and art circles, with the 'leftist' influence seemingly no longer in existence, then this is not in line with actual conditions."

The No 6, 1982, issue of ANHUI WENXUE carried "Views Opposing the Wording of the '16 Years' -- Excerpts of Speeches at a Forum Called by the Editorial Department." In their speeches, some comrades said: Certain trends toward bourgeois liberalization that exist today are partial and individual problems. They are neither universal nor fully representative of literary and art circles. Still less are they guiding thoughts for literature and art. It is both proper and necessary to point out and solemnly criticize these phenomena in a timely way. But in no way can we regard partial and individual literary and art phenomena as the general trend of the historical period. Still less can we treat them as guiding thoughts and equate them with Lin Biao's and Jiang Qing's counterrevolutionary plot.

The No. 8, 1982, issue of WENYI BAO carried an article by Guan Lin entitled "Distinguish Between Right and Wrong and Find Out the Truth -- a Comment on the Counter-Criticism in the No 7 Issue of SHIDAI DI BAOGAO, " and an accompanying editorial note.

According to the editorial note, the July 1982 issue of SHIDAI DI BAOGAO carried an article by Xue Liang, Fang Hanying and other comrades putting forth views that opposed the report "A Problem of Principle Worth Nothing" by Yu Dong carried in the May issue of WENYI BAO of this year. It was entirely necessary and normal to discuss and debate such a major problem of principle, in order to distinguish between right and wrong. But the article by Xue Liang Fang Han and other comrades studied things in a departure from the essence of the problem. It said: "After the February 1982 issue of SHIDAI DI BAOGAO called for a restudy of the' Talks,' WENYI BAO immediately called a forum to make an attack." It was made to appear that WENYI BAO opposed the study of the "Talks at the Yanan Forum on Literature and Art." The article also said: "Later, a so-called 'report on the situation' was produced somewhere. As soon as this "report" appeared, WENYI BAO cherished it as the apple of its eye and sent it to various areas as a 'circular' on inside information, in order to organize an attack." It even said that WENYI BAO "Wanted to create public opinion and organize an attack branding it." It must be pointed out that such charges were unfounded. We thought that such fabrications as "calling a forum," "a circular," "organizing an attack," and so forth did nothing to clarify the problem. They only served to promote an unhealthy literary style and could not be reconciled to the normal process of debate. We sincerely hoped that such means would not be adopted in the debate. As to the right or wrong, the masses of readers will provide a correct judgment.

In his article, Guan Lin said: 1) An article in the No 7 issue of SHIDAI DI BAOGAO stated, "It's senseless for us to waste time portraying the kind of chaotic situation in literary and art circles in the first part of the period." Another article said, "As far as interference from the 'left' is concerned, things are not so serious as in the 10 years when Lin Biao and Jiang Qing threw their weight around. As far as interference from the right is concerned, things are also not so serious as in the several years following the smashing of the 'gang of four.'" In the past few years, a small number of people have really negated the fundamental principles of Mao Zedong's thinking on literature and art. But this does not represent the guiding ideology for literary and art work. In our literary and art work, there are shortcomings and mistakes of all kinds. But the party's guideline for literary and art work is correct. SHIDAI DI BAOGAO has lumped the problem of guiding ideology in the 10 years of internal disorder with the problems in the past few years. It has associated both periods with unprecedentedly serious or extreme mistakes. It has basically said nothing about the fact that the party's guideline for literary and art work in the past few years has been correct.

1) SHIDAI DI BAOGAO's countercriticism article vigorously tried to describe this debate as one about whether or not to criticize bourgeois liberalization. This is very strange. Since the party Central Committee called a forum on problems on the ideological front, most of the cadres and people in the literary and art circles have supported the party Central Committees criticism and energetically fought trends toward bourgeois liberalization. The problem is: What is bourgeois liberalization and how do we assess the existing trend toward liberalization in the literary and art field? We cannot describe the correction of Comrade Mao Zedong's individual mistakes as bourgeois liberalization. Nor can we treat the whole situation concerning literature and art as one of liberalization. People have criticized the "Explanations" for its negation of the tremendous results of the effort to turn chaos into order since the 3rd Plenary Session of the 11th CPC Central Committee. The situation of turning chaos into order was described as one of distorting and correcting Mao Zedong's thinking on literature and art. This is the main area of disagreement.

3) A debate has revolved around the "Explanations" of SHIDAI DI BAOGAO. This has reflected differences in people's attitudes toward Mao Zedong's thinking on literature and art. Our attitude toward Mao Zedong's thinking on literature and art is that we must first adhere to it and then seek its development. But in recent years, there have also been two wrong attitudes. One is to negate the traditions of revolutionary literature and art and negate the fundamental principles of Mao Zedong's thinking on literature and art on the grounds that "leftist" mistakes have been made in our literary and art work and that Comrade Mao Zedong made mistakes in his later years. Those holding such an attitude even unfairly ascribe all kinds of "leftist" mistakes in the literary and art field to the "Talks." Another attitude is a dogmatist one. Those holding this attitude do not recognize the necessity of developing Mao Zedong's thinking on literature and art in light of new historical conditions and do not recognize that while supporting the fundamental principles of Mao Zedong's thinking on literature and art, we must also correct individual mistakes in Comrade Mao Zedong's talks on literature and art. Since February this year, under the column "Restudy Talks at the Yanan Forum on Literature and Art," SHIDAI DI BAOGAO has published a series of articles. The viewpoints raised in many of these articles are worth studying. For example, an article in its No 6, 1982, issue had much to say about the problem of "literature and art belonging to politics." Comrade Deng Xiaoping pointed out that this slogan does more harm than good. But they think that it is "carrying things too far" to point out that this slogan has an effect more negative than positive. Thus, it can be easily seen that as far as certain major problems are concerned, they have taken a very improper approach and a critical and doubtful attitude of negation toward the party's readjustment of the literary and art policy since the 3rd Plenary Session of the 11th CPC Central Committee.

The No 8, 1982, issue of WENYI BAO also carried an article by Li Helin entitled "I Don't Accept the Explanations by WENYI BAO and WENYI DONGTAI." The article pointed out that the "Explanations" of SHIDAI DI BAOGAO "clearly just mentioned the problem of what happened to the 'Talks.' which were distorted and exploited by the left and opposed by the right 'in the 16 years.' It made a clear distinction between the first 10 years and the latter 6 years. It did not 'lump things together.' Nor did it take the '16 years' as an 'historical period,' by mentioning '16-year period.' Instead, it used the wording 'in the 16 years,'" "the 'Explanations' did not make an overall assessment of literature and art 'in the 16 years.' Still less did it make an overall assessment of achievements in literary and art circles in the 6 latter years. ...It mentioned no other problems than what happened to the 'Talks' both from the 'left' and from the right. Why should this have been interpreted as a negation of achievements and even as something incompatible with the 'resolution'? Is this not 'saying something not to the point'? Moreover, the 'Explanations' just said that 'in the latter 6 years,' 'some people' opposed the 'Talks' and 'fell into the quagmire of bourgeois liberalization.' It did not say that many people did so. This was also in line with the realities in literary and art circles in the past 6 years."

The August issue of SHIDAI DI BAOGAO of this year carried an article under the signed name of Yu Yizu entitled "Why Make Such a Big Fuss?" It made an overall counter-criticism of the article "A Problem of Principle Worth Noting" by Comrade Yu Dong in the 5th issue of WENYI BAO. It had the following subtitles: 1) It Is Really "A Problem of Principle Worth Noting"; 2) Is the Wording "16 Years" Wrong?; 3) What's the Proper Way of Describing the Current Struggle Between the Two Fronts in Literature and Art After All?; 4) Is Ideological Transformation Still Required?; 5) Where Lies the Main Problem? This is really "A Problem of Principle Worth Noting." In the "On Letters From Readers" special column, this issue also carried letters from four readers, which made counter-criticisms of the articles by Yu Dong and Xin Xu in the No 5 and No 6, 1982, issues of WENYI BAO.

ZHU XUEFAN, DENG LIQUN AT PHILATELISTS CONGRESS

[Excerpts] Beijing, 25 Aug (XINHUA) -- The first congress of the All-China Philatelists Federation ceremoniously opened this morning at the Great Hall of the People in Beijing.

This was a grand event in the history of stamp collecting in our country. Attending the congress were 169 representatives and specially invited representatives from the country's 29 provinces, municipalities and autonomous regions (Taiwan representatives being absent for the time being).

Present at the opening ceremony were Zhu Xuefan, vice chairman of the NPC Standing Committee; Deng Liqun, director of the Propaganda Department of the CPC Central Committee; Wang Zigang, standing committee member of the CPPCC National Committee; Wang Chonglun, vice chairman of the All-China Federation of Trade Unions; Liu Weiming, member of the CYL Central Committee Secretariat; Wang Yun, member of the Secretariat of the All-China Women's Federation; responsible persons of departments concerned; and representatives of art and press cricles and of stamp-collecting enthusiasts in the capital.

Cheng Anyu, vice minister of posts and telecommunications, presided over the ceremony. Zhu Xuefan and Wang Zigang, former ministers of posts and telecommunications, and Wen Minsheng, minister of posts and telecommunications, addressed the opening ceremony.

In this speech, Zhu Xuefan said: At this grand meeting, we particularly think of our stamp-collecting friends in Taiwan. In recent years postal workers and philatelists on both sides of the Taiwan Strait have written articles to discuss subjects concerning the history of the postal service and stamp collecting in our country. This is a gratifying beginning. It is really regrettable that Taiwan Province's representatives cannot attend the Chinese philatelists congress of great unity today.

He expressed the hope that stamp-collecting friends in Taiwan will profoundly understand the sincere feelings Liao Chengzhi expressed in his letter to Mr Chiang Ching-kuo, step up correspondence and contacts with people on the mainland, promote the study of the postal service and stamp collecting and contribute to the great cause of reunifying the motherland. He said he was confident the All-China Philatelists Federation will reserve seats for the Taiwan representatives and that the day when stamp-collecting friends throughout the country, including those from Taiwan, happily gather under the same roof will not be far away.

GENG BIAO ATTENDS CAAC SAFETY AWARDS MEETING

[Text] Beijing, 28 Aug (XINHUA) -- The Civil Aviation General Administration [CAAC] held an award meeting today to individually present pennants, certificates of merit, prize cups, medals and money awards to 4 flight safety red banner units, 11 flight safety model workers, 10 advanced units that have ensured flight safety over a protracted period and 166 flight crewmembers for China's civil aviation.

Attending the award meeting were 1,500 people including Geng Biao and Zhang Jingfu, state councillors; Ni Zhifu, president of All-China Federation of Trade Unions; Du Xingyuan, secretary general of the State Council; responsible persons of the departments concerned; and civil aviation workers and staff.

Shen Shichong, director of the CAAC Political Department, presided over the meeting. Geng Biao spoke at the meeting. He reaffirmed the achievements made in maintaining flight safety in China's civil aviation. He hoped that henceforth the CAAC will ensure flight safety and correctly handle the relationships between safety on the one hand and normal flight, transportation and quality in flight service on the other.

Shen Tu, director general of the CAAC, also addressed the meeting. He said: The situation in maintaining flight safety in the field of China's aviation is basically good. Since the inauguration of international flights in 1955, there have been no incidents on any international flights. The CAAC has a fairly good reputation in the world. Its experience in maintaining flight safety in the past 32 years can be summarized in the following five points:

1. Firmly foster the thinking of safety first and place flight safety above everything else;

2. Vigorously strengthen vocational and technical training and enthusiastically help flight crewmembers improve their techniques and enhance their ability to handle particular situations;

3. Cultivate a fine work style in flight and strictly observe the various rules and regulations for civil aviation;

4. Closely coordinate with each other, incessantly improve ground facilities and keep them in good condition;

5. Strengthen measures against highjackings and enforce all types of preventive and emergency measures on a solid basis.

He hoped that the units and individuals that received the awards would remain humble and prudent, guard against arrogance and rashness, progress further, strive to win even greater achievements and create an even better flight safety record.

Sha Jinyu, China's civil aviation model in maintaining flight safety, read a written proposal at the meeting on behalf of all the flight crewmembers attending the award meeting. The written proposal hoped that all CAAC flight crewmembers would work hard with one heart and one mind, unite as one, do a still better job in maintaining flight safety and strive to fulfill all transport tasks.

FUJIAN FAILS TO REACH PRODUCTION TARGET

OW310225 Fuzhou Fujian Provincial Service in Mandarin 1120 GMT 27 Aug 82

[Text] Recently, the Fujian provincial people's government held a provincial industry and transportation work conference in Fuzhou urging staff and workers on the industrial and transportation front in Fujian to brace themselves, think of better ways to ensure satisfactory production in the next 4 months of this year, strive to fulfill this year's production plan and attain the goal of "guaranteeing a 7-percent increase while striving for an 8-percent increase" [increase in irdustrial output value over the previous year] laid down by the provincial CPC committee.

The meeting held that since the beginning of this year the industrial and transportation front in Fujian has conscientiously implemented the provincial CPC committee's demands, namely, guaranteeing a 7-percent increase, striving to achieve an 8-percent increase, maintaining balance in production, stressing efficiency and giving first consideration to quality. Therefore, steady growth has been achieved in industrial production and economic results have improved somewhat. The overall situation has been satisfactory. However, due to an energy shortage, tension in transportation, reduced output of cane sugar, mismanagement and other factors, our province did not fulfill the industrial production plan for the first half of this year and production for July declined. The tasks for the next 4 months will be very tough.

The meeting adequately discussed how to ensure a satisfactory production in the next 4 months and to attain this year's goal of struggle -- guaranteeing a 7-percent increase while striving for an 8-percent increase. The participants maintained that industrial and transport departments throughout the province should earnestly implement the guidelines of the 7th Plenary Session of the 11th CPC Central Committee, mobilize the masses and spark them to new efforts and confidence in overcoming the difficulties. This is the first thing which should be done to ensure success in production in the next 4 months.

Next, it is necessary to find new ways to increase production so that increased production can balance the inadequacies in some weak links. It is necessary to vigorously boost the output of products that have an adequate supply of raw materials, that are marketable and that the factories have the capacity to produce. In this way, activeness in one field can make up for the inactiveness in another field.

The key to attaining this year's goal of guaranteeing a 7-percent increase while striving for an 8-percent increase lies in promoting light industrial production. The provincial people's government has decided to take measures to help light industrial departments in raw material supply so they can increase the output of terlene-cotton fabrics, cigarettes, knitwear and matches.

At the meeting, every locality and department carefully reviewed its own accounts and decided which items to increase production, what targets to fulfill and what measures to use to fulfill these targets for each and every county, municipality, enterprise and product. The meeting emphasized that for the next 4 months' production we should still concentrate on improving economic results, attach primary importance to quality, turn out more designs and varieties, encourage plants to lower the consumption of energy, raw and semifinished materials, ensure safety in production and guarantee increases in production as well as revenues.

The meeting also exchanged experience in consolidating enterprises during the previous stage and studied and laid down plans for enterprise consolidation in the next 4 months.

The situation is very good. However, with the development of the situation, financial and trade work has failed to meet the requirements in some areas. Further efforts must be made to solve the problems.

SHANGHAI PAPER ON EXECUTION OF HIJACKERS

OW310359 Shanghai JIEFANG RIBAO in Chinese 21 Aug 82 p 2

[Article by Luo Ying: "Counterrevolutionaries Must Be Severely Punished According to Law"]

[Excerpts] According to yesterday's newspaper, the five counterrevolutionary criminals, who perpetrated the "25 July" hijacking incident were executed in Shanghai. The broad masses of people clapped and cheered on learning of the doom of these counterrevolutionaries, who had done exceptional harm and whose crimes were particularly deplorable. We did just what we ought to have done, namely, severely, swiftly and mercilessly punish these counterrevolutionaries, who attempted to flee by hijacking an aircraft -- an extremely treacherous method.

The "25 July" counterrevolutionary hijacking conspiracy was finally thoroughly shattered, thanks to the crew members' resourcefulness and courage and the passengers' support and cooperation. This struggle, which has evoked tremendous repercussions at home and abroad, sharply reminds us that, in the new historical period, there are still counterrevolutionaries and the struggle against the enemy is still a serious one.

The five criminals involved in this hijacking incident were young people. At first, they were petty thieves and pickpockets, seeking personal pleasure. Then they began to tune in to the broadcasts of enemy radio stations and were poisoned by their reactionary propaganda. Eventually, they took the counterrevolutionary path of antagonizing socialism and perpetrating the hijacking incident. From this harsh reality, we learn that reactionary forces at home and abroad are locked in a very acute and violent struggle with us to get hold of young people. The enemy conducts "psychological warfare" through his radio stations, uses the decadent ideology and lifestyle of the exploiting class to lure and corrupt our young people, instills reactionary political poison in them and incites them to commit crimes. This deserves special attention. Party and government organizations at all levels, as well as mass organizations, should strengthen political and ideological education and education in the legal system among young people. Meanwhile, it is also necessary to strengthen education against "psychological warfare" by instructing and advising young people to consciously stay away from, refuse credence to and refrain from spreading enemy stations' reactionary broadcasts.

The "25 July" hijacking incident was a life-and-death class struggle. We should be able to draw lessons and learn something from this, so that we will arouse our revolutionary sense of responsibility, heighten our vigilance in the struggle against the enemy and tighten security checkups and preventive measures. In this way, all counterrevolutionaries -- whether they are old, newly emerging, hidden or sent from abroad, and no matter where they practice sabotage and make trouble -- will never escape the people's justicial net and will all be doomed under the harsh sanction of the socialist motherland.

Memorial Hall Opening

[Text] Guangzhou, August 30 (XINHUA) -- A memorial hall for Liao Zhongkai and his wife He Xiangning, both forerunners of the Chinese democratic revolution, opened to the public here today. Attending the ceremony marking the occasion were Wang Zhen, member of the Political Bureau of the Chinese Communist Party Central Committee, Liao Chengzhi, the son of the couple and now vice-chairman of the National People's Congress Standing Committee, and Kang Keqing, vice-chairman of the National Committee of the Chinese People's Political Consultative Conference. They made a special trip here from Beijing.

At the ceremony, Wang Zhen unveiled a horizontal board above the gate of the memorial hall inscribed by Ye Jianying, chairman of the N.P.C. Standing Committee. At the entrance hall stand two busts of the pair. More than 400 photos, material objects are displayed at the hall, exhibiting in a vivid way the life of the two revolutionary veterans.

Addressing the ceremony, Liao Chengzhi rebuked the Taiwan press and some Taiwan public figures for the fabrication that his father Liao Zhongkai, had been killed by the Chinese Communist Party, and that Liao Zhongkai himself was anti-communist.

"This is a sheer fabrication beyond description," he said. The assassination of his father on August 20, 1925, was plotted by Hu Hanmin, Wu Tiecheng and Deng Zeru, all notorious KMT rightists, to name only a few, he declared. And the assassination is detailed in the book "My Reminiscences" written by his mother, He Xiangning. "It is shameless and impudent," he said, "that the Kuomintang in Taiwan should have gone so far as to turn black into white and make unfounded countercharges in the matter."

Liao Chengzhi noted that his attack on the Taiwan press and some Taiwan public figures does not in any way contradict the proposal for the third cooperation between the Kuomintang and the Chinese Communist Party. The former, he said is entirely a matter of historical fact while the latter is a policy of the Chinese Communist Party. As Communists, he said, the Liao family have never thought of revenging themselves on the enemy. What is more, millions and millions of Chinese Communists, workers, peasants and innocent people had been murdered by the Kuomintang reactionaries after the failure of the first and second cooperations between the two parties. Yet the Chinese Communist Party still proposed for the cooperation for the third time and for peaceful negotiation to reunify the motherland. And priority should be given to this matter at present, he said. Personally, he said, "I still sincerely hope that the cooperation for the third time between the Kuomintang and the Chinese Communist Party will be realized and that peaceful negotiation between the two parties for the reunification of the motherland will start soon."

Among the 600 people attending the ceremony were leaders of the N.P.C. Standing Committee, the C.P.P.C.C. National Committee and the Central Committee of the Revolutionary Committee of the Chinese Kuomintang as well as Guangdong Provincial Communist Party and government leaders and the couples friends and relatives both from at home and abroad.

According to a report from Nanjing, a tomb-sweeping ceremony was held there yesterday morning at the tomb of the couple. Liao Zhongkai was killed by the rightists of the Kuomintang in 1925 and He Xiangning died in 1972 in Beijing. Their remains were buried in one tomb in 1972 in Nanjing.

HEBEI HOLDS POLITICAL, LEGAL WORK CONFERENCE

HK310611 Shijiazhuang Hebei Provincial Service in Mandarin 0400 GMT 20 Aug 82

[Text] The provincial conference on political and legal work was recently held in Shijiazhuang, capital of the province. The conference was presided over by provincial CPC committee Secretary Wang Zheng; members of the standing committee of the provincial CPC committee, Wang Dongning and Lu Zhiguo; and deputy secretary of the political and legal commission of the provincial CPC committee, Ge Qi. At the conference, Comrade Wang Dongning presented his opinions on implementing the spirit of the national conference on political and legal work in the province; and Comrade Wang Zheng gave a summation speech.

In analyzing the public order situation in the province since the third plenary session, especially since last year, the conference pointed out that public order had been prominently improved, and many model communes and production brigades with good public order had emerged. However, public security in towns and the countryside actually has not improved and, in some places and in certain aspects, there exist relatively serious problems, and public order is not good enough. In particular, the criminal activities in the economic field are rather serious and have become the major aspect of the class struggle at the present stage.

The conference emphasized that the principal task of the political and legal departments in our province for a certain period in the future is to provide a sound basis to the socialist democracy and socialist legal system, to strengthen the people's democratic dictatorship and to safeguard and help promote the socialist modernization construction in which economic construction is the key link. We must adhere to the principle of promptly inflicting a heavy penalty according to the law to those antagonists who have severely undermined the socialist system, those criminals who have seriously jeopardized social security and those criminals who have recklessly destroyed the economy. While continuing to redress the social order in towns, we must vigoriously redress the social order in rural areas and implement the principle of tackling social security in a comprehensive way. The key link to the comprehensive tackling is that the CPC committees at all levels must take command in organizing and controlling the operations, and mobilize all departments and units to engage in public security work while giving full play to the roles of political and legal departments.

The conference emphasized that the party's policies must be correctly carried out in redressing social order and in dealing blows at serious criminal activities in the economic field. We must strictly distinguish between the two types of contradictions of different natures, draw a demarcation line between the targets of the dictatorship and the elements who violate the law and commit crimes, and uphold the principle of making concrete analysis of concrete conditions and dealing with different things in different ways. Whenever we are temporarily uncertain of which category of contradictions a problem should be classified in, we must first handle it as a contradiction among the people. At the same time, we must carry out the consistent guideline of the party, that is, dealing blows at a small number of antagonists, striving to split off the majority from those antagonists and then transforming them; we must implement the basic policy of combining punishment and leniency, by giving leniency to those who confess their crimes and severity to those who refuse to. We must leniently handle the cases of those who give themselves up to the police, frankly confess their crimes, realize their errors and sincerely show repentance.

The conference also pointed out that civil administration, which has a very important bearing on social order and domestic unity and stability, must be conscientiously promoted. We must devote great efforts to the work concerning giving preferential treatment and providing relief to the people in rural areas.

We must conscientiously do a good job in arranging jobs for demobilized and retired servicemen, especially for those who return to rural areas. Counties, communes and production brigades must conscientiously take measures to resettle those people who roam about and go begging in towns.

Strengthening the building of primary organizations and improving work at the grassroots level is one of the urgent tasks for political and legal departments at present. The conference urged various places to immediately restore and amplify the mediating and social security committees at the grassroots level in urban and rural areas, and to mobilize the masses to formulate patriotic pledges and moral codes so as to solve a vast number of the social security problems and civil disputes at the grassroots level. On the other hand, we must also strengthen those police substations at the grassroots level in urban and rural areas.

The conference asked the party committees at all levels to strengthen their leadership of political and legal work so as to ensure that the party's principles and policies shall be correctly implemented. At the same time, we must reorganize and build our political and legal contingent according to the requirement for the vanguard of the proletariat, strengthen their political and vocational training, improve the political understanding and professional competence of the vast number of public security cadres and policemen, gradually build up a revolutionary, well-educated, professional and young political and legal contingent, and add to their combat force so that they can make valuable contributions to safeguarding the socialist modernization construction and realizing a fundamental turn for the better in social order.

BRIEFS

BEIJING IRON-SMELTING TECHNIQUE -- Beijing, Aug 24 (XINHUA) -- The Capital Iron and Steel Company in Beijing, one of China's largest, cut the coke consumption rate down to 405 kilograms for smelting each ton of iron in the first 7 months with the help of injecting powdered coal into the blast furnace. The figure is up to advanced world level and the lowest in China. It is 7 kilograms less than the 1981 figure of the company. Earlier this year, the No. 2 blast furnace set a record of consuming 393 kilograms of coke for making 1 ton of iron. With its four blast furnaces, the company turns out 3 million tons of pig iron annually. Adoption of the technique of injecting powdered coal into blast furnace enabled a savings of 154,000 tons of coke in the first half of 1982 and an overall 1981 savings of 273,000 tons. The technical know-how, an important energy saving device, has been exported to Britain. [Text] [Beijing XINHUA in English 0721 GMT 24 Aug 82 OW]

SHAANXI'S MA WENRUI ON REBUILDING XIAN CITY WALL

HK231424 Xian Shaanxi Provincial Service in Mandarin 0500 GMT 23 Aug 82

[Summary] Ma Wenrui, first secretary of the Shaanxi Provincial CPC Committee, has said: "It is necessary to mobilize the masses to voluntarily build a Xian city wall park."

When Ma Wenrui had just arrived in 1979 to work in Shaanxi Province, he said: "It is necessary to quickly build Xian into a modern civilized city with national traditions of our country and characteristics of Shaanxi." He recently discussed this matter many times with responsible comrades of SHAANXI RIBAO. He particularly pointed out: "It is necessary to quickly build Xian city walls, including the city moat, the protective belt of trees along the city and (Madaoxiang), into a city wall park." He said: "We think that Xian city walls are the only ancient, large and relatively complete city walls which still remain in the world. We must protect and repair them well and build them into a park. This will be pioneering work. It can show the magnificent beauty of the ancient capital and give historical education to our future generations. It will also be a famous scenic spot for tourists."

Regarding how to build it, Ma Wenrui said: "When work must be done, people will say that money is needed. Several 10 million yuan will be needed. Our country is still poor. How can it get such a large sum of money? If we wait until we have money, we do not know what year and what month we can build it. I think that we can mobilize the masses to voluntarily do some earthwork and repairs. I believe that some 1.6 million people in Xian are willing to do this work. When this work is done well, this will be a credit to our armymen and people in Xian. This will also be a memorable thing to do for our motherland and future generations."

Ma Wenrui also held a forum with responsible comrades of relevant departments. He hoped that they would quickly start this work, work out a plan and score achievements in 1 or 2 years.

XINJIANG'S WANG ENMAO URGES CARE FOR SCIENTISTS

HK280036 Urumqi Xinjiang Regional Service in Mandarin 1300 GMT 27 Aug 82

[Summary] According to XINJIANG RIBAO, while visiting an exhibition on investigations of Lop Nur organized by the Xinjiang branch of the Chinese Academy of Science on 25 August, Comrade Wang Enmao praised the communist spirit of scientists and technicians in devoting their efforts to science. He expressed the hope that the whole of society would respect and care for scientific personnel.

Comrade Wang Enmao praised the hard work of the scientists who took part in the three investigations of Lop Nur. He said: "While carrying out scientific investigation of Lop Nur, Comrade Peng Jiamu sacrificed his life and some comrades became ill with fatigue. The comrades engaged in the investigation suffered hardship and were severely tested by the natural environment. We should learn from and admire this spirit of scientific workers in devoting themselves to science. Our four modernizations drive needs large numbers of this kind of intellectual, those who are loyal to the motherland and the cause of science. Intellectuals like this are extremely valuable. We must cherish, respect and support them and enable them to make still greater contributions to socialist construction."

In conclusion, Wang Enmao stressed the importance of environmental protection.

Also attending the exhibition were Gu Jingsheng, Tomur Dawamat, Li Jiayu, Janabil and Ba Dai.

XINJIANG'S TOMUR DAWAMAT AT NATIONALITY FORUM

HK250908 Urumqi Xinjiang Regional Service in Mandarin 1300 GMT 24 Aug 82

[Excerpt] This afternoon, at the report and summation meeting on education on nationality policy and national unity of the regional organizations, Comrade Tomur Dawamat, the regional CPC committee secretary, said that notable results have been gained recently in widely and deeply conducting education on nationality policy and national unity in the whole region. At present, party organizations at various levels, all party members and cadres of various nationalities must conscientiously study and carry out the spirit of the communique of the party's seventh plenary session, continuously conduct constant education on nationality policy and national unity, further consolidate and develop the political situation of stability and unity in the region and make new and greater achievements to greet the opening of the party's 12th national congress.

In his speech, Comrade Tomur Dawamat first outlined the achievements made in the past 3 months in conducting education on nationality policy and national unity in the region. He said that consciousness has been raised among the cadres and masses of various nationalities in implementing the nationality policy and in safeguarding national unity through education. The political view of "two nondeviations" put forward by the central authorities is more deeply rooted in the people. Cadres of Nans have set their mind to work in Xinjiang. There is a prevailing atmosphere among the cadres of different nationalities of equal treatment, peaceful concord, mutual trust, mutual respect, mutual support, mutual learning and mutual understanding. National relations have been greatly improved and national unity and unity between the army and the people have been vigorously strengthened. A cheerful political situation is taking shape now of everyone having an idea of national unity, everyone understanding nationality policy, everyone speaking of national unity and everyone performing deeds good for national unity.

Comrade Tomur Dawamat said that the reason why we have scored such remarkable achievements in conducting education on nationality policy and national unity in all of Xinjiang lies in the importance attached to it by the party committees at various levels and the initiative taken by the leaders at various levels. This is the crux of conducting education on nationality policy and national unity. Many units and areas, starting from strengthening the unity in party committees and the unity in the cadres of various nationalities, have done a good job in the education on national unity. In the course of education, we must integrate theory with practice to resolve the practical problems harmful to national unity in our own units and areas and to bring into full play the promotive role of strengthening national unity. All the units and areas, in accordance with their practical situation and characteristics, have carried out various kinds of propaganda in line with local conditions. Many units have formulated the "convention on national unity" which should be supervised and observed by the masses.

Comrade Tomur Dawamat said that conducting education on the party's nationality policy and on safeguarding national unity is a protracted task on the political and ideological front and it must be incessantly grasped well. Party organizations at various levels must continue to place this work in an important position and do a good job so as to make it systematic and regular. It is necessary to educate the cadres and masses of various nationalities to further carry forward the communist spirit, treasure the excellent situation of national unity and unity between the army and the people, conscientiously fight against speeches and deeds harmful to national unity and make the practice of "everyone speaking of national unity" a noble socialist integrity as well as the most important content of building socialist spiritual civilization. All areas and departments must seriously sum up the experience in implementing the party's nationality policy and strengthening national unity, set examples and commend the advanced people. The regional CPC committee has decided to hold a conference in October to recommend the advanced units and individuals in implementing the party's nationality policy and strengthening national unity. All areas and departments must make every preparation to greet the opening of this conference.

INTERIOR MINISTER ADDRESSES POPULATION PROBLEM

[Text] Taipei, August 28 (CNA) -- The population of Taiwan has sextupled since 1905, and there is little room and resources for more people, Interior Minister Lin Yang-kang warned Friday.

Speaking at a demographic seminar, Lin said the birth rate in Taiwan has remained at over 2 percent annually despite government efforts to curb the population growth through family planning programs. Lin said the problem must be solved through education, as the traditional preference for male progeny is largely responsible for the high birth rate.

In 1905 the population of Taiwan stood at 3,120,000, and it doubled by 1943 when the census figure grew to 6,590,000. With the mass arrival of mainland immigrants after Taiwan was restored to Chinese sovereignty in 1945, the population of the province doubled again to 12,260,000 in 1964. The population of Taiwan had risen to 18,140,000 as of the end of 1981, averaging 504 persons per square kilometer, or 2015 persons per square kilometer to arable land.

The Ministry of Interior has decided to allocate new Taiwan dollars 1400 million to finance a four-year parenthood program to reduce the population pressure.

TZU LI WAN PAO VIEWS U.S.-PRC COMMUNIQUE

[Editorial: "Unite and Strive To Save China"]

[Text] To our great surprise, the United States and the Chinese Communists issued a joint communique on 17 August. The issuing of the communique was postponed time and again for its wording and contents. If the United States could accept a communique with such contents, it could have agreed to it earlier and thus have had no need for the repeated postponements. The contents of the communique basically represent the Chinese Communists' stand. During the negotiations, however, the Chinese Communists purposefully raised their conditions in order to obtain more concessions from the United States. The Chinese Communists finally seemed to have made concessions, but the final conditions on which both sides reached agreement were the Chinese Communists' basic conditions. Although the American negotiators racked their brains and wore themselves out in the negotiations, they still reached agreement with the Chinese Communists on the latter's terms. Beginning last October, the U.S.-Chinese Communist negotiations lasted 10 months. The result of the 10-month negotiations still represents the Chinese Communists' basic stand. We are really disappointed by Americans' ability to negotiate with Communists. We are greatly surprised and disappointed that President Reagan, with a clear understanding of communism, a great friendship for the Republic of China and with a great moral spirit, still fell into a trap set by the Chinese Communists after his administration negotiated with the Chinese Communists on the latter's terms for 10 months.

On the other hand, this can also be said to have been predictable. This is because the U.S. global strategy is to cope with Soviet expansion. Either the United States, or Europe or Asia wants to draw the Chinese Communists over to its side to counter the Soviet Union. So the Chinese Communists take advantage of this situation to blackmail others -- they threaten to downgrade diplomatic relations with Western countries or intimidate them by returning to the embrace of the Soviet Union. In view of the present-stage strategy of uniting with the Communist bandits to check the Soviet Union, no U.S. president would create a situation allowing the Chinese Communists to return to the Soviet bloc.

In such circumstances, the United States cannot but maintain the so-called "strategic relations" at the expense of the interests of the Republic of China. The Chinese Communists are engaged in internatioal blackmail directed against us, and we get the worst of it. This is the basic international situation at present, and Reagan can do nothing to change it. Thus, it can be said that the United States and the Chinese Communists issued the joint communique as expected. And the communique issued by them is inevitably harmful to us.

The Government of the Republic of China issued a solemn statement on the communique, holding that the communique contravenes the Taiwan Relations Act and that any agreements involving the rights and interests of our country are null and void. It is hoped that the United States will face up to the Chinese Communist regime's attempt to swallow up our bastion for national reconstruction and its scheme to divide the free world and will not be confused by it.

Chairman Chiang of the Kuomintang called on all compatriots and party comrades throughout the country not to be perplexed by the transient international situation and, with full national confidence, to give full scope to their revolutionary moral courage, strengthen their sense of distress, relinquish all selfish ideas, strengthen their unity and heighten their vigilance. In the adverse international current, an alliance has been formed with the Chinese Communists to check the Soviet Communists. Since the United States is allied with one enemy to check another, it is inevitable for the United States to be fooled and blackmailed by the enemy. And the Republic of China has become the first victim in this regard. We must have a sober understanding of this situation.

In the adverse international situation, there is only one correct way out for us -- we must do everything through our own efforts, and it is unreliable to depend on others. We have realized this for many years. The United States stopped its economic aid to us 20 years ago when we were economically still rather backward. However, the people of our country have since pooled their wisdom and energies and worked together, thus performing an economic miracle. Now the Chinese Communists threateningly demand that the United States set a deadline for its arms sales to us. The only way out for us is self-reliance: That is, we must make every possible effort to develop and upgrade our defense industry. We believe that this purpose can certainly be achieved provided all the people of the country work in unity.

All people should work harder when the country is faced with difficulties. In the face of the adverse international current and our difficult position, we hold that as long as the people of the country work vigorously in unity, we can certainly surmount all difficulties and create everything we need.

Unite and strive to save China! Let us encourage each other in our endeavors!

COMMUNIQUE SAID TO VIOLATE TAIWAN RELATIONS ACT

OW301010 Taipei CHINA POST in English 26 Aug 82 p 4

[Editorial: "Peiping's Denial of Peaceful Settlement"]

[Text] Only three days after the release of a U.S.-Peiping joint communique which has caused such a furor in the Asian and Pacific region over U.S. intention to phase out arms sales to the Republic of China, Peiping's HSINHUA NEWS AGENCY reiterated on August 20 that Red China has made no commitment to resolve the "Taiwan issue" peacefully and accused the United States officials of giving distorted interpretations of a U.S.-Red China agreement.

The HSINHUA dispatch said that statements by U.S. officials are also intended to evade a U.S. "responsibility" to halt arms sales to the Republic of China over a period of time.

Another HSINHUA dispatch also criticized the U.S. Government last Friday for its haste in moving to supply the ROC with 60 new jet fighter planes soon after the announcement of the agreement.

The HSINHUA dispatches constitute a negation of U.S. understanding that the Peiping regime has promised to settle the "Taiwan issue" by peaceful means. Therefore, U.S. Assistant Secretary of State John Holdrige was not right when he told U.S. congressmen that "as a matter of fact and law, any adjustments in our arms sales to Taiwan had to be premised on a continuation of (Red) China's peaceful policy (toward Taiwan)".

The United States has obviously taken too much for granted in believing that the Chinese Communist peaceful reunification proposal as advanced by the Peiping regime on September 30, 1981 represents a definite commitment to a peaceful solution of the "Taiwan issue." It merely created an illusion which we have repeatedly warned our American friends not to pay any serious attention to. Unfortunately, President Ronald Reagan was greatly deceived by the Peiping regime and agreed to issue the controversial joint communique and rashly promised the Peiping regime that the U.S. would limit its arms sales to the present level and that it intends to gradually reduce its arms sales to Taiwan.

As the Peiping regime has revealed its real designs in this respect, indicating that it has not made any commitment to resolve this issue peacefully, the United States need not be bound by the arms sales promises made in the joint commqnique.

The U.S. Congress should take due notice of Peiping's intransigent attitude and declare the joint communique null and void as it contradicts the Taiwan Relations Act [TRA] and violates the letter and spirit of the TRA.

As far as the people of the Republic of China are concerned, we should hold the United States to the 6-point promises made known to us on July 14, 1982 that the United States, among others, has not agreed to set a date for ending arms sales to the ROC, that it has not agreed to revise the Taiwan Relations Act and that it has not altered its position regarding sovereignty over Taiwan. We have also declared the joint communique null and void, which should help the United States in its dealing with the faithless Peiping regime.

We must also point out that Peiping is trying its utmost to rearm and modernize its armed forces. Its plan to acquire the French Mirage fighters should serve as an indication of its rearmament efforts.

In view of that, the United States should upgrade the types of planes for our co-production program from F-5E or F-5F to more sophisticated types. President Reagan should seize the initiative of changing the type of planes for co-production programs to provide real assurances in deed of his friendship for the people of the Republic of China.

The people of the Republic of China appreciate the genuine expression of friendship and support expressed by the American people and their representatives on Capitol Hill. They should watch out constantly for Peiping's duplicity and sinister plot of annexing Taiwan by diplomatic means with the help of the United States and even by force. Peiping's united front tactics are not only vicious but also dangerously misleading in nearly convincing President Reagan to abandon his lofty principles as well as the people of the Republic of China. Fortunately, many U.S. congressional leaders gave the timely outcries on this issue and averted a greater catastrophe.

ZHAO ZIYANG MEETS UNCTAD SECRETARY GENERAL

OW021642 Beijing XINHUA in English 1524 GMT 1 Sep 82

[Text] Beijing, September 2 (XINHUA) -- Premier Zhao Ziyang met with Gamani Corea, secretary-general of the U.N. Conference on Trade and Development this afternoon in Zhongnanhai.

The premier welcomed Corea to China and praised his UNCTAD leadership for efforts to help developing countries expand their economy and trade and to establish a new international economic order. Premier Zhao also expressed satisfaction with the relations between China and UNCTAD.

Referring to international economic relations, the premier said he hoped UNCTAD would play an even greater role in improvement of economic and technological cooperation among developing countries.

"Along with developing countries, UNCTAD should work to improve South-South cooperation as well as maintain the momentum of the South-North dialogue. This will increase not only the collective self-reliance of the developing countries, but also their positions in South-North dialogue," he said.

Corea thanked China for consistent support to UNCTAD and to the cause of developing countries. Present were Chen Jie, representative of the minister of economic relations and trade, and K. Khaw, special assistant to the secretary-general.

DISCOVERY OF URANIUM DEPOSITS ANNOUNCED

[Text] Beidahe, September 3 (XINHUA) -- Uranium deposits have been discovered in volcanic rocks in southeast China, Wang Canlin of the Beijing research institute of uranium geology said in an interview today at a symposium on mesozoic and cenozoic geology.

The symposium, which started on September 1 and will run through tomorrow, includes geologists from Australia, Britain, Canada, France, Greece, Japan, the United States and West Germany and Hong Kong region.

Thanks to efforts over the last 20 years and more, he said, Chinese uranium geologists have discovered a number of important volcanic uranium deposits.

Mesozoic volcanics, where the uranium find was made, are scattered extensively over eastern China's Pacific rim area, which stretches 4,000 kilometers from the Hinggan Mountains in northeast China all the way down through to south China's Guangdong Province. At a width of somewhere between 200 and 400 kilometers -- the widest 800 kilometers -- the area covered is about 1.2 million square kilometers. Acidic volcanic rocks are most prevalent among southeast China's coastal areas volcanics, where many uranium deposits have been found.

He said that the vein-type uranium deposits in volcanic rocks constitute the major type of important economic uranium ore in China.

Up to now, he noted, many uranium resources were found in Cambrian metamorphic rocks and mesozoic and cenozoic continental sedimentary rocks. Western uranium geologists have been aware of uranium-bearing importance of acidic volcanic rocks. Some countries have begun to prospect uranium deposits in volcanic rocks.

EVOLUTION OF U.S. SUPPLY SIDERS DISCUSSED

["Newsletter From America" by Yuan Xianlu [5913 0341 4389]: "The Rise and Fall of the Supply Side Group"]

[Text] U.S. Treasury Secretary Regan recently told some newsmen that the economic theories of the supply siders do not work. He said his 35 years' experience on Wall Street told him that the feelings of people engaged in financial work "are in conflict with the beliefs of the supply siders."

People will recall that it was the same Regan who, testifying before Congress at the beginning of last year, announced: "I was a supply sider long before I ever heard the term."

Less than 1 and 1/2 years have passed since then. Why has the U.S. treasury secretary made a 180-degree turn in his attitude toward the supply-side advocates?

What happened [illegible] he moment that President Reagan took office last year was the moment when the supply si[illegible] got the upper hand. According to the official word at the time, this economic theory was the cure-all by which the U.S. economy could be extricated from difficulty and regain prosperity. President Reagan's "economic revival plan" was mainly drawn up in accordance with the ideas of this group. At that time it was fashionable for government economists and Republican congressman to describe themselves as supply siders. Secretary Regan was just one of them.

There was nothing accidental about the prominence of the supply-side group at the time. Contrary to Keynesianism, which stresses stimulating the economy by expanding demand, this group holds that economic development should focus on stimulating supply, mainly by reducing taxes and thus increasing personal income and enterprise profits, savings and investment are stimulated, production expands, and as a result government revenue actually increases, the deficit is cut and inflation also falls. This theory appeared at the beginning of the 1970's, but it gained little attention at first. However, as the U.S. economy fell into "stagflation" for many years without a recovery, the Keynesians, who had been in vogue for several decades, lost their effectiveness, and certain people then held that there was no harm in giving the supply siders a try. It was precisely for this reason that after he took office, Reagan wanted to "break away" from the economic policies of previous U.S. administrations and formulated his own economic plans in accordance with the ideas of the supply siders.

At the end of July last year, Reagan's tax cut bill was passed by Congress; this represented a great victory for the supply-side group. However, this also turned out to be the start of the way down for them.

This was because although the theory of the supply siders sounded clear and logical, it turned out quite different in practice. After the first tax cut took effect last 1 October, there was no tendency for private investment to increase. The deficit was too great and the interest rate was too high. The recession which began in August last year has continued to deepen and the economic outlook is extremely bleak. Although the big corporations have benefitted from the tax cut, who is willing to run the risk of expanding investment?

Troubles never come individually. The Stockman incident at the end of last year was another heavy blow to the supply siders. This OMB director, who had consistently been regarded as an important figure among the supply siders, admitted privately that the theory of the supply siders was fraudulent. In addition to this, in the face of the wretched economic situation, opponents of the supply siders among government officials became more and more prominent. According to the American press, when President Reagan's State of the Union speech was being prepared early this year, the great majority of senior White House assistants held that the tax cut had had big consequences, and proposed raising taxes to cut the deficit. After that, various key supply siders in the White House and the Treasury Department quit.

President Reagan himself was obviously unwilling to lightly abandon the ideas of the supply siders. At the beginning of this year, he prevailed over all dissenting views and announced in his State of the Union speech: "Increasing taxes cannot balance the budget. It will only make government expenditures greater and reduce private investment." He was still insisting in April: "I did not come to Washington to raise taxes." What then was to be done about the enormous deficit? He said, the first stage of the tax cut in October last year did not amount to much; not much time has passed since then, and so it has not played much of a part; the deficit would certainly be reduced after the second stage of the tax cut, effective 1 July. Hence he frequently stated categorically that "I have no intention of retreating from the fundamental plan of cutting taxes."

However, situations are stronger than people. July passed, and the second stage of the tax cut brought no fine prospects at all for the U.S. economy. The recession continued, economists were pessimistic, and hopes for increasing investment were dim. The financial deficit was growing faster than expected. The deficit for 1983 was estimated in the budget to be over $100 billion, but in July the Congressional Budget Office estimated it at $140-160 billion. Treasury Secretary Regan recently announced that if revenue were not increased by raising taxes, the deficit could reach $200 billion. With such a huge deficit, resistance to approving an enormous military budget would greatly increase. Moreover many Republicans were complaining that their voters were very unhappy over the current economic situation and the outlook for the party in the mid-term elections was not bright. Considering all the political, military and economic factors, President Reagan had no choice but to change his mind and agree to a tax increase. He also made a television speech on 16 August in which he publicly appealed to the American people to urge their congressmen to support the new plan for increasing taxes. THE NEW YORK TIMES reported: "By demanding a new tax levy, Reagan has abandoned the supply-side economic theory which he had pursued during the presidential campaign and the first 18 months of his Presidency." Since the President's attitude has changed, the treasury secretary, who astutely equated himself with the supply siders 1 and 1/2 years ago, has now publicly announced that he has broken away from them. Regan is not the only one who has made this move. Republican Senator and Senate Finance Committee Chairman Dole was an active proponent of the tax-cut bill last year, but now he has become one of the chief advocates of a bill to increase taxes. He publicly said on television 15 August: "I have never really understood the reasoning of the supply siders." "Last year I supported Representative Kemp over something I did not believe in." White House Chief of Staff Baker recently admitted his disappointment that the tax cut plan carried out last year in accordance with the supply-side theory had been ineffective and unable to stimulate the economy. These dramatic statements by Regan, Dole and others only represent a small episode in the rise and fall of the supply siders in the United States. We can see from this: Since the old Keynesian methods do not work, and the new toy of the supply siders shed its luster as soon as it came on-stage, what other wonderful medicines do bourgeois economists have up their sleeves?

USSR'S USTINOV URGES GREATER MILITARY BUILDUP

[Text] Moscow, September 2 (XINHUA) — Soviet Defense Minister Dmitriy Ustinov said today that his country should continue its military buildup and keep its defense might at an appropriate level as "the situation in the world is being aggravated through the efforts of imperialist reaction, above all the U.S. leadership."

In a speech delivered in Kuybyshev, Ustinov added: "War is going on and blood is being shed. Everywhere it is a consequence of the policy and aggressive actions of imperialism."

But Ustinov mentioned not a word of war and bloodshed caused by the massive Soviet military presence in Afghanistan and by the Soviet-backed Vietnamese armies in Kampuchea.

Turning to the Soviet-U.S. strategic arms limitation talks and talks on limitation of nuclear weapons in Europe, Ustinov accused the U.S. of unwillingness to acknowledge the principles of equality and equal security of both sides.

"The Soviet Union will not accept an agreement that would ensure for the U.S.A. the opportunity of securing unilateral advantages," he said.

Ustinov attacked China's policy which he said "does not contribute to a lessening of tensions in the world" but is one "against the common interests of the socialist community."

Observers here noticed the fact that on Aug. 15, the Soviet Air Force Day, Ustinov issued an order in which he launched fierce attacks against Chinas foreign policy.

HONGQI COMMENTARY ON JAPANESE MILITARISM

HK030749 Beijing HONGQI in Chinese No 16, 16 Aug 82 pp 37-40

[HONGQI commentator's article: "Be Vigilant Against the Danger of a Revival of Japanese Militarism"]

[Text] In the course of screening school textbooks, the Japanese Education Ministry has brazenly distorted the history of Japanese aggression and absolved the Japanese militarists of their war crimes. This incident has naturally evoked strong indignation and protests from the Chinese, Korean and other east and Southeast Asian nations. The Chinese Ministry of Foreign Affairs has made representations to the Japanese Government demanding that it assume the responsibility of correcting the mistakes made by the Japanese Education Ministry. The situation is still under review. A flood of condemnation from various countries, including public opinion in Japan, is swelling. As pointed out by many commentators, this is definitely not a simple dispute over the use of words or over the accidental mistakes made by the Japanese authorities concerned. It is a grave signal that the danger of a revival of militarism exists in Japan.

Why is the Japanese Education Ministry trying to cover up and distort historical facts?

As everybody knows, Japan entered the imperialist stage of development in the latter part of the last century and the early part of the present century. One of the basic characteristics of imperialism is external expansion, contention for colonies and spheres of influence and partition of the world. By means of wars of aggression, Japan successively annexed Taiwan and the Penghu Islands from China in 1895 and completely swallowed up Korea in 1910. Lenin, in "Imperialism, the Highest Stage of Capitalism," listed Japan with Britain, Russia, France, Germany and the United States as one of the six biggest imperialist nations. In 1914 these six possessed 92 percent of all the colonies in the world. Japan ranked fourth among them, only after Britain, France and Russia. In 1931 Japan invaded and occupied the three northweat provinces of China, and in 1933, invaded and occupied Jehol Province. In 1937 it launched the full-scale aggression against China and occupied large areas of north China, east China, the central plains and south China. In December 1941, Japan also started the Pacific war and occupied the Philippines, Malaysia, Singapore, Indonesia and Burma. In all the wars of aggression and the colonial rule which followed, the Japanese militarists brought great suffering to the Chinese, Korean and other Southeast Asian nations. These aggressions by the Japanese militarists and their aftermaths are historical facts which have been clearly recorded in the history books and textbooks of many countries in the world.

What should be particularly pointed out is that during the war of aggression against China from the 1930's to the 1940's, the Japanese militarists committed countless inhuman crimes against the Chinese people. They burned, killed and looted everywhere they went, raped the women, carried out large-scale massacres of old and disabled people as well as women and children and committed all kinds of atrocities. In particular, they carried out an extremely brutal policy of "burn all, kill all, loot all" in the anti-Japanese base areas which were under the leadership of the CPC. In the occupied territory, they also forced Chinese workers to engage in slave labor and created many "mass graves" filled with corpses. The big Nanjing massacre, which shocked the country and the whole world, was only one of their sordid crimes. To the Chinese people who suffered deeply from the war of aggression, all these events will never be forgotten. The war of aggression launched by the Japanese militarists also exacted a heavy price from the Japanese people. As for the Japanese people, they should also always bear this lesson in mind.

In modern Chinese history, it was the lofty ideal and goal of all progressive Chinese as well as the common desire and national sentiment of millions of Chinese both at home and abroad, to completely liberate the nation from the oppression of imperialist Japan and other imperialist powers. For half a century, and particularly in the 1930's and 1940's, the Chinese people waged a heroic and indomitable struggle, despite extreme hardships and difficulties, against the Japanese invaders and wrote a glorious chapter in the annals of the world national liberation movement. During World War II, as a result of the joint efforts of the Chinese people and other peoples of the world, Japanese imperialism was defeated together with the German and Italian Fascists. At that time, the Japanese Government shouldered the blame for the war and signed the surrender. Such major war criminals as Hideki Tojo and Ishine Matsui, who directed the Nanjing massacre, were tried by the International Military Tribunal and received the punishment they deserved.

It has long been a verdict of history that the Japanese miltarists committed a serious crime of aggression against the Chinese, Korean and Southeast Asian people. These butchers, who massacred the people of various countries, have been locked forever in the pillory of history.

Now, the Japanese Education Ministry has distorted the history of this half century in the screening of Japanese textbooks and has denied that Japan carried out aggression against China. They have used such words as "advance into north China" to cover up the full-scale war of aggression against China which began in 1937. They actually made a counterattack and described the indiscriminate killing of Chinese civilians after the occupation of Nanjing by the Japanese invading army as the result of "provocations" caused by the resistance of Chinese soldiers and civilians. Besides the Japanese Education Ministry, some high officials in the Japanese Government have also come forth to express support for this distortion. Among them is Yukeyasu Matsuno, head of Japan's National Land Agency, who even argued: "When Japan 'advanced' into foreign countries, it did not call its actions aggressions, and to present 'advance' as aggression is a distortion of history." According to the principles of international law generally recognized by the world, the violation of the territorial integrity and sovereignty of other countries and the act of plundering and enslaving the people of other countries by any country constitutes aggression. Moreover, is it not a fact that Japan had practiced such acts of aggression against China for almost half a century? According to the logic of certain people in Japan, aggressions and aggressors do not exist in world history, and not only should the whole history of Japanese aggression against China be completely rewritten, but the whole history of World War I should also be completely rewritten. From the attitude a person adopts toward the mistakes and crimes he committed in the past, one can see what this person will do in the future. This also applies to a country as well as to a nation. The attitude adopted toward crimes of external aggression in history has a bearing on this country and the trend of the future development of this nation. In 1972 when Chinese Premier Zhou Enlai was normalizing relations between China and Japan, he made an allegorical statement pregnant with meaning regarding the past incidents caused by the Japanese militarists' invasion of China. He said: "The invasion of China by Japanese militarists has caused great sufferings to the Chinese people, and the Japanese people have also suffered deeply. Past experience, if not forgotten, is a guide for the future. We must firmly bear in mind such experiences and lessons." The reason the human race cannot forget the past and must respect history is because they can learn from history, draw useful lessons and take warning so as not to make the same mistake as their predecessors. Therefore, we should not cover up the true picture of history and, moreover, we cannot distort history. This deliberate distortion of history to defend aggressions in history means that someday Japan will probably retrace the old foothpath of militarism. The incident of the distortion of history by the Japanese Education Ministry indicates that this danger is already looming in present-day Japan.

The Japanese militarist forces suffered a crushing defeat in World War II. Since the war, the militarists have always been thinking of staging a comeback, but they have never been able to succeed because of the resolute resistance of the Japanese people and the strong opposition of the people of various Asian countries. What should be noticed is that the militarist elements have by no means vanished in Japan; there are many of them in the numerous extreme rightwing groups in the country today. These people are carrying out all kinds of activities in a bid to revive militarism and are vainly thinking of turning Japan from an economic into a great military power and reliving the old dream of the "Great East Asia Coprosperity Sphere." These people are praising the barbaric and ignorant bushido spirit, beautifying the history of Japan's external aggression, absolving the militarist ringleaders and war criminals of blame and even worshipping them as "national heroes" and praying for their souls. The film "Dai Nippon Teikou" ("The Great Japanese Empire") recently released in Japan wantonly glorifies the war criminal Hideki Tojo and propagates the notion that Japan's launching of aggressive wars was for its own "protection" and the "liberation of Asia." According to an advertisement in NIHONG KEIZAI SHIMBUN, the purpose of the film is to "restore a historical view of the great east Asian war that is favorable to the Japanese." This has clearly explained the purpose of certain Japanese in reversing the verdict against the militarists. Cultural education is the reflection of economics and politics, and ideological opinion is the precursor of action. The distortion of history is precisely for the sake of preparing public opinion in an attempt to revive militarism and is an important manifestation of this political trend.

World War II brought unprecedented disaster to the whole of mankind, and its memory is still fresh in the minds of the people. This great war was started by the Japanese full-scale war of aggression against China. One important lesson learned from the outbreak of this great war was: When the Japanese militarists kept on expanding the scale of aggression against China, when Mussolini was carrying out a war of aggression against Abyssinia and when Hitler was embarking on such adventurist actions as intervening in the Spanish Civil War, annexing Austria and occupying Czechoslovakia, the antifascist countries either lacked vigilance or adopted a policy of appeasement toward the aggressors. They did not curb the danger of a world war in its germinating stage. Today the situation of the whole world in its and the balance between the forces of peace and war are vastly different than before. However, the danger of a world war still exists. A common urgent task facing the people and all peace-loving countries of the world at present is to curb any factor which might lead to the outbreak of a new world war and making it possible to breed or grow.

The Chinese people and government have always adopted a reasonable, magnanimous and far-sighted attitude regarding the historical question of the Japanese invasion of China. We believe that China and Japan are separated by only a strip of water, that the people of both countries have a long history of friendly relations and that the Japanese aggression against China occurred under conditions which were entirely against the wishes of the Japanese people. Therefore, we have made a distinction between the Japanese people, who could not decide for themselves at that time, and the Japanese ruling class; between elements of the Japanese ruling class who did not approve of the war of aggression and the militarist forces; and between those in the Japanese Government who at that time were willing to carry out a friendly and good-neighbor policy and those in the Japanese Government who should take the blame for launching external wars of aggression in history. Japan, which has practiced external aggression in its history, owes a debt to the countries victimized by its aggression. As far as China is concerned, over 10 million people were killed by Japan's war of aggression in the 1930's and 1940's, while property damage exceeded $50 billion. Japan, which has now become an "economic big power," should retrace its roots. Was not a considerable part of its capital and wealth in fact plundered from other countries by aggressive war and colonial rule?

From the Sino-Japanese War of 1894-1895 alone, Japan extorted from China reparations equivalent to what was then 350 million Japanese yen, and "the funds guaranteed the maintenance of the empire's armaments and the establishment of modern industry" ("History of Japan's Foreign Affairs" by Seisaburo Nobuo). Regarding the half century from the Sino-Japanese War of 1894-95 to the end of World War II, it is even more difficult to estimate the wealth Japan looted from China, Korea and other Asian countries (including wealth created by laborers from these countries). The Chinese people do not demand that the present Japanese Government assume responsibility for the war, and, for the sake of friendship between the people of the two countries, they have also dropped the demands for reparations. However, the Chinese people and all Asian peoples who suffered from Japanese aggression have the right to demand that the present Japanese Government assume a political and moral responsibility to curb the attempts of extreme rightwing forces in Japan to revive militarism, to tell the Japanese people -- and particularly the younger generation -- the historical truth, and to teach them that they must never again allow Japan to become a militarist state or to launch external wars of aggression. At present, some of the people in the Japanese Government are not only unwilling to do so but, instead, are trying to distort history and glorify aggression. This is a dereliction of duty. It should be pointed out that to distort the history of Japanese aggression against China is, in essence, an extreme insult to the Chinese people. The Chinese Government has approached the Japanese Government and asked for a correction. This is the legitimate right of the aggrieved party. But some high-ranking Japanese officials, on the contrary, tried to find fault with China by saying that this is "interference in Japan's internal affairs." Their disregard for morality and justice has reached a level that is impervious to reason. However, public opinion from all walks of life in Japan has also proved that this behavior of the Japanese authorities is also intolerable to the Japanese people. Kazuo Asukada, chairman of the Japanese Socialist Party and member of the Diet, pointed out: "They attempted to play down the aggression perpetrated in the past against the Asian countries, cover up the injuries caused by the conduct of the Japanese militarists and erase such things from history. It is only natural that this tendency will evoke strong indignation among peoples of various Asian countries who were the victims of such acts of aggression." Toluma Utsunomiya, president of the Japan-China Friendship Association, said: "Pandering to the rightwing tendency, the Japanese Government attempts to use textbooks to blot out the Japanese people's self-reproach for aggression. We cannot agree to this." An editorial in YOMIURI SHIMBUN pointed out: "Over 60 percent of the people in Japan at present belong to 'the generation who do not know anything about the former war.' Therefore, the important thing is to teach them not to blot out the responsibilty for the war. However, the screening (of textbooks) has done just the opposite. This cannot but be considered as a distortion of historical facts." The National Conference of the Japanese History Education Workers Association has unanimously demanded that the Education Ministry change the practice of distorting history at once. All these reflect the sentiment of the Japanese public from all walks of life who are willing to have friendly relations with the people of China and other Asian countries.

As a result of the concerted efforts of the Chinese and Japanese peoples as well as people of insight, diplomatic relations between China and Japan were normalized in 1972 and a joint statement was issued in this connection by the governments of the two countries. The treaty of peace and friendship concluded between China and Japan in 1978 affirmed that "the joint statement is the basis for the development of peaceful and friendly relations between China and Japan, and various principles indicated in the joint statement must be strictly observed."

The joint statement pointed out: "The Japanese side is keenly aware of Japan's responsibility for causing enormous damages in the past to the Chinese people through war and deeply reproaches itself." This showed the attitude of self-reproach adopted by the Japanese Government for the wars of aggression launched against China in the past. It was written as a major principle into the Sino-Jananese joint statement on the establishment of diplomatic relations and is also affirmed by the treaty of peace and friendship. It is a prerequisite for the development of peaceful and friendly relations between China and Japan. This prerequisite cannot be overthrown. To do so means to wreck the basis for the establishment of peaceful and friendly relations between the two countries. The Chinese people have all along valued the friendly relations with the Japanese people. The broad masses of Japanese people also have friendly feelings for the Chinese people. Just as pointed out by the joint statement of the two governments, "the normalization of diplomatic relations between the two countries and the development of neighborly and friendly relations between the two countries conform to the interests of the peoples of both countries and will also contribute to the easing of tension in Asia and the safeguarding of world peace." Only by solemnly accepting historical facts, respecting the political basis for the establishment of diplomatic relations between the two countries and educating the younger generation in accordance with this guideline can friendly relations between China and Japan develop and can the peoples of both countries get along as friends from generation to generation. The Japanese Government should squarely face the distortion of the history of Japanese aggression against China made by the Education Ministry in the process of screening textbooks, an affair which is damaging Sino-Japanese relations, and take practical action to defend the basis for friendly relations between the two countries by correcting this mistake. As far as the Chinese people are concerned, we are willing to work together with the Japanese people and the peoples of other Asian countries, unite with them and make joint efforts to prevent the danger of a revival of militarism.

INJURED INDIAN RETURNED AFTER MEDICAL TREATMENT

[Text] Lhasa, September 3 (XINHUA) -- An Indian who crossed the border into China's Tibet Region and was found frostbitten in both legs has been taken home by personnel dispatched by the Indian Government, after prompt treatment given by Chinese medical workers, it was learned here.

An Indian representative thanked the Chinese side for saving the life of Ram Chandra in the spirit of humanitarianism and friendship between the two countries.

Ram Chandra, 30, came from a village in Bihar State, India, where he has a mother, a wife and two children. He said that in March of this year he sneaked across the border into Tibet in hopes of earning a better living. While scaling a mountain his legs became frostbitten during a sudden snowstorm. He was found by local people near a highway linking Byalam and Tingri Counties of Tibet. Because the Indian could not walk and appeared to be in critical condition, the local people immediately carried him to the Tingri County hospital for emergency treatment.

A medical examination determined that the lower third of both his legs were severely forstbitten and showed evidence of serious gangrene infection. Without an operation the infection would become more serious, endangering his survival, doctors said.

With the consent of the Indian, surgeons overcame the difficulties of inadequate medical equipment and amputated both legs. Out of danger, he was placed under special nursing care.

After two months of careful treatment, Ram Chandra was returned to health for which he thanked the Chinese medical and rescue workers.

Early in April of this year, Chinese officials informed the Indian side of the case, through appropriate diplomatic channel. The Indian Government had been contacted and urged several times before it took Ram Chandra back on August 25.

REAGAN URGES PALESTINIAN SELF-GOVERNMENT

[Text] Washington, September 1 (XINHUA) -- U.S. President Ronald Reagan, announcing his "new American policy" for a "durable, just and lasting peace" in the Middle East, called for "self-government by the Palestinians of the West Bank and Gaza Strip in association with Jordan."

In a nationally televised speech today from Burbank, California, President Reagan stressed that "the United States will not support the establishment of an independent Palestinian state in the West Bank and Gaza." "We will not support annexation or permanent control by Israel's of these territories," he added.

He is also opposed to Israeli expansion of settlements on these occupied lands and called for "the immediate adoption of a settlement freeze by Israel." There are reportedly about 80 settlements with 25,000 Israelis set up on the West Bank.

In his speech Reagan also emphasized U.S. commitment to Israel's security. "America's commitment to the security of Israel is ironclad," he said.

Calling this new U.S. initiative a "fresh start," Reagan said: "The Camp David agreement remains the foundation of our policy."

He said that the Lebanon war "has left us with a new opportunity for Middle East peace." "The question now is how to reconcile Israel's legitimate security concerns with the legitimate rights of the Palestinians," he pointed out.

That answer, he said, can only come at the negotiating table. "Each party must recognize that the outcome must be acceptable to all and that true peace will require compromise by all."

He said: "I call on Israel to make clear that the security for which she yearns can only be achieved through genuine peace, a peace requiring magnanimity, vision and courage." He also called on the Palestinians and Arab states to accept the reality of Israel.

Reagan also indicated that the United States has presented the proposals in full detail to Israel, Egypt, Jordan and Saudi Arabia.

Jordanian Reaction

OW030825 Beijing XINHUA in English 0723 GMT 3 Sep 82

[Text] Damascus, September 2 (XINHUA) -- Jordan is seriously considering U.S. President Reagan's Middle East peace plan and is ready to consult with the Palestine Liberation Organization and other Arab states, reported the Jordanian television today quoting a spokesman of the Jordanian Foreign Ministry.

Reagan's Middle East peace initiative calls for Palestinian self-government in the occupied West Bank and Gaza Strip in association with Jordan.

The spokesman said President Reagan's initiative contains positive elements which deserve study by Arabs, especially the inadmissibility of occupying territory by force and the necessity of Israeli withdrawal from its occupied territories in return for peace.

Israel Rejects Proposal

[Text] Beijing, September 2 (XINHUA) -- Israel has rejected U.S. President Ronald Reagan's new initiative to establish a Palestinian entity linked to Jordan, according to news reports received here today.

Israeli Deputy Prime Minister David Levy, after a three-hour emergency Cabinet meeting today, said that his government "completely rejects the proposals because they will lead to the establishment of a Palestinian state, even if this is not intended."
Levey said Reagan's proposals "deviate from the Camp David accords."

The Israeli Government also opposed Reagan's call for a ban on the creation of new settlements and the reinforcement of existing ones on the West Bank.

Israeli Foreign Minister Yitzhak Shamir asserted that "no power, be it the strongest and most friendly, will force" Israel to withdraw from the territories it has occupied since June 1967.

It was reported that the Israeli opposition Labour Party leaders welcomed the U.S. move which they called a breakthrough in efforts to solve the Palestinian problem.

UK's Pym Welcomes Plan

OW030530 Beijing XINHUA in English 0219 GMT 3 Sep 82

[Text] London, September 2 (XINHUA) -- British Foreign Secretary Francis Pym today expressed support for U.S. President Reagan's new Middle East plan saying it was very close to the European initiative launched two years ago.

Speaking tonight in an interview with the British independent television, Pym described it as a "constructive" and "imaginative" plan which has a foundation for negotiation that could lead to "a permanent peace in the end." Pym said the rights of the Palestinians and Israel's right to its security are two fundamental principles of that foundation.

Pym indicated that the American initiative is similar to "the ideas and opinions being expressed by Britain and the other European countries." Britain would work together with its partners in Europe to "help in every way we can to carry this initiative through to a settlement", he added.

President Reagan, in a major policy speech last night, proposed for Palestinian self-government in association with Jordan in the Israeli-occupied West Bank and Gaza Strip and called for a freeze of Jewish settlement there.

Pym said the rights of the Palestinians had never been properly fulfilled and the Palestinian people had never had an opportunity to decide their own future. He called for the withdrawal of all foreign forces from Lebanon and said he was sorry about Israel's rejection of the American plan.

In a statement issued earlier today, the British Government said: "The new U.S. ideas represent a serious attempt to take account of the concerns of the interested parties and recognise that the future of the Palestinians is central to Middle East peace."

WEINBERGER MEETS PRESS, LEADERS IN LEBANON

[Text] Beirut, September 1 (XINHUA) -- U.S. Defense Secretary Caspar Weinberger said today that plans for a simultaneous withdrawal of Israeli and Syrian troops from Lebanon could be worked out through negotiations. Weinberger told a news conference at Beirut Port at the end of his 7-hour visit that both Syrian and Israeli troops wished to leave Lebanon and go back home but they would not leave unless the other side had left. So a simultaneous withdrawal is the only solution, he said.

He said "preliminary work" has already been started on a mutual withdrawal of Syrian and Israeli forces from Lebanon.

Weinberger's visit came when the last group of 1,000 Palestinian fighters evacuated Beirut under the supervision of the multinational force made up of French, U.S. and Italian troops.

Weinberger said the U.S. Marine contingent to the multinational force has completed its work and will withdraw from Beirut within a few days. He inspected the U.S. Marines earlier.

Weinberger had talks with Lebanese leaders including President-elect Bashir al-Jummayyil. He said the United States will provide Lebanon with military equipment to help it form an army strong enough to reestablish order in Beirut and maintain sovereignty over all of Lebanon.

Lebanese President Elias Sarkis had a dinner tonight with U.S. presidential envoy Philip Habib and presented him a medal for his "great efforts" to solve the west Beirut crisis. Habib arrived here on a mediation mission on June 14 when Israeli troops besieged west Beirut. An agreement for evacuation of Palestinian fighters from west Beirut was reached after 66-day negotiations.

Habib is scheduled to leave Beirut for Washington tomorrow and return here on September 22 to attend the swearing-in of Lebanese President al-Jummayyil. He will also continue to negotiate for a settlement of the Lebanon problem.

FURTHER COVERAGE OF 12TH CPC NATIONAL CONGRESS

Hu on Responsibility Systems

OW021456 Beijing XINHUA Domestic Service in Chinese 0712 GMT 2 Sep 82

[Text] Beijing, 2 Sep (XINHUA) -- Various forms of the production responsibility system have been instituted in rural areas in recent years. We must maintain this system for a long time to come. It can be improved step by step only on the basis of summing up the masses' practical experiences and must not be rashly changed against the will of the masses, much less must we take the road back.

Hu Yaobang said this in his report to the 12th CPC National Congress.

In his report, Hu Yaobang dealt with the question of persisting in taking the state sector of the economy as the leading factor and developing a diversified economy. He pointed out: Consolidating and developing the state sector of the economy is a decisive condition for ensuring that the collective economy under ownership by working people advances in the socialist orientation and that the individual economy serves socialism. Since the development of the productive forces in our country is still comparatively low and even uneven, various forms of economy need to exist simultaneously for a fairly long period of time.

He said: In recent years, young people and other residents in cities and towns have pooled their funds to engage in cooperative economic undertakings which have developed in many localities and have played a very useful role. The party and the government should give them support and guidance, and no one in any quarter is allowed to push them out or deal blows to them. Working people's individual economic undertakings in urban and rural areas should be encouraged to develop properly within the scope prescribed by the state and under industrial and commercial administration as a necessary and useful supplement to the economy under public ownership.

He stressed: The management responsibility system must be conscientiously practiced in all state and collective enterprises. He said: With the development of agricultural products and the improvement of peasants' management ability, a new demand for joint management will inevitably arise. In accordance with the principles of being conducive to production and of voluntary participation and mutual benefit, we should make earnest efforts to promote various forms of economic associations. Some results have been achieved in practicing the economic responsibility system that was instituted recently in industrial and commercial enterprises. We should take a positive attitude, conscientiously sum up experiences and seek to formulate a set of systems and measures suited to the characteristics of our industrial and commercial enterprises and ensuring both the unified leadership of the state and bringing the initiative of enterprises and their workers and staff members into full play.

Hu Yaobang pointed out: Public ownership of the means of production is our country's fundamental economic system, which must not be undermined. Now in some rural areas, farmland and water conservancy facilities have been destroyed, forests excessively felled, collective reserves abolished and so on and so forth; some state industrial and commercial enterprises have violated the unified state plan, withheld without authorization those materials which should be distributed in a unified way, withheld profits which should be turned over to the state, evaded taxes, wantonly raised prices, blocked each other, and so on and so forth. Although these problems only involve a small number of people, they have seriously undermined the economy under public ownership and damaged the interests of the state and the people. They must be resolutely corrected.

Hu on Spiritual Civilization

[Hu Yaobang on Socialist Spiritual Civilization -- XINHUA headline]

[Text] Beijing, September 3 (XINHUA) -- Whether or not to strive for a high level of socialist spiritual civilization while working for a high level of material civilization concerns the success or failure of socialism in China, said Chairman Hu Yaobang of the Communist Party of China in his report to the 12th party congress on September 1.

Socialist spiritual civilization, he noted, constitutes an important characteristic of the socialist system and a major aspect of its superiority.

Hu Yaobang said that in the past, when referring to the characteristics of socialism, people used to stress the elimination of the system of exploitation, public ownership of the means of production, distribution according to work, planned to proportionate development of the national economy, and political power of the working class and other working people. Stress was also laid on another characteristic of socialism, the high development of the productive forces and a labour productivity higher than that under capitalism, as both a necessity and the end result of the development of socialism. All this is undoubtedly true, but it does not cover all the characteristics. Socialism must possess one more characteristic, that is, socialist spiritual civilization with communist ideology at its core. Without this, the building of socialism would be out of the question.

If the great task of building a socialist spiritual civilization guided by communist ideology in the whole society is overlooked, people will direct their attention merely to the building of material civilization or even merely to the pursuit of material gains, he said. In that case, it will be impossible to safeguard the socialist orientation of China's modernization, and China's socialist society will lose its ideals and objectives, its spiritual motivation and fighting will, and find itself unable to resist the inroad of corrupt influences.

Roughly speaking, Hu Yaobang said, socialist spiritual civilization consists of two aspects, the cultural and the ideological. The cultural aspect refers to the development of various cultural undertakings such as education, science, art and literature, the press and publication, broadcasting and television, public health and physical culture, as well as the raising of the level of general knowledge of the people. It should also include healthy, cheerful, lively and varied recreational and sports activities with mass participation so that people, while relaxing after intense work, will get a lofty spiritual treat and regulate their physical strength.

The socialist character of the spiritual civilization is determined by ideological education, he went on. This consists mainly of the following: the working-class world outlook and scientific theory of Marxism; communist ideals, beliefs and moral values; the outlook of being masters of the country and collectivism which correspond with the system of socialist public ownership; a concept of rights and duties and sense of organization and discipline which correspond with the socialist political system; devoted service to the people and a communist attitude in work; and socialist patriotism and internationalism. In a nutshell, it consists of, above all, revolutionary ideals, morality and discipline.

Hu Yaobang stressed that building the party ideologically is the pillar of the building of spiritual civilization in the whole society, and party members should first of all play an exemplary role in ideology and ethics.

He said that all party members and other advanced elements in society must continuously propagate advanced ideas and set an example by their own deeds so as to inspire more and more members of society to become working people with high ideals, moral character, culture and a sense of discipline.

Hu Yaobang said that it is imperative not only to help every member of society broaden his or her mental outlook but to establish and develop throughout society a new type of social relations which embody the socialist spiritual civilization.

He said it is necessary to do more to educate the masses of the people, and first of all the cadres and youth, in Marxism-Leninism and Mao Zedong Thought, in the history of the motherland and especially its modern history, in the programme, history and revolutionary tradition of the party, and in the constitution of the country and the rights and duties of citizens and civic morality. It is necessary to do more to educate people of all trades and professions in work responsibilities, ethics and discipline.

He said that the Central Committee of the party is determined to effect a fundamental turn for the better in social morality in the next five years. This means, in the main, the achievement of markedly better public order, generally improved attitudes towards all types of work and a conspicuous decline in the crime rate. It means putting an effective check on, and arousing universal contempt for, such unhealthy tendencies and practices as benefiting oneself at the others' expense, pursuing private interests at the expense of public interests, loving ease and hating work, putting money first in everything and unscrupulously pursuing personal enjoyment. And it means resolutely eliminating all those evils which had been stamped out long ago in New China but have now cropped up again.

Efforts must be exerted to step up the building of the socialist spiritual civilization and arouse, with revolutionary ideas and revolutionary spirit, the immense enthusiasm of the broad masses for building socialism, he said.

Hu on Attaining Communism

[Communism Is Not Dim Illusion, Says Hu Yaobang -- XINHUA headline]

[Text] Beijing, September 3 (XINHUA) -- Chairman Hu Yaobang of the Communist Party of China said communist ideas and actions have long been part of the actual life in China though the complete realization of communism as a social system would require generations of hard work.

The view that communism is but a "dim illusion" and that it "has not been tested in practice" is utterly wrong, he said.

In his report to the 12th National Congress of the C.P.C. on September 1, Hu Yaobang said communism is above all a movement, whose final objective is the realization of communism as a social system.

In China, he said, the spread of communist ideas and the movement for the ultimate realization of the ideal of communism began long ago in the period of the founding of the Communist Party of China and of the new-democratic revolution which it led. This movement has now brought into being a socialist society, which is the first phase of communism.

Hu Yaobang pointed out that there is communism everywhere in China's daily life, of which it forms an inseparable part. Inside and outside the party, there are so many heroic and exemplary people, so many who are ready to give their all, including their own lives, for the realization of revolutionary ideals. Do they do all this in return for material rewards? Is it not the lofty communist spirit that guides them?

He stressed that socialism is advancing steadily towards the goal of its higher phase -- communism. This advance depends not only on the increase of material wealth but also on the steady rise of people's communist consciousness and revolutionary spirit. At the present stage, it is of course impossible to expect each and every member of society to be a communist, but such a demand should be made on the party members and all other advanced elements. Furthermore, the broad masses should be educated and influenced with communist ideas.

Hu Yaobang said communist ideology is the core of socialist spiritual civilization without which it would be impossible to build socialism.

Hu on Socialist Democracy

["Hu Yaobang on Socialist Democracy" -- XINHUA headline]

[Text] Beijing, September 3 (XINHUA) -- Hu Yaobang, chairman of the Central Committee of the Communist Party of China, said one of the party's fundamental goals and tasks is to attain a high level of socialist democracy.

Reporting to the 12th party congress on September 1, he said the steady development of socialist democracy provides the guarantee and support for the building of socialist material and spiritual civilization.

He pointed out that much time and work are needed to establish the system and ways of socialist democracy. What China did in this respect was far from adequate and, moreover, was seriously undermined during the "Cultural Revolution". In recent years, socialist democracy has been restored and developed to some extent in the country. Continuous efforts must be made to reform and improve China's political structure and system of leadership in accordance with the principle of democratic centralism so that the people are better able to exercise state power and the state organs can lead and organize the work of socialist construction more effectively.

Hu Yaobang emphasized that socialist democracy should be extended to all spheres of life, political, economic, cultural and social; and it is necessary to improve democratic management in all enterprises and institutions and encourage mass participation in the management of community affairs at the grassroots level. Democracy should serve as a means by which the masses can educate themselves.

It is necessary to establish a relationship of equality between man and man and a correct relationship between the individual and society in accordance with the principles of socialist democracy, he said. The state and society guarantee legitimate freedom and rights to the citizens, who should in turn perform their duties to the state and society. While exercising their freedom and rights, citizens must not impair the interests of the state, society and the collective, or the freedom and rights of others. All measures adopted to develop socialist democracy must help to consolidate the socialist system and promote social production and other aspects of socialist construction. On no account will hostile, anti-socialist elements be given the freedom to carry out sabotage.

Elaborating on this subject, Hu Yaobang stressed the following points:

-- The development of socialist democracy should be closely linked with that of the socialist legal system so that socialist democracy is institutionalized and guaranteed by law;

-- And further efforts must be made to promote the socialist relations of equality, unity and mutual help among China's nationalities;

-- Continuous attention must be paid to giving play to the very important role of the united front;

-- Correctly understanding and handling the class struggle that still exists in China today is the key to guaranteeing the democratic rights of the overwhelming majority of the people and exercising effective dictatorship over a handful of hostile elements.

Hu on Class Struggle

["Hu Yaobang on China's Class Struggle at Present Stage" -- XINHUA headline]

[Text] Beijing, Sep 3 (XINHUA) -- Chairman Hu Yaobang, speaking at the 12th party congress, elucidated the characteristics and principal manifestations of China's class struggle at the present stage and explained the party's basic policy on this question.

He said there are still hostile elements of all shades attempting to undermine or overthrow the socialist system in the economic, political, ideological, cultural and other social spheres. The class struggle at the present stage chiefly takes the form of struggle by the people against these hostile elements.

He said the Central Committee of the party has repeatedly pointed out that following the elimination of the exploiting classes as such, most of the contradictions in Chinese society have ceased to have the nature of class struggle, and so class struggle no longer constitutes the principal contradiction.

However, within certain limits, class struggle will continue to exist for a long time to come and may even sharpen under certain conditions, Hu Yaobang said. This is not only because the pernicious influence left over by the exploitative system and classes cannot be eradicated within a short time, but also because the Chinese people have not achieved the goal of reunifying their motherland and still live in a complicated international environment in which the capitalist forces and other forces hostile to China's socialist cause will seek to corrupt the Chinese people and sabotage the country.

Therefore, he said, the Chinese people must prepare themselves mentally for a long-term struggle, see to it that the state of the people's democratic dictatorship exercises its function of dictatorship over enemies, and uphold the Marxist class viewpoint in handling current social contradictions and other social phenomena that have the nature of class struggle. This is the basic principle of the Central Committee with regard to the question of the class struggle in China at the present stage.

On the struggle against grave criminal offences in the economic sphere which is now being intensified in China, Hu Yaobang said that those hostile elements cause tremendous damage to economic construction, upset social stability, debase the moral standards of society and corrupt people's mind and life. They are termites jeopardizing the edifice of socialism. Similar disruptive activities occur in the political and cultural spheres as well.

Such destructive elements must be severely punished by law, he said.

In the new period of socialist development, he noted, China must, on the one hand, persist in the policy of opening to the outside world as well as in its policies for enlivening the economy domestically and, on the other, resolutely strike down the grave criminal activities in the economic, political and cultural spheres that endanger socialism. This principle must be adhered to without the slightest ambiquity, he added.

PLA Leaders on Deng, Hu Talks

[Text] Beijing, September 2 (XINHUA) -- Delegates from the Chinese People's Liberation Army today expressed full support for Deng Xiaoping's opening speech and Hu Yaobang's report at the 12th National Congress of the Communist Party of China.

Speaking at group discussions, battle-worthy veteran party members and Red armymen recalled the party's history and compared it with the present-day situation. Those who had attended the 7th and 8th party congresses were identical in the view that the current congress is a most important meeting since the 7th party congress and that the principles, policies and program to be formulated at the current congress will create a new situation in all fields of socialist modernization.

Xiao Ke, commandant and first political commissar of the P.L.A. Military Academy, joined the revolution in the 1920's. He said: "During the dozen years from the 7th congress to the 8th, our party led the people in driving the Japanese aggressors out of China, routing Chiang Kai-shek's army, establishing the New China and scoring brilliant successes in the three-year economic rehabilitation period and the First Five-Year Plan period."

Xiao Ke said the policies and program formulated at the 8th congress were correct. But they were later undermined, resulting in damages to the revolution and construction. "The policies outlined in Deng Xiaoping's speech and Hu Yaobang's report at the current congress," he noted, "show that we have returned to the road of Marxism-Leninism. As long as we adhere to these policies, we will certainly win greater victories before the end of this century."

Yang Yong, deputy chief of the General Staff of the P.L.A., compared the third plenum of the 11th Central Committee held in 1978 to the Zunyi meeting in 1935 in that the party returned to the correct line from a zigzag course. He said: "Our party has experienced both successes and setbacks, just as our army has both won victories and suffered defeats. Defeats can teach people more profound lessons. Our cause will flourish after this congress because our party has summed up experience and lessons in an all-round way since the third plenum of the 11th Central Committee."

Li Desheng, commander of the Shenyang units of the P.L.A., said that the C.P.C. has held 11 national congresses since its founding 61 years ago and is now holding its 12th congress. Of the previous 11 congresses, he said, the 7th congress gave people the deepest impression because it distinguished right from wrong and achieved unity among the comrades. The 12th congress will be a most important meeting since the 7th congress and will surely exert a tremendous impact on revolution and construction in China.

Yang Dezhi, chief of the P.L.A. General Staff, recalled the 7th party congress which he had attended. The 7th congress, he said, laid the foundation for the victory in the new-democratic revolution. The principles and program formulated at the 8th congress were also correct. But its a pity that they were not implemented.

He said: "Comrade Deng Xiaoping's opening speech and Comrade Hu Yaobang's report have indicated the goals of our struggle. Provided we work with one heart and one mind and make concerted efforts, we will surely win great victories."

Geng Biao, state councillor and minister of national defence, said that Deng Xiaoping's opening speech gave a brief summing-up of the party's experience and lessons. The ten-year turmoil seriously damaged China's economic construction, science, culture, and national defence. But, in turn, it served to expose the perniciousness of the "left" ideology to the full and helped bring about the solidarity and unity of the party and people as of now.

He said: "We have discarded the erroneous things and restored the true features of Mao Zedong Thought. The convocation of the 12th party congress will encourage us to advance courageously along the direction charted by Marxism-Leninism and Mao Zedong Thought. Having heard Hu Yaobang's report, we are full of confidence, and no force is able to prevent our forward march."

Delegates Discuss Report

[Text] Beijing, September 2 (XINHUA) -- Delegates to the 12th Chinese Communist Party Congress acclaimed Deng Xiaoping's opening speech and Hu Yaobang's report at the congress as being "realistic", "inspiring" and "outlining a clear orientation."

Animated group discussions started this morning and will continue for several days. Delegates from across the country unanimously agreed to the report's statement that China has effected a great historic change and to general tasks of the C.P.C. in the new historical period.

Delegates talked about the situation and progress in various provinces, municipalities and autonomous regions and were of the opinion that the tasks raised by the party Central Committee to create a new situation in all fields of socialist modernization can be fulfilled through hard work.

There were 1,600 delegates attending the congress, representing 39 million party members.

Tan Qilong, first secretary of the party committee of Sichuan Province, which has one-tenth of the country's population and almost the same percentage of the party members, summed up the strength behind China's great historic change.

He said: "Firstly, we have a party Central Committee that can be trusted, that is capable of handling all kinds of complicated situations and guiding the people over difficulties and hardships to win final victory; secondly, communism is of great vitality. It is the ideal social system and at the same time a practical movement in which we have been participating in order to realise this ideal of ours; thirdly, only by persisting in the scientific principles of integrating Marxist theories with practice and believing the people to be creators of history will the party be able to formulate the correct line, principles and policies and lead our cause to victory. This is our historical experience."

Tan pointed out: "Although we cannot say that we have fully grasped the laws governing China's socialist construction, China has found its own road of building socialism and practice has proved this road to be correct. We shall continue along this road steadfastly and go on exploring and creating."

Chen Guodong, first secretary of the Shanghai municipal party committee, described the objectives mapped out at the 12th national party congress as "most heartening" and "conforming to the aspirations of the people of the whole country".

He said Shanghai, the biggest industrial city in China, will shoulder a heavy task in accomplishing the magnificent goal. Shanghai is the birthplace of the Chinese Communist Party and the people in the city have a glorious tradition of revolutionary struggle. In the past three years, Shanghai has achieved steady progress in both industrial and agricultural production by implementing the principle of economic readjustment. In future, the people in Shanghai will make new contributions to the modernization of the motherland.

He said that in the four years since the third plenary session of the 11th party Central Committee, China has accomplished the arduous task of setting things right on the ideological front. "This demonstrated the greatness of our party and its political maturity," he added.

Delegates from Anhui Province, one of the first provinces effecting a breakthrough in the relations of production in agriculture, cited facts to show that Hu Yaobang's report tallies with realities.

Governor Zhou Zijian recalled the major reform of agricultural management system in Anhui after the slogan of "taking production as the central task" was raised in 1978.

"Over 98 percent of the production teams in the province have followed the method of fixing output quotas on the household basis. In the past three years, total agricultural output value increased at an average rate of 10.8 percent a year while total grain output grew at an average rate of 6.5 percent. The agricultural production responsibility system is being summed up and improved. Peasants' livelihood has markedly improved."

The governor said: "We in Anhui have achieved stability in policies, job responsibility system and leading bodies at various levels. All this is due to the correctness of the party's principles."

Delegates from Guangdong Province described the present period as "a golden period and one of the best periods" in New China.

Ren Zhongyi, first secretary of the Guangdong provincial party committee, said since the third plenary session of the 11th party Central Committee, because the party decided to implement special policies and flexible measures for Guangdong Province, the province has made remarkable progress in raising the level of its economic development and improving the people's living standards, thus greatly increasing the party's prestige.

"Cadres and people have generally welcomed the policies of opening to the outside world, invigorating the domestic economy and giving the localities and enterprises certain decision-making power," Ren Zhongyi said.

"The masses of cadres and people both inside and outside the party hope that we will adhere to the line of the third plenum of the 11th party Central Committee, maintain the continuity and stability of the basic policies and strive to bring about an even better situation," he said. "The 12th party congress will certainly keep to the correct line followed since the third plenum and substantiate and develop it."

Delegates from provinces along China's southeast coast, which are increasing their economic relations with foreign countries, have expressed great confidence in the future.

Xiang Nan, secretary of the Fujian provincial party committee, said that the basic policy set forth in Hu Yaobang's report is to create a new situation. This conforms to the actual conditions of the country and of Fujian Province, too. He pointed out that the report has put forward "a firm and clear-cut policy" regarding economic relations with foreign countries. This is very important for Fujian.

"We will unswervingly follow this policy," he said. In order to facilitate its economic exchange with foreign countries, the province is building harbor, airport, railway, telecommunications, power-generating and other projects.

The delegation of Fujian Province includes several young deputy governors well-versed in economic affairs. They all shared Xiang Nan's view.

Liu Shusheng, deputy secretary of the party committee of Yunnan Province, where people of more than 20 minority nationalities live in compact communities, said at a group discussion that for China as a whole as well as for Yunnan Province, the present period is one of the best since the founding of the People's Republic in 1949.

He said he has reached this conclusion as an eye-witness who has worked in Yunnan for more than 30 years.

Liu Shusheng said that since the third plenum of the 11th party Central Committee, Yunnan's gross agricultural output value has increased at an average annual rate of 5.8 percent, much higher than in the past. In 1976, when the "gang of four" was smashed, 30 of China's least developed counties were in Yunnan Province. In 1981 the number was reduced to two.

Deng Aleng, head of the Nujiang Lisu Autonomous Prefecture and member of the Yunnan delegation, said that upon his departure from Yunnan for Beijing, local party members asked him to tell the congress that they welcome the current policies and that they are determined to do a good job in production and in defending the border areas. The prefecture has a population of 300,000.

The Taiwan delegation, now staying at Zhongnanhai, the headquarters of the party Central Committee, warmly applauded Deng Xiaoping's speech and Hu Yaobang's report in which the reunification of the motherland was mentioned on six occasions.

Delegation leader Lin Liyun who is also president of the All-China Federation of Taiwan Compatriots, said she is full of confidence that Taiwan will return to the motherland. She said: "We are receiving Taiwan compatriots from abroad almost every day, many of them intellectuals. More and more compatriots come in order to get the first-hand knowledge of the mainland. Many of them have discarded misgivings and doubts after some observation. The policy of reunifying the motherland has found its way deep into the hearts of the people."

In group discussions, many veteran party members and Red armymen voiced their agreement to the program put forth at the 12th party congress and stressed that the Chinese People's Liberation Army is at one with the party Central Committee and is people's armed forces under the leadership of the party.

Zhang Jingfu Discussion

OW021659 Beijing XINHUA in English 1643 GMT 2 Sep 82

[Text] Beijing, September 2 (XINHUA) -- Zhang Jingfu, state councillor and minister in charge of the State Economic Commission, today expressed confidence that China will quadruple its annual industrial and agricultural output value by the end of this century.

The objective was put forward by party Chairman Hu Yaobang in a report to the 12th party congress which opened here on September 1.

Zhang Jingfu was speaking at a panel meeting discussing Hu Yaobang's report.

The minister, a member of the presidium of the party congress, said he based his statement on an all-round analysis of China's present economic conditions and its potential.

He said the Central Committee of the Chinese Communist Party and the State Council had on several occasions called meetings participated by leading members of various commissions and ministries and by responsible cadres from the provinces, autonomous regions and municipalities. Strategic steps and practicable measures for achieving the objective were worked out after repeated studies and discussions at these meetings.

He said that the decade between 1981 and 1990 is decisive for realizing the grand objective. It is a period for laying foundations, accumulating strength and readjusting the relations between the various sectors of the national economy so that they will be well-coordinated with each other. This will enable China's economy to make rapid progress in the following decade, the minister said.

While concentrating funds to undertake key construction projects, giving priority to energy industries and transport and communications, efforts will be made to improve the existing enterprises, he said.

China has 300,000 large, medium-sized and small industrial enterprises which provide a fairly solid economic foundation for further advance, Zhang Jingfu said. But the technical and managerial levels of these enterprises are fairly low and their economic performance is not very satisfactory. "This is a weakness," Zhang Jingfu said, "but it also shows there is a great potential for further development."

The minister said that in many respects, China's enterprises have not yet attained the best economic results registered after liberation. But many advanced enterprises, and not just a few of them, have come to the fore in various parts of the country. If China's enterprises all catch up with them, the total output value will be greatly increased.

China will replace or improve inefficient boilers, transformers, blowers, pumps and engines step by step to conserve energy, Zhang Jingfu said.

Zhang Jingfu described the enterprises as cells of China's economy. They should be full of vitality, he said. On the one hand, the initiative of the workers must be brought into full play to give the enterprises an inner dynamic force. On the other hand, pressure will be exerted on the enterprises from the outside by commending and giving economic awards to the advanced ones while closing down, merging or re-orienting the backward enterprises that are running at a loss.

The most talented scientists and technicians should direct their service to production, and cadres should improve their technical and managerial level, he added.

It is possible to achieve the objective set for the year 2,000 at the party congress if persistent efforts are made and work is well done, the minister concluded.

Anhui Governor's Remarks

[Excerpts] Beijing, 2 Sep (XINHUA) -- Zhou Zijian, an Anhui delegate attending the 12th CPC National Congress, said at a meeting of the Anhui delegation: The opening speech delivered by Comrade Deng Xiaoping at the 12th CPC National Congress and Comrade Hu Yaobang's report explicitly points out that we have made a historic change. This judgment conforms to the actual situation of China as well as the situation of Anhui Province.

He said: This historic change fully shows that the line, principles and policies adopted by our party since the 3d plenary session of its 11th Central Committee are completely correct. They are the fundamental guarantee for our winning great victories in eliminating chaos and restoring order.

Zhou Zijian said: To sum up, what the Anhui Provincial CPC Committee has done since the second half of 1977 is to adhere to the ideological line of seeking truth from facts, resolutely eliminate chaos and restore order and break away from the long and serious trammels of "leftist" mistakes in various fields. In order to eliminate chaos, restore order and improve the situation as a whole, we have specifically dealt with the fundamental problems which concern the overall situation.

He said: One of the fundamental problems is political. To deal with it, we have acted according to the arrangements of the central authorities to wage unremitting struggle to repair the damages done by the internal strife of those 10 years. We have concentrated our efforts on the following four tasks in the last few years:

1. Penetratingly waging a struggle to expose and criticize the Lin Biao and Jiang Qing counterrevolutionary clique;

2. Redressing a large number of cases of injustice and implementing the party's policies concerning cadres and intellectuals;

3. Readjusting, consolidating and strengthening the leading groups at all levels; and

4. Upholding the four basic principles and "Guiding Principles for Inner-Party Political Life" and waging resolute and constant struggle against various erroneous and unhealthy tendencies.

At the same time, we have achieved fairly good results in carrying out party work style and discipline education by citing typical cases of some cadres' serious violations of the law and discipline and those who abused power to seek special privileges. It is precisely because we have eliminated chaos and restored order in these fields that the political situation in Anhui over the last few years has been fairly stable [bi jiao wen ding 3024 6525 1353] and we have been able to implement the party's various principles and policies in a fairly good way.

Another fundamental problem is economic work. To deal with it, we have paid close attention to agriculture as the central link and firmly corrected longstanding "leftist" mistakes. In order to overcome the "leftist" mistakes in economic work, Anhui first made a breakthrough in agriculture. This has played an important role in making the overall economic situation and political situation take a favorable turn.

Zhou Zijian said: Since the 3d Plenary Session of the 11th CPC Central Committee, Anhui's total agricultural output value has been increasing at an average rate of 10.8 percent a year and total grain output has been increasing at an average rate of 6.5 percent a year. In the last 3 years, the province supplied the state with more than 3.7 billion jin of grain.

He said: Although we still have many problems and difficulties at present, we can overcome them and win victories if we adhere to the correct guiding principles and policies of the party Central Committee.

Ren Zhongyi's Remarks

[Excerpts] Beijing, 2 Sep (XINHUA) -- Ren Zhongyi, a delegate attending the 12th CPC National Congress, said during a discussion on Comrade Deng Xiaoping's opening speech and Hu Yaobang's political report: The party's 12th national congress will go down in history as a historic conference that carries forward the revolutionary cause and forges ahead into the future.

He said: I resolutely support the opening speech delivered by Comrade Deng Xiaoping at the congress and report made by Comrade Hu Yaobang on behalf of the party Central Committee. This national congress is the most important meeting since the 7th CPC National Congress.

He said: Since the central authorities decided to implement special policies and flexible measures in Guangdong after the 3d Plenary Session of the 11th CPC Central Committee, the situation in the province has improved remarkably in three respects:

1. The level of economic development has clearly been raised. In the last 3 years, agricultural and industrial developments were greatly accelerated. The total agricultural and industrial output value increased at an average rate of 7.4 percent a year. The total industrial output value alone rose at an average annual rate of 8.6 percent.

2. The people's living standard has clearly improved. In 1981, workers' wages increased by 40 percent and the peasants' income rose by 69 percent as compared with 1978.

3. The party's prestige has clearly been enhanced. At present, the workers, peasants and intellectuals generally praise the open-door policy, the efforts to enliven the economy and the added power of decision given to local authorities and enterprises. In short, they acclaim the road taken since the 3d Plenary Session of the 11th CPC Central Committee.

Ren Zhongyi said: The common aspiration shared by the cadres and the masses inside and outside the party is to adhere to the line adopted by the 3d Plenary Session of the 11th CPC Central Committee; continue and stabilize the basic policies; and further ehhance the excellent situation. The party's 12th national congress wants to adhere to and further develop the current experience gained since the 3d Plenary Session of the 11th CPC Central Committee. This is also the aspiration of the whole party and the people throughout the country.

Hunan Delegate's Remarks

[Excerpts] Beijing, 2 Sep (XINHUA) -- Liu Jiashi, secretary of the Changde Prefectural CPC Committee and delegate to the 12th CPC National Congress, said at today's panel meeting of the congress: In his report, Comrade Hu Yaobang presented a very good summation of our experience gained since the 3d Plenary Session of the 11th CPC Central Committee. It is precisely because Changde Prefecture adheres to the principles and policies adopted since the 3d Plenary Session of the 11th CPC Central Committee that remarkable changes have taken place in eight fields in the prefecture.

The changes are:

1. Since the implementation of the system of responsibility for agricultural production, the peasants' enthusiasm for production has been aroused and the grain production has increased by a big margin.

2. The output of oil-bearing crops has greatly increased. In the past 3 years, rapeseed output increased by 260 percent from 74 million jin to 170 million jin. In 1982 the rapeseed output further rose to 270 million jin.

3. The commune members have become well-off by working hard and a number of well-to-do production brigades and teams and households have emerged.

4. A large number of thatched huts have been replaced by brick houses.

5. The people's savings have increased and their purchasing power has clearly been enhanced.

6. The peasants have become more enthusiastic for learning and using the sciences.

7. The total output value of the light and textile industries has increased by nearly 60 percent.

8. The population growth rate continues to drop. In the 1970's the population in the prefecture increased at an average rate of 93,000 persons a year. In the first 2 years of the 1980's, the average annual increase in the population dropped to 33,000 persons.

Liu Jiashi firmly believes that as long as we march forward in the direction pointed out by the 12th CPC National Congress, the situation will become better and better and we surely can open up a new prospect for socialist construction.

Press Editorials

[Excerpts] Beijing, 1 Sep (XINHUA) -- JIEFANGJUN BAO, SHONGGUO QINGNIAN BAO and ZHONGGUO CAIMO BAO respectively carry editorials warmly greeting the convocation of the 12th CPC National Congress.

In its editorial entitled "A Congress of Great, Historic Significance," JIEFANGJUN BAO says today: The 12th CPC National Congress is convened at an important moment when our party and country have effected a great, historic transition. Since the downfall of the "gang of four," especially since the 3d Plenary Session of the 11th CPC Central Committee, we, under the leadership of the party Central Committee and through the concerted, arduous efforts of the whole party, the whole army and the people of all nationalities across the land, have accomplished the difficult task of setting the guiding ideology to rights and won a signal victory in setting right the practical work on all fronts. Thus, our country has now entered a new period of development.

The editorial points out: As on all other fronts throughout the country, our army has made remarkable achievements in building itself into a modernized, revolutionary regular army in the past few years, especially since Comrade Deng Xiaoping took charge of the work of the Military Commission. It has made new, important progress in military, political, logistics and other work. The army's political consciousness and understanding of policies have generally increased, and its sense of organization and discipline has been greatly strengthened. New achievements in scientific research for national defense have been made one after another, and army-government and army-people unity has been further strengthened. Cadres at various levels have noticeably increased their knowledge of modern military affairs and their ability in commanding, and large numbers of fighters have markedly raised their combat skills and scientific and cultural level. Thus, our army's fighting capability in meeting the requirements of modern warfare has noticeably improved.

The editorial says: The gratifying, excellent situation in our party, army and country and the tremendous achievements made in the past few years have most incontrovertibly proved that the party's lines, principles and policies laid down since the 3d Plenary Session of the 11th CPC Central Committee are suited to our country's conditions, accord with the common aspirations of the people, prove effective and are thus entirely correct. These have most incontrovertibly proved that the great cause of socialism-communism led by our party is of great, invincible vitality; despite the great damage done in the 10 years of internal disorder, our great cause of socialism-communism, relying on its own vitality, has once again embarked on a broad road of prosperity after surmounting difficulties and setbacks. These have most incontrovertibly proved that the collective leadership of our party is capable of having any complicated situation well in hand and solving various difficult problems and is a firm leading core in which we can have full trust. As the 12th CPC National Congress is convened, we look ahead and are full of confidence in victory. Our party, country and army are full of promise.

The editorial says: Ours is a people's army led by the CPC. Our army is an important component of the state apparatus. Our army has won all victories and made all achievements under the party's leadership. All army commanders and fighters should conscientiously study the documents and resolutions to be adopted soon by the 12th CPC National Congress. Inspired by the spirit of the congress, we should further raise our communist consciousness, have firmer faith in communism, further strengthen our communist spirit and work hard to strengthen the modernization and regularization of our revolutionary army and accomplish the mission assigned to our army by the 12th CPC National Congress.

In its editorial entitled "Hold High the Communist Banner," ZHONGGUO QINGNIAN BAO said yesterday: This congress will be undoubtedly of extremely great significance for bringing about a new, splendid situation in socialist modernization.

The editorial points out: Our young people today must clearly understand the lofty objective of communism, shoulder their historic responsibility and work earnestly and effectively in order to contribute to bringing about a new situation in all fields of socialist modernization.

In its editorial entitled "A Congress of Epoch-Making Significance," ZHONGGUO CAIMAO BAO said yesterday: Since the downfall of the "gang of four," especially since the 3d Plenary Session of the 11th CPC Central Committee, our party has led the people throughout the country in bringing about a great historic transition. As a result, our country has once again embarked on a broad road of sound development.

[Text] Beijing, September 2 (XINHUA) -- The Central Committee of the Romanian Communist Party sent a message yesterday to the 12th National Congress of the Communist Party of China, extending most cordial greetings on the occasion of the convocation of the congress. The message reads:

On behalf of the Central Committee of the Romanian Communist Party and its General Secretary Nicolae Ceausescu, we address most cordial congratulations and warm comradely greetings to the delegates to the Twelfth Congress of the Chinese Communist Party, to all Chinese Communists and friendly people.

Your party congress is an event of particular importance in the life of the Chinese Communists and the Chinese labouring people. It will review the work of building socialism in the People's Republic of China, and formulate a national program for development to ensure the prosperity and well-being of the Chinese people.

The Romanian Communists and our people are highly appreciative of the remarkable successes the industrious Chinese people have scored under the leadership of the Communist Party in attaining the objective set to itself, i.e. to turn its homeland into a strong socialist state with modern agriculture, industry, national defense, science and technology, and steadily raise the material and spiritual standards of living of the working people. We are also appreciative of the ever-more important role the People's Republic of China plays in the international life, in the settlement of the great issues facing the contemporary world, in the struggle against the imperialist policy of power politics and dictate, against colonialism and neo-colonialism, for the cause of the people's freedom and independence, for peace and social progress.

Sincerely rejoicing at the achievements scored by the working people of your country in socialist construction, we wish you, dear comrades, new and ever greater successes in the steady development and blossoming of your homeland.

Rallying themselves closely round the Romanian Communist Party headed by General Secretary Nicolae Ceausescu, the Romanian people are now working hard to carry out the program for the comprehensive development of socialist society and Romania's march to communism, to improve the quality of our work and living conditions, and to raise steadily the level of the material and spiritual life of the working people.

The Romanian Communist Party and Socialist Romania devote their efforts to building socialism successfully on the soil of Romania. At the same time they have consistently worked for a halt to the aggravation of the international situation, for the creation of an atmosphere of peace and understanding among people, for the exclusively political settlement through negotiations of conflicts between countries, for the complete elimination of the imperialist policy of power politics and military threats, for the resumption of the policy of detente and cooperation and of respect for national peace and independence.

Along the years, durable, mutually advantages relations of friendship and collaboration have developed between the Romanian Communist Party and the Chinese Communist Party, between the Socialist Republic of Romania and the People's Republic of China, on the basis of the firm principles of independence and sovereignty, full equality, mutual respect and international solidarity. The meetings between the leaders of our parties and states made a decisive contribution to the steadily ascending course of these relations, which opened each time new prospects to the deepening and expansion of the Romanian-Chinese friendship and collaboration in many fields. The particularly productive results of the talks occasioned by the official goodwill visit of Comrade Nicolae Ceausescu to the People's Republic of China last April emphasized once again the common wish to provide all conditions so that the Romanian-Chinese relations should powerfully develop in the future too, in keeping with the increased possibilities the socio-economic development of the two countries offers.

We reassert, on this occasion too, the firm confidence that by working together, in the spirit of the understandings reached at top level, the relations between the Romanian Communist Party and the Chinese Communist Party, between the Socialist Republic of Romania and the People's Republic of Chinawill witness a steady development, for the benefit and in the interests of the Romanian and Chinese peoples, of the general cause of socialism, independence, peace, progress and welfare of the peoples.

We wish you, dear comrades, full success in the proceedings of the Twelfth Congress of the Chinese Communist Party.

Spanish Communist Party

OW021230 Beijing XINHUA in English 1217 GMT 2 Sep 82

[Text] Beijing, September 2 (XINHUA) -- The Central Committee of the Spanish Communist Party sent a message of congratulation to the Central Committee of the Communist Party of China on August 30 on the opening of the 12th National Congress of the Chinese Communist Party.

The message said: "We Spanish Communists and the Chinese Communists have a friendship of long history and been united in the protracted common revolutionary struggle. We are following with great interest the work of your important congress. We believe that the various resolutions adopted at the congress will encourage Chinese Communists and the great Chinese people to unswervingly move forward towards socialist modernization of their country with selfless and creative work. China's modernization will make China one of the most advanced countries in the world. This is of decisive significance to the progress of mankind. We believe that to achieve the goal, immense efforts and sacrifices are needed. Meanwhile, the achievements you have made in the past and your indomitable will demonstrated in overcoming difficulties to uncompromisingly correct the serious past mistakes for gaining these achievements, have once again deeply convinced us that the Chinese people, under the leadership of the Chinese Communist Party, will surely win new victories in the new battle as they have done in the past."

It said: "We sincerely wish that the People's Republic of China would develop into a powerful, prosperous and modernized socialist country and find its due, outstanding place in the world, and thus making its contributions to the maintenance of peace, the most important task facing the people of the world today."

The message said: "We'd like to take this opportunity to express again our satisfaction at the relationship between our two parties which are permeated with mutual confidence, unity, sincerity and friendliness. The development of this relationship has substantiated our common view: The fact that the common points between the Chinese and Spanish Communists far surpass their differences, has enabled them to get united. The long and solid friendship between us will be strengthened in the direction favourable to both our parties and peoples for the sake of our common goal: peace, democracy and socialism."

LU DINGYI INTERVIEW RECALLS PARTY'S EXPERIENCES

HK021230 Beijing RENMIN RIBAO in Chinese 30 Aug 82 pp 1, 2

[Article by staff reporters Hu Bangxiu [5170 6721 4423] and Xu Peiqin [6079 0160 3830]: "Pleasant Expectations -- Visiting With Comrade Lu Dingyi"]

[Text] The party's 12th national congress will soon be held. This will be a congress of tremendous significance in our party's history. What expectations do our older generation of revolutionaries cherish for this congress? With this question in mind, we visited Comrade Lu Dingyi.

Our revered Comrade Lu's room is furnished simply, with only a desk and a few sofas. This is where he works and receives visitors. After we sat for a few minutes, our revered Comrade Lu came out smiling. He kindly shook hands with all of us. We asked about his health and he said with a strong Wuxi Brogue, smiling, "Very well, very well. As you can see, am I not very well?"

Our revered Comrade Lu is now 76 years old. His hair has turned white, but he looks healthy and full of spirit and does not look like a man who suffered 13 years of imprisonment. His secretary told us that during the past few years, because of the rapid and healthy development of the situation, our revered Comrade Lu has had ease of mind. Therefore, he has not only recovered from his illness, but has improved his health and become much stronger. Every day, he very carefully reads central documents and central and local papers and will not go to sleep until midnight....

Our revered Comrade Lu is now one of the few veteran revolutionaries in our party. He joined the youth league when he was 25 and was admitted into the party the same year. For over 50 years, he carried out underground work in white areas, was sent to Moscow as the representative of the Chinese CYL to the "Youth Communist International," took part in the Long March and conducted political work in the army. For most of his life, he has carried out propaganda and theoretical work for the party. He is a theoretical and propaganda worker familiar to people throughout the country.

Since the 3d Plenary Session of the 11th CPC Central Committee, our party has entered a period of resurgence. On the basis of summing up the experiences of the 32 years since the founding of the PRC, we have clarified the orientation of our progress and adopted a series of policies, thus giving rise to a new situation of vigorous development throughout our country.

Our revered Comrade Lu affirmed the achievements that our party has scored on all the fronts over the past few years and said with relief and gratification: "Since the 3d Plenary Session of the 11th CPC Central Committee, our party's line has been correct and our progress has been fast." He cited what had been happening in our rural areas as an example and said that the speed of change over the past few years was unexpectedly quick. This has proved that our party's policies are correct. (Conversely, this has also proved that at the end of the cooperation period, some compulsory means were resorted to.) Now we are implementing the responsibility system to give full play to the peasants' initiative. Once production has been developed, our peasants will follow the trend of the times and in due course voluntarily combine themselves. This will be a voluntary cooperation among the peasants and it will be developed in various forms and at different times. When the time comes, we must remember well that we should firmly oppose any coercion or commandism.

At the request of these reporters, our revered Comrade Lu briefly recalled the party's national congresses that he had attended. In May 1927, he attended the Fifth CPC National Congress in Wuhan. At the seventh CPC National Congress in Yenan in 1945, he was elected a member of the Central Committee. At the Eighth CPC National Congress in Beijing in 1956, he was elected an alternate member of the Political Bureau and a secretary of the Central Secretariat. After the beginning of the "Great Cultural Revolution" he was excluded from taking part in any political activities. At the 4th Plenary Session of the 11th CPC Central Committee, he was a member of the CPC Central Committee.

Throughout the talk, our revered Comrade Lu did not mention a single word about his personal suffering from the cruel persecution by Lin Biao and the "gang of four," but he paid extremely great attention to summing up the party's historical experiences. He cited the three inner-party struggles to expound on the importance of criticism and self-criticism.

The first was the struggle against Chen Duxiu's line.

Chen Duxiu was our party's first general secretary and he achieved merits in establishing the party. In conducting the work of forming a united front with the KMT, Chen pursued a rightist capitulationist line. At that time, there were people inside the party who put forth their opinions and suggestions to Chen Duxiu, but Chen practiced paternalism in the party, clung obstinately to his own erroneous course and refused to listen to these opinions and suggestions. At a meeting of the party, Chen tore to pieces and threw away the written suggestions handed to him by Comrade Ren Bishi on behalf of the CYL Central Committee. This showed his disgusting paternalist work style. Without criticism and self-criticism, our party lost its combat effectiveness and the great revolution ended in failure.

Our revered Comrade Lu pondered silently for a while and then said slowly that, judging by the methods by which the line struggle was carried out, this struggle should be regarded as having been carried out in a relatively normal manner. After the failure of the great revolution, Chen Duxiu was dismissed from the post of general secretary, but the party did not punish him for his errors.

It was because he later united with the Trotskyite section and set up a "Trotskyite and Chen Duxiu liquidation section" that he was expelled from the party. This was correct punishment.

The second was the struggle against Wang Ming's line.

The situation this time was greatly changed. Relying on the support of Mi Fu [5717 1133], chief of the Eastern Affairs Department of the Comintern, Wang Ming had formed a small section inside the party and the members of this section called themselves "100 percent Bolsheviks." They branded many comrades who did not agree with the views of Mi Fu and Wang Ming and who would not follow their line as "secret agents," "advocators of compromise" and "advocators of peasant line" and carried out a ruthless struggle against and dealt merciless blows at them. As a result, many comrades were dismissed, expelled, arrested and even executed or persecuted to death. Terror existed everywhere inside the party and the revolutionary force was wrecked under attacks both from outside and within the party; thus, the Red Army was forced to begin the Long March. It was not until the Zunyi meeting, that this dangerous trend was reversed.

We know that our revered Comrade Lu's wife, Tang Zhenyi, was cruelly killed by the enemy. This was also the result of the ruthless struggle and merciless blows of Wang Ming's line. However, our revered Comrade Lu did not mention his personal suffering. On the contrary, he said in a comforting tone: "During the rectification movement in 1942, under the leadership of Chairman Mao, the party did not deal with the Wang Ming clique in the manner Wang Ming himself upheld. On the contrary, it adopted the method of criticism and self-criticism and conducted careful and profound ideological work to make those who were members of the Wang Ming clique and those who followed Wang Ming understand their mistakes in order to unite them. Throughout the party, all those who were members of the Wang Ming clique and all those who followed Wang Ming, except Wang Ming himself and his wife, conducted self-criticism. Those who opposed and resisted Wang Ming's line also conducted self-criticism for their own shortcomings. By so doing, we thoroughly expose and criticized Wang Ming's line and achieved unprecedented political and ideological unity throughout the party. On this basis, the party raised new tasks at its seventh national congress and told the whole party to look ahead in unity. We achieved victory over the whole country in only 4 years after the Seventh CPC National Congress. Such a fast speed of development was something people had never expected."

Our revered Comrade Lu believed that the third struggle was the struggle against the "Great Cultural Revolution." The "Great Cultural Revolution" was similar in nature to the period of Wang Ming line.

Like the Wang Ming clique that claimed to be "100 percent Bolshevik," Lin Biao and the "gang of four" claimed to be "simon-pure rebels who most faithfully upheld Mao Zedong Thought." Wang Ming branded people as "advocators and wrong lines" and Lin Biao and Jiang Qing also branded people as "capitalist roaders," "reactionary academic authorities," and so forth. The "overall dictatorship" that they practiced was the same as the Wang Ming clique's ruthless struggle and merciless blows.

Our revered Comrade Lu seriously summed up the bitter lessons from these three great struggles and said that our party needs criticism and self-criticism. Without criticism and self-criticism, our party will hold no hope and will perish.

When the theme of our talks returned to the 3d Plenary Session of the 11th CPC Central Committee, our revered Comrade Lu again smiled with gratification. He thought that this session marked a historical turning point. It restored the party's democratic centralism, brought order out of chaos, established anew the party's correct ideological, political and organizational lines and scored universally acknowledged great achievements. He especially happily pointed out that last year at the 6th Plenary Session of the 11th CPC Central Committee, our party very satisfactorily began conducting criticism and self-criticism by summing up the historical experiences since the founding of the PRC. Now, the 7th plenary session of the central committee has already made adequate preparations for the 12th CPC national congress.

We are confident that the 12th CPC National Congress will surely be a success and our party will surely become an even more vigorous leader in the fight to lead the people throughout the country to go all out and open up new prospects for socialist modernization. We are now forging ahead triumphantly, but we should pay particular attention to guarding against conceit and impetuosity and work cautiously and conscientiously. He said: "I have been in the party for 57 years, during which time I have made many contributions and committed many mistakes. When I recall the past, I find that I was very childish at that time, but I do not know why I did not take part in implementing the three erroneous lines. If I had, I would have committed even more mistakes. There are many other comrades like me who have committed some mistakes. During the decade of turmoil, many people could not help but commit mistakes. Making sincere criticism and self-criticism will facilitate the party's unity. This is called 'getting rid of the baggage in order to march forward with a light pack.'?"

The sun was setting and twilight came stealthily. Our revered Comrade Lu and the reporters went into the courtyard and had pictures taken together. He humorously said to the cameraman: "You take command and we will obey you."

Finally, we shook hands with our revered Comrade Lu and departed. As our car pulled away, we looked back and saw him waving to us with smile on his face.

RENMIN RIBAO ON NEAR, DISTANT COMMUNISM

[Article by Chen Ping [7115 1627]: "The 'Far' and 'Near' Distance of Communism"]

[Text] We know that Lang Ping is the "iron hammer" of the Chinese women's volleyball team and is famous at home and abroad. But what may not be known is that she is one of the youngest deputies to the 12th CPC National Congress. We are familiar with her heroic feats in volleyball matches, yet we may not understand her inner feelings. At the beginning of this year, she made a very good speech at a meeting of the party branch to discuss her admission as a full member. She said: "Our party's goal of struggle is to realize communism. In the past, I thought that it was very abstract to realize communism. At present, I find that to realize communism is something both in the distant future and near at hand. This is because in realizing communism, we must start with the undertakings we are engaged in. The building of the big edifice of communism requires each Communist Party member and each citizen to do his part."

These words, poured from the bottom of her heart, clearly reveal the inner feelings of a young communist fighter. As an athlete, she regards playing volleyball as her undertaking and winning world championships and glory for the country as her final goal. As a Communist Party member, her final goal is to realize communism and to do her part in building the big edifice of communism. There is no direct relation between playing volleyball and communism, but Lang Ping has integrated them harmoniously. In her eyes, victories won on volleyball courts involve the motherland's prestige. They can vitalize the nation's spirit, encourage the people and give them strength. Winning victories is a way to do her part. Therefore, she started with her own work, started without delay, bit by bit, and exerted her utmost to realize the concrete targets which she set for herself. This spirit of exerting herself to the utmost shines with the brilliance of communist ideology. Every Communist Party member should have this spirit.

"To struggle for communism throughout one's lifetime" is not an empty slogan, nor is it a mere oath made when one is admitted into the party. It should be earnestly practiced by each Communist Party member. There are 39 million party members in our country. As far as social division of work is concerned, there are party members in each of the 360 trades or professions. Each trade or profession is to serve the people. In this sense, to do one's own job well is to do one's part in building the big edifice of communism and then communism will become something "near at hand," as Lang Ping put it.

If we look around, we will find that some Communist Party members have not put, or have not consistently put, into practice the oath they made when they were admitted into the party.

Communist ideals are excluded from their words and deeds. They even adhere to a philosophy of life that runs counter to communism. Not long ago, a county CPC committee secretary, who had degenerated into a wine mechant, was exposed in Henan. His theory on life is: "The reason why I came here from a distant place to become an official is to have better food, drinks and clothes." Although people with this outlook of life may be Communist Party members in name, their thoughts have nothing to do with communism. We can never expect them to do their part in building the big edifice of communism. In their eyes, the realization of communism is something distant and indistinct and only seeking personal material gains is something "near at hand." They stress "material benefits" and seek an easy life. They only take delight in talking about "positions, housing, money and children." Some of them even take advantage of being a member of a ruling party, gain personal interests at the expense of the masses, the collectives and the state and violate the law and discipline.

Of course, communist ideals are not completely severed from material things. Communist Party members should be revolutionary idealists and at the same time revolutionary realists, but they should never be egoists of pragmatists. Comrade Tao Zhu said: "A man who is governed by materials and a man who has very strong 'material desires' must be a man without ideals and a vulgar and miserable person whose spiritual life is devoid of meaning." If a Communist Party member does what he can to get better food, drinks and clothes and thinks that he is disillusioned and has come to understand the "real purpose" of life, he is in fact very mean and miserable. Communist Party members who do not do their part in building the big edifice of communism cannot remain in the party because they will directly affect the party's combat strength, impair the party's image among the masses and damage the prestige of communism. In the past, we communists convincingly disseminated communism without exemplary deeds. Today, it is all the more necessary to manifest communist ideas with our own exemplary deeds. Only in this way can we increase the influence of communism and bring along the broad masses of people to do their part in building the big edifice of communism.

COMPUTER SCIENTISTS AID NUCLEAR, SPACE PROGRAMS

OW020955 Beijing Domestic Service in Mandarin 1200 GMT 31 Aug 82

[Text] China has formed a scientific and technological corps of young computer physicists who have made remarkable contributions to China's development of atomic and hydrogen bombs, the launching of manmade satellites and long-range carrier rockets and the development of the petroleum industry. China held its first national academic exchange meeting on computer physics [ji suan wu li 6060 4615 3670 3810] in Beijing on the eve of the convocation of the 12th CPC National Congress. Of the more than 100 papers presented at the meeting, more than 70 percent were written by middle-aged and young scientists and technicians trained by our party. These papers showed China's latest achievements in computer physics and the comparatively high level China has attained in computer physics. Computer physics is a branch of applied science using computers as a tool to mathematically solve physics problems. It is comprehensively used in various fields including atomic energy, space flight, aviation, the petroleum industry, meteorology and water conservation.

HONGQI ON SOCIALIST, CAPITALIST EMPLOYMENT

HK030727 Beijing HONGQI in Chinese No 16, 16 Aug 82 pp 46-47

[Article by Chu Zhengkun [0443 2973 0981]: "What Is the Difference Between the Urban Youths Waiting for Jobs in our Country and Unemployment in Capitalist Countries?"]

[Text] Outwardly there are some similarities between the urban youths waiting for jobs in our country at present and unemployment in capitalist countries, and yet these two aspects are different in nature.

First, these two aspects have different origins and different natures. Unemployment is a natural product of the capitalist system. Under the capitalist system, following the development of production and the improvement of the organic formation of capital, the proportion of changeable capital in gross capital is becoming less and less with each passing day and the demand on labor force by capital is also relatively decreasing. At the same time, the supply of labor force in general will increase following the development of capitalism. The supply of labor force exceeds the needs of capital and this situation consequently gives rise to enormous unemployment. At the same time, the existence of excessive unemployment constitutes an indispensable condition for the existence and development of the capitalist mode of production. Therefore the existence of enormous unemployment forms an invisible pressure on employed workers while capitalists make use of this situation to step up their exploitation of workers. In addition, a capitalist economy is characterized by cyclical crises and during these crises a great number of workers are sacked. But on the other hand, during economic upsurges, many workers are employed again. Capitalist production needs a reserve of industrial workers that are subject to exploitation at any time. Therefore, the existence of unemployment is an objective need and a natural consequence of the capitalist system. Marx termed this situation as a relative surplus of population. That is to say, relative to the needs of the production of surplus value by capitalists, the supply of labor force exceeds demand, some workers cannot be included in the process of production and consequently they become "surplus" persons in society.

Ours is a socialist country that is based on the system of public ownership of production. The purpose of our production is to meet the increasing needs of people's material and cultural life. At the same time, socialism practices a planned economy, and not only is the production of goods and materials carried out in a planned way, the growth of population is also put under control and these situations provide the possibility of eliminating unemployment and solving the employment of all the laborers. The present situation in which some young people in urban areas are waiting for jobs has been mainly caused by the mistakes we made over the past long period in our guiding ideology and work. We are undertaking socialist construction in a country which is poor and yet with a huge population. Therefore in order to solve the employment question, it is imperative to spare no efforts to develop production and at the same time to control the growth of population so that our population will grow according to plan. But we made "leftist" mistakes in our guiding ideology for a long period in the past and made one mistake after another in our work. On the other hand, the proportions of the national economy were seriously out of balance. As a result, the development of our economic construction was slowed down to affect our ability to absorb the newly added labor force. Furthermore, we did not pay enough attention to training laborers while our education was divorced from employment and this situation has resulted in the fact that there are some jobs with no one to do them. On the other hand, we did not pay attention to the proportionate development between the production of goods and materials and the growth of population. As a result, the development of production has been out of step with the growth of population. This is the basic reason why at present some youths in urban areas are waiting for employment to be arranged for them. With regard to ownership systems, for quite a long period in the past we only paid attention to the system of ownership by the whole people, neglected the system of ownership by the collective and squeezed and impaired the individual economy. In the industrial structure, we paid attention to heavy industry and neglected light industry, commerce and service trades.

Such irrational ownership structure and industrial structure have seriously limited the employment of the newly increased labor force in urban areas. The policy of "unified guarantee, unified arrrangement" for employment that has been implemented for a long time has resulted in a wrong understanding that only working in state-owned enterprises with an "iron rice bowl" is considered as employment and that individual operations and cooperative operations do not constitute employment. Thus the road for employment has become narrower and narrower. In fact, the situation in which part of the population in urban areas is waiting for jobs has no definite connection with the socialist system, nor is its nature that of surplus population as mentioned by Marx.

Second, the two aspects have different methods for solving problems and different prospects. Many years have passed since the bourgeoisie and their representatives declared that they would "eliminate unemployment" and "realize full employment;" but they have not done so; nor is it possible for them to do so. The bourgeoisie will be compelled to take some moderate measures and decrease unemployment to some extent only when the number of the jobless is so excessive as to cause serious social problems, large-scale strikes and to seriously threaten the capitalist politico-economic system. But they can in no way really solve unemployment. In order to eliminate unemployment it is imperative to overthrow the capitalist system.

The current problem of waiting for jobs in our country is a temporary phenomenon that is caused by mistakes in our work. This problem can be completely resolved as long as we are able to correct our ideology, carry out correct principles and policies and display the advantages of the socialist system. Since the 3d Plenary Session of the 11th CPC Central Committee, the party and government have paid much attention to the problems of youths in urban areas waiting for jobs. Finally, a series of correct principles and policies have been implemented such as readjusting the structure of the ownership system, developing the collective economy in a big way and appropriately developing the individual economy; readjusting the industrial structure, paying attention to the development of light industry and developing commerce and service trades in a big way; readjusting employment policy and opening up more ways for arranging employment. Thanks to these policies and measures, considerable achievements have been made. From 1978 to 1981, employment has been arranged for 34 million people across the country. Many medium and small towns across the country have basically resolved the problem of employment. Of course, in order to thoroughly solve the problems of employment in our country, we must spare no effort to develop production and control the growth of population in a planned way so that the reproduction of population and labor force will accord with the development of the whole national economy.

LIAOWANG SEES NEED FOR MORE PROFESSIONALS

HK030144 Beijing CHINA DAILY in English 3 Sep 82 p 4

[Article by Zhu Dai in LIAOWANG: "China Needs Many More Qualified Professionals"]

[Text] The number of scientific and technologically-trained people in our country has expanded rapidly since liberation, according to recent statistics.

The number of professionals in the natural sciences and technology working in state-run units has leapt from 420,000 in 1952 to 5.710.000 last year. a 13-fold increase in 30 years. Almost one in five of these has reached senior or middle rank.

The country's professionals work in five main fields: engineers number over two million. medical workers almost 1.7 million. teachers almost 1.3 million, agricultural technicians over 300,000 and scientific researchers about 330,000. Almost 44 per cent have graduated from university, college or an equivalent academic institution.

Inadequate

Their average age is 39. Among them, three per cent are over 56, 60.2 per cent between 36 and 55, and 36.8 per cent under 35.

Considering the vastness of China, the number of professionals at hand is still inadequate. At the same time, they are not evenly spread across the country. And many are still in need of further education and trading.

The following areas warrant attention:

-- There is a severe shortage of agricultural technicians. For every 10,000 people working in agriculture, there are only four agricultural technicians and only two agricultural technicians for every 10,000 mu (666 hectares) of cultivated land.

This is a serious obstacle to the scientific development of agriculture.

-- Many are recruited into scientific or technological jobs with no professional training. For example, out of the 196,000 medical workers recruited nationwide last year, just 103,000 were graduates from medical colleges or schools. That means out of 10 new recruits into medical work have had no proper medical training.

-- Many scientific or technological administrators are short of professional knowledge, and very little is done to remedy this by providing professional training after someone has entered a job.

Heavy Duties

Scientific researchers and technicians often find that in middle age they face a heavy burden at work and financial difficulties at home. Their average age is 39. While they find themselves under heavy work pressure -- providing the backbone for scientific and technological progress in the country and having to set a high example -- they face heavy family responsibilities and earn comparatively poor salaries.

Counting bonuses and other sideline incomes, they normally earn less than ordinary workers of the same age. Often their health deteriorates under heavy work pressure.

These problems have attracted the attention of the government departments concerned, and efforts are being made to solve them.

HONGQI VIEWS YOUNG CHINESE WORKING CLASS

OW020833 Beijing XINHUA in English 0739 GMT 1 Sep 82

[Text] Beijing, September 1 (XINHUA) -- Over 60 million young workers under 35 have become the main body of the Chinese working class and is a worthy generation full of hope, according to a signed article in the latest issue of "RED FLAG" published here today.

Entitled "Correctly Analyze the New Generation of Our Working Class," the article says that the young workers, who account for 60 percent of the total industrial work force of the country, "are intrinsically good," and their shortcomings and weak points "can be overcome through education and help."

Based on a wealth of data gathered from surveys and statistics, the article analyzes the characteristics of the young workers, and concludes that about 20 percent of them are advanced workers; another 50 percent are workers who put high demands on themselves; still another 25 percent could fulfil their production quotas but lack high ideals and proper motivation; about five percent lead a life devoid of meaning, work in a slapdash manner and often commit mistakes.

Less than five young workers per thousand, it adds, are violating the law and discipline, and receiving punishment.

Stressing that the majority of the young workers support the party's lines, principles and policies and have a feeling for the party and socialism, the article notes that some veterans often think that the younger generation is less conscientious than they themselves, who experienced oppression and exploitation in the old society. But it is wrong to measure youth against the standards of the veterans, the article says.

Unlike their forerunners who came from poor peasant backgrounds and handicraft workers in the countryside, most of the young workers are from workers families in the cities and have attained a higher educational level, compared with their predecessors, the article says.

Describing the young workers as "active in the front line of production," the article says, any complaints of their diligence should be viewed from the perspective that they are quick to learn new techniques and are generally accepting of new things. Thus, they accomplish things much quicker, and tend to [word indistinct] prompt correction of certain irrational regulations.

The article attributes certain unhealthy tendencies among the young workers to the evil effect of the "Cultural Revolution," but says that some difficulties are also related to "the faults in our work."

Times have changed in China, the article says. Some traditional methods of ideological work, such as "contrasting past misery with present happiness," will seldom move the young people. Rather, today's realities call for a correct analysis of the younger generation and improvement in political work with them, educating them in accordance with their special needs and charateristics.

SAMPLE FERTILITY RATE SURVEY CONDUCTED

[Text] Beijing, September 2 (XINHUA) -- The State Family Planning Commission started a sample investigation of China's fertility rate by surveying one out of a thousand women throughout the country yesterday, according to the commission authorities.

Our country has really entered a period of restoration. Practice has proved that the line, principles and policies of our party since the third plenary session are correct and that our party possesses immense vitality. Our party can certainly lead our people to make new breakthroughs in work. Our party is marching toward the great goal of communism with indomitable spirit and immense vitality. The 12th CPC National Congress, which is being convened at this moment, shoulders the hope of the party and our people. Under the guidance of Marxism-Leninism-Mao Zedong Thought, this congress will victoriously summarize the historic transformation which took place after the smashing of the gang of four, especially since the 3d plenary session of the 11th Central Committee. The congress will summon the wisdom of the whole party to formulate and propose the out-line and the tasks of endeavor in the new historical period in order to make all the comrades in our party and all our people be more united in their thinking and have their goal better defined. The new party constitution to be passed in the 12th CPC National Congress will demand more vigorous efforts from the cadres and the members of the party in order that the construction of the party can be promoted to a new level and be well adapted to the requirements and characteristics of the new historical period. A new central committee, a new Central Advisory Committee and a new Discipline Inspection Commission will be elected in the 12th CPC National Congress so as to organizationally guarantee the collective leadership of the party and help in the replacement of old cadres by new cadres in the new historical period. All these have a close relationship with the cause of socialist modernization. There is no doubt that they exert extremely important influence upon the latter. The 12th CPC National Congress will become another great milestone in the history of our party. All comrades of our party and all our people are very excited in celebrating the inauguration of the 12th CPC National Congress. SHANXI RIBAO DESCRIBES XIYANG COUNTY CHANGES

[Report: "Eight Major Changes Occur in Xiyang County in 3 Years" -- capitalized passages published in boldface]

[Text] Since the 3rd Plenary Session of the 11th CPC Central Committee, the people of Xiyang County have courageously emancipated their mind, earnestly implemented party principles and policies and unremittingly eliminated the "leftist" influence. They have proceeded from the actual conditions, worked in line with laws and become rich through hard work. In the last 3 years, eight major changes have occured in this county.

KITCHEN RANGES HAVE BECOME SMALLER. Before 1978, the 404 production brigades throughout the county, without exception, all practiced egalitarian measures -- "sharing food from the same big pot," with brigades acting as accounting units.

The egalitarian workpoint-recording measure was adopted in all 20 communes in this county. After the 3rd Plenary Session of the 11th CPC Central Committee, the relations of production were adjusted step by step in accordance with actual conditions. By the end of last year, the number of accounting units had increased to 622, among which, 303 were based on production teams. In 1978, among the 20 brigades of Dazhai Commune (including farms run by the commune), 16 brigades practiced accounting on a commune basis. Now, according to the local development level of productive forces, all of these brigades have changed this measure. The measure of evaluating work and allotting workpoints initiated by Dazhai brigade has also been replaced by the production responsibility system in various forms. In this county, 23 percent of production teams are now practicing the "double-contract system;" 60.2 percent introduced a measure of assigning responsibilities to each group or laborer and linking remuneration to output; 15.6 percent were contracting on a specialization basis; and 0.7 percent adopted a system of "three smalls and five quotas" and calculating workpoints on the basis of quota fulfillment.

THE SCOPE OF OPERATION HAS BECOME LARGER. The previous small scope of concentrating solely on grain production has become the present large scope of diversification, thus changing the face of this county where peasants were poor in spite of high output. The gross agricultural income of this county last year increased 12.2 percent over 1978, of which 55.6 percent was the income from diversified operations. This item of income increased 42 percent over the figure of 3 years ago. There are rich resources of coal, iron and alumina in Sandu Commune. But when the campaign of learning from Dazhai prevailed, they were only allowed to grow grain and not allowed to handle mining. In those days, income from industry and sideline occupations only accounted for 21 percent of the gross income. In recent years, they have given play to their advantages and widely opened their financial sources. Income derived from industry and sideline production has increased by nearly 200 percent over that in 1978. This year, Dazhai brigade also opened a new coalpit and a new alumina field. As the scope of operation becomes larger, peasants now can diversify their contribution to the state. When purchasing grain, the state now can also buy soybean, millet and other items. Last year, the whole county sold over 29,000 pigs and 75,000 jin of eggs to the state, an increase of 8.8 percent and 66.3 percent, respectively. From January through July this year, they sold over 60,000 rabbits, an increase of 230 percent over the same period of last year.

SIDELINE OCCUPATIONS ARE BECOMING MORE PROSPEROUS. Before the 3rd Plenary Session of the 11th CPC Central Committee, peasants' household sideline occupations were censured as remnants of capitalism, which were subject to criticism for many years and were banned many times. At most, a person was allowed to rear one chicken and one rabbit and a household was allowed to rear one pig and plant one tree. People said: "Except for a bed and a bed roll, a bowl and a pair of chopsticks, everything is a curse." After the 3rd plenary meeting of the Central Committee, the county assigned 627,000 mu of private plots and fodder field, together with 58,000 privately-owned trees, to 57,000 peasant households. Per capita peasant household sideline income increased from 14 yuan in 1978 to 42 yuan last year. From January through July this year, per capita sideline income was 30 yuan.

MEALS ARE BECOMING MORE APPETIZING. With the rational adjustment of the internal structure of agriculture, peasants' food has also changed. In 1978, millet and beans accounted for only 25 percent of the peasants' staple food; while last year, this item already accounted for 40 percent.

Last year, the county grain department sold about 10 million jin of wheat (half of which was changed for corn produced by peasants) and 580,000 jin of rice to rural areas. In 1978, peasants only consumed 1.8 jin of oil per capita, but this item increased last year to 5 jin.

PEASANTS' PURSES ARE BECOMING FULLER. In 1978, the real per capita income in rural areas of this county was only 119 yuan, but it reached 170 yuan last year. In 1978, per capita bank deposits in rural areas was only 33 yuan, while it increased to 61 yuan last year.

MARKETS ARE BECOMING BRISKER. Since the 3rd Plenary Session of the 11th CPC Central Committee, fair trading, which was criticized and banned, has been restored. In the county seat alone fair trading marketplaces have increased to 5 and stalls now number over 300. In the "1 August" temple fair, there were more than 570 stalls and the turnover amounted to over 617,000 yuan.

PEOPLE HAVE RAISED THEIR COURAGE. With the gradual emancipation of the people's mind, peasants' enthusiasm for getting rich is surging higher and higher. There are now 1,068 rich households who make their fortunes by hard work in this county. Zhao Yongchang, a peasant in Beizhanggou Brigade, Zhanshang Commune, in addition to taking part in collective production, is now raising 14 cows, 1 pig, 25 chickens and 40 rabbits at home. It is expected that he can make an income of several thousand yuan this year. Now, cadres and masses have more clearly recognized the road that leads to making peasant families well-off. The county is now building 22 bases for diversification which are expected to be examples for making fortunes.

CADRES ARE MORE AMIABLE. The masses had said before that what the cadres did was to control the people, and now, what they do is to overcome poverty. In the past, the measures they adopted were criticism, struggle and imposing fines; now, their methods are taking the lead, giving help and unfolding propaganda. This is precisely the fact. Cadres at all levels now pay close attention to the interests of the masses and work conscientiously for the people. When coming to the villages, they do not seek "typical cases" to criticize and struggle against the people as they did before; instead, they help communes and brigades to implement policies, correct "leftist" mistakes, perfect responsibility systems and help the people work heart and soul to overcome poverty and make fortunes.

OW030427 Taipei CNA in English 0254 GMT 3 Sep 82

[Text] Taipei, Sept. 2 (CNA) -- President Chiang Ching-kuo Thursday encouraged military heroes and the model civilian friends of the military to redouble their efforts, and struggle ever more bravely to enrich and augment national development and to accelerate completion of the sacred mission of national recovery.

President Chiang made the remarks in his congratulatory message to the military heroes and model civilians who were cited at a rally in celebration of the Republic of China's 1982 Armed Forces Day at the armed forces arts activities center in Taipei.

September 3rd Armed Forces Day marks victory by the nation's resistance war against Japan. In this way they will be better able to coordinate and cooperate in achieving a more perfect government, a government working for the benefit and welfare of all its people, according to the president.

The fulfillment of the three principles of the people and the recovery of the mainland are the main goals of current national basic policy, President Chiang stressed. That means moving ahead on the development of the democratic and constitutional government based on the three principles of the people, and realizing national unification through the three principles, he added.

DEFENSE OFFICIALS URGE PRC SOLDIERS TO REBEL

Gen Hau told the military officers and men on the mainland the duty of soldiers is to protect their nation and people, not safeguard a regime which is not welcomed by the people. They made their remarks in their speeches broadcast to the Chinese mainland on the eve of the Sept. 3 Armed Forces Day of the Republic of China.

SPOKESMAN ON PRC INTENTION TO INVADE TAIWAN

[Text] Taipei -- Military spokesman Gen Wang Miao revealed today that the Military Commission of the Central Committee of the bandit party spent $33,000 last July to buy a print of the film "Operation of the Falklands," totaling 12 reels, made by REUTERS news agency and the British Broadcasting Corporation so as to study the strategy and tactic for "invading Taiwan by force" by imagining the Falklands as Taiwan.

Gen Wang Miao made the above statement while commenting on the continued U.S.-ROC cooperation in the production of F-5E fighters at a regular diplomatic and military affairs press conference called by the Government Information Office at 0900 this morning.

He stressed: "We hope the free world will see clearly that the peaceful united front advocated by the Communist bandits is only a smokescreen, and that they have never given up the attempt of ultimate invasion of Taiwan and Penghu by force. For instance, since 7 August up to present the Communist bandits have kept moving their transport flotillas along the Fukien coast between the Min River estuary and the Chanshih island area. The Flotillas have been used in coordination with tanks for a 'troopship joint exercise' and for amphibious landing maneuvers."

Wang Miao said: Facts have proved that only when the ROC possesses sufficient defensive capability and especially air and sea supremacy is it possible to check the expansion of Communist influence and to provide a sure guarantee for the security and peace in the western Pacific. It is hoped that all armymen and people in the country will keep to our president's call "be united and alerted; struggle hard and resolutely" and carry forward the spirit of self-reliance. All forces throughout the country, including public and private enterprises as well as academic organizations, should be mobilized to work in concert toward building up our defensive capability at a quicker pace.

PRESS COMMENTARIES ON PRC NATIONAL CONGRESS

HSIN WAN PAO

HK011133 Hong Kong HSIN WAN PAO in Chinese 1 Sep 82 p 1

[Text] The 12th CPC Congress was solemnly opened this morning in Beijing. More than 1,500 outstanding deputies elected from various places throughout the country will, in the coming 10 days, make far-reaching and important strategic decisions, formulate programs for socialist modernization and work out guiding principles for party building which are in accord with the new era and attain the goal of promoting the cooperation between new and old cadres working in the highest leading organs of the CPC and the succession of the old by the new.

The presidium for this morning's session consisted of 11 people including Deng Xiaoping and others. Deng Xiaoping delivered a 2,300-word opening speech. On behalf of the CPC Central Committee, Hu Yaobang made a report entitled "Create a New Situation in All Fields of Socialist Modernization." He will continue to deliver this long report this afternoon.

Representatives from various democratic parties, nonparty personages and veteran Communist Party members have been invited to attend the congress as nonvoting delegates. Not long after the opening of the congress, XINHUA NEWS AGENCY issued a news report and published the text of Deng Xiaoping's opening speech. In addition, the spokesman of the congress briefed foreign correspondents on the congress. All this reflects the new work style and new atmosphere.

Deng Xiaoping said: The 12th party congress is the most important meeting in the party's history since the 7th party congress.

The 7th party congress was heldin 1945. Therefore, the 12th party congress today is the most important meeting for the past 37 years since the founding ot new China.

Deng Xiaoping pointed out: The 7th party congress summed up the historical experience gained in the tortuous development of China's democratic revolution in the previous 20 years and more so that the party mastered the law of democratic revolution. This ensured nationwide victory after the congress. The 12th party congress will also sum up experience gained in the tortuous development of the socialist revolution and construction. Since we have gained a much deeper understanding of the laws governing China's socialist construction, we have every reason to believe that this congress will create a new situation in all fields and bring prosperity to the party and state.

RENMIN RIBAO published an editorial today, greeting the 12th party congress. It says: A host of facts over the past 6 years have enabled people to deeply understand that the CPC has grown up and that it has become mature and trustworthy. With the bitter experience of the "Great Cultural Revolution" and the successful experience gained since the third plenary session, the CPC has acquired mature ideas on how to carry out construction in China.

Deng Xiaoping reiterates the three major tasks in the 1980's (intensifying socialist modernization, reunification of the motherland and combating hegemonism) and the four guarantees (restructuring the administration, building spiritual civilization, striking at criminal activities in the economic field and rectifying party style). In future, we should continue to exert our efforts in these respects. There is no doubt that doing a good job of building the CPC, which leads the whole nation, is the most important task.

The CPC and the Chinese people have become mature. China's affairs should be run in our own way and by our own efforts. We are confident of our success and never place our hope on foreigners. Deng Xiaoping stressed in his opening speech: No foreign country can expect China to be its vassal, nor can it expect China to swallow any bitter fruit detrimental to China's interests.

He adds: The Chinese people have their own national self-respect and pride. They deem it their highest honor to love their motherland and contribute their all to its socialist construction. What Deng Xiaoping says voices the aspirations of all Chinese inside and outside the party and at home and abroad.

TIEN TIEN JIH PAO

[Editorial: "On Hu Yaobang's Speech"]

[Text] In his speech at yesterday's 12th CPC National Congress, Hu Yaobang stressed two points:

1. He directly criticized Hua Guofeng for preaching the ultraleftist ideology in the 5 years before the 11th CPC National Congress.

2. He pointed out that China will continue to carry out its foreign policy of independence and self-decision. It will neither yield to big powers nor seek hegemonism.

The fierce criticism of the ultraleftist ideology can be regarded as an indirect negation of everything the "whatever faction" did under the shade of "Mao Zedong Thought." It is also an important step to develop the "ideology of doing concrete work" and to get rid of dogmatism. This is necessary for a "swift development of the national economy" which is emphasized by the CPC.

Both the "whatever faction" and dogmatism must be discarded and thrown into the dustbin. However, in "doing concrete work," there must be some main tasks.

What are the main tasks to undertake?

There is nothing more important in a country than a full granary.

There is nothing more important for the people than enough food and clothing.

The evil of the "ultraleftist ideology" lies just in the fact that it has brought nothing but struggles, sabotage and poverty to the people. The evil of dogmatism is that it has never cared about the "people's desires," but only cared about "party spirit."

The "whatever faction" did both. It smashed the state's vitality and the people's hopes.

In order to make the people stand up again through "doing concrete work," the party must really do a favor for the people in accordance with their desires.

Zhang Hengqu, a great Confucian scholar in the Song Dynasty, held that a politician was a sage. And what should a sage do?

"A sage should let the people enjoy the right to rule the country, then a great order across the land can be achieved." This idea and action may as well be adopted by the political leaders today.

Frankly speaking, in the political field, the CPC has only realized half of its socialist ideals, that is, it has only "restrained annexation" and not yet completed the task of "benefiting the populace equally." In order to establish a solid foundation for the development of the national economy, it is necessary to first make the people rich. The time in which "the people can endure poverty" was regarded as an honor should never be repeated in the future.

Referring to China's foreign policy, we hold that what Hu Yaobang said was right. A country should maintain independence in dealing with its foreign affairs. Now that China is so powerful as to make hegemonists fear, it no longer needs to lean to one side. This is a kind of "supernatural force."

However, we must also point out that the main reason our country is still looked down upon by the hegemonists today is that there are rifts in it. This is a distressing fact. Therefore, we sincerely hope that the Chinese leaders will, in accordance with the spirit of doing concrete work, actively strengthen unity and take concerted action, even at the expense of some party interests, to realize the greatest interests of the country. This will be the greatest political achievement,

[Editorial: "The Chinese Communist 'Party Congress' Show Begins"]

[Text] The show of the 12th CPC "Congress" began in Peiping yesterday, with Deng Xiaoping making the "opening speech" and Hu Yaobang delivering a report entitled "Create A New Situation in All Fields of Socialist Modernization." The congress, scheduled for 10 days, will close on 10 September. This is the second congress held by the CPC after the death of Mao Zedong and the downfall of the gang of four and is the first congress since the Deng Xiaoping and Hu Yaobang clique grasped hold of the ruling power. For this reason, the convocation of this "congress" will indicate the end of the "Mao-four party" and "Hua-Ye party" and the beginning of the "Deng-Hu party.

There will not be much difference between the agenda to be discussed at the "12th Congress" of the CPC and those discussed at past "congresses." As in the past, the three major items on the agenda will be: 1) Consideration and adoption of the report delivered by the "Central Committee," that is, the report delivered at the present congress by Hu Yaobang on questions concerning the "socialist modernization." 2) Consideration and adopting of the CPC "constitution," that is, the "draft of the revised party constitution" previously promulgated. 3) Election of the "central leading organ," that is, reelection of the "Central Committee" and other "committees' and reorganization of the "central organs." Actually, these three items are used as a means to formally confirm the policies and line formulated by the Deng-Hu clique, to formally establish the "Deng-Hu system of organization," to further purge the "Cultural Revolution" elements and Hua Guofeng's remaining forces, and to redistribute the power.

For this reason, the present "congress" obviously cannot be a calm and tranquil meeting but can be a saber-rattling political struggle in which some will rise and others fall. In his "opening speech," Deng Xiaoping likened the present "12th congress" to the "7th congress" held in 1945, saying that "review of the party's history will show this congress to be the most important meeting since the 7th party congress." His words have some implications.

As we know, the CPC held its "7th congress" in Yanan in 1945 after the Mao Zedong clique had seized the post of "chairman of the military commission" at the "Zunyi meeting" in 1935, sneaked to northern Shaanxi where it toppled the "international faction" headed by Wang Ming (Chen Shaoyu), Zhang Wentian and Qin Bangyan, liquidated and disintegrated the "Red Fourth Front Army" led by Zhang Guotao, Chen Changhao and Xu Xiangqian, and finished off the local Communist forces represented by Liu Zhidan and Gao Gang. Then, it launched a rectification campaign to wipe out the "liberal ideas" of the leftist intellectuals who had come from the white areas as well as other ideas and forces disadvantageous to Mao Zedong, thereby consolidating Mao's dominance. It was not until then that the CPC was confident enough to hold its "7th congress." This was the first "congress" held after the Mao clique seized power. At the "7th congress," a "leading organ" with Mao as its core was established and the "Central Committee" and the "committee of alternate members of the Central Committee" both of which were closely related to Mao, were set up. The so-called "Mao Thought" was also put down in the "party constitution." Thereupon, the CPC formally became "Mao's party."

The situation of the Deng Xiaoping clique today is more or less the same. Since he was reinstated by the "11th congress" presided over by Hua Guofeng in 1977, Deng Xiaoping tried step by step to seize power from Hua Guofeng by applying the "tactics of peeling a bamboo shoot." At the "3d Plenary Session of the 11th CPC Central Committee" held in 1978, he initiated the struggle against the "Cultural Revolution" and the "two whatevers." At the "5th Plenary Session of the 11th CPC Central Committee," the "Central Secretariat" was reestablished with Hu Yaobang, his trusted follower, as "general secretary." Then, he decided to reverse the verdict on Liu Shaoqi and dismissed Wang Dongxing, Ji Dengkui, Wu De and Chen Xilian, who were known as the "small gang of four," from their posts, thereby isolating Hua Guofeng. At the "6th Plenary Session of the 11th CPC Central Committee" in 1981, the "Resolution on Certain Questions in the History of the Party" was released and a campaign to "criticize Mao" was launched. Subsequently, Hua was further forced to relinquish his posts of "party chairman," "chairman of the Military Commission" and the bogus "premier of the State Council." These posts were separately taken by Hu Yaobang, Deng Xiaoping and Zhao Ziyang. Thus, there were conditions for holding the "12th congress" so as to completely wipe out the forces not affiliated to the Deng faction and to further consolidate the power and position of the Deng-Hu clique. For this reason, it can be said that the backgrounds on which the Deng-Hu clique called the "12th congress" are more or less similar to those on which Mao called the "7th congress" years ago.

According to news from Peiping, the concept of the so-called "Deng-Hu system of organization" is to abolish the posts of "party chairman" and "vice chairmen" and to assign the "general secretary" to be head of the leading squad. The meaning of this "change" is twofold:

First, the change is made to keep in line with the organizational structure of the communist parties of other countries, including the Soviet Union and the East European countries, which adopt the system of "general secretary" or "first secretary" instead of "chairman." During the initial period from its "1st congress" to its "6th congress" (1921-1928), that is, during the period when Chen Duxiu, Qu Qiubai, Xiang Zhongfa and Chen Shaoyu were in power, the CPC adopted the system of "general secretary." This system lasted until 1945 when the "7th congress" was held at which Mao Zedong assumed the title of "party chairman" in addition to the title of "chairman of the Military Commission" and took all the power of the party into his hands. This was followed by 30 years of personal autocracy and led to the feudal fascist rule and even the "decade-long catastrophe" of the "Cultural Revolution." This not only brought an unprecedented misfortune to the hundreds of millions of people on the Chinese mainland but also seriously harmed the CPC and incurred the danger of "the downfall of the party and the loss of lives." Now, the post of "party chairman" is abolished and the post of "general secretary" resumed, so as to avoid following the same disastrous road, minimize the possibility of making dictatorial decisions, create the image of "collective leadership" and seek sympathies from people at home and abroad.

Second, the change is made to remove the obstacles hindering the Deng-Hu clique from taking all power in its hands and to expel the "arrogant" senior cadres and "founding members" from the leading nucleus. The abolition of the posts of "party chairman" and "vice chairmen" will not impair the power of Hu Yaobang and Deng Xiaoping -- Hu will be "general secretary" and Deng "chairman of the Military Commission," and they will hold power at the top level. Ye Jianying, Chen Yun, Li Xiannian and Hua Guofeng will eventually step out of the supreme decisionmaking organ at "Zhongnanhai" and will even be "swept out like rubbish."

This will basically solve the knotty problems of Ye Jianying and others who cling to the "system of lifelong tenure of office" and are unwilling to "retire" or take "convalescent leave." Therefore, this is a tactic of political struggle.

However, will the Deng-Hu clique attain its goal without a hitch? Will Hua, Ye and others allow themselves to be seized without putting up a fight? Will there be new contradictions among Deng, Hu and Zhao in the future? The development of the actual situation will be shown by the time and the facts.

DENG XIAOPING MEETS SON OF EX-GUANGDONG LEADER

[Report: "Deng Xiaoping Meets With Former Guangdong Provincial Chairman Chen Chi-tang's Son Chen Shu-po"]

[Text] Chen Shu-po, son of former Guangdong provincial Chairman Chen Chi-tang, and his wife recently met with Deng Xiaoping, vice chairman of the CPC Central Committee, and Deng Yingchao, vice chairman of the NPC Standing Committee. At the meeting, Prof Chen Shu-po suggested to Deng Xiaoping the establishment of an experimental college, as he hoped to thus work out a set of ideal management systems on an experimental basis. He considers that China now lacks a perfect system. Chen Shu-po specifically returned to the country, to bring to the state his 30-plus years of experience in teaching and in science and technology and to play his proper role in China's modernization.

Chen Shu-po handed over a letter containing a suggestion to Deng Xiaoping. It has chiefly to do with the feasibility of the suggested establishment of an experimental college. In July this year, Professor Chen and the professors in the country jointly had a book published. Its title was "The Idea of Networks and Their Application." It was mainly based on the theme on which Chen lectured when in China in 1980 and other up-to-the-minute scientific and technical data. Recently, he and five overseas Chinese professors returned together to the country, giving lectures and hoping to thus instill the latest scientific and technical know-how in the scholars in China.

Professor Chen expects to go to China again in 1984 to select an essay as an entry at the international meeting of electronics societies on networks and systems to be held in the capital of Japan in 1985. Later, he will lead about 50 well-known scientists to Beijing to preside over the "1985 international meeting on networks and systems, and computers."

On the reunification of China, Chen Shu-po considers that this involves a long road ahead. Deng Xiaoping also admitted that we should not seek a reckless advance, still less to obtain a solution by resorting to force.

Chen Shu-po expressed deep regret over Japan's recent revision of the history about its invasion of China. He stressed that we should be on guard against Japan's act of aggression.

Chen Shu-po is a doctor of electrical engineering at the University of Illinois in the United States. He will leave for Taiwan tomorrow on a lecturing tour.

TEXTILE-EXPORTING COUNTRIES ISSUE COMMUNIQUE

OW040234 Beijing XINHUA in English 0227 GMT 4 Sep 82

[Text] Geneva, September 3 (XINHUA) -- The major textiles exporting developing countries today criticized some major importing developed countries, the world's biggest textiles importers, the European Community in particular, for their repeated violation of the international agreement on textiles trade and demanded that the problems in the international textiles trade be considered at the forthcoming ministerial meeting of the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade (GATT) in November.

The textiles exporters' criticism and demand were contained in a press communique issued here today at the end of a one-week meeting with the participation of 27 developing countries and areas. China attended the meeting as observer.

The meeting of the exporting developing countries was held against the background that the European Community and some other textiles importers had from time to time violated the existing international agreement on textiles trade by either cutting down import quotas or attaching unreasonable conditions to their imports from developing countries. Such practices are extremely harmful to the interests of the exporting developing countries, which, therefore, need to exchange their views and coordinate their stand in dealing with their common problems.

The press communique says that some importing countries had shown "scant respect" for the provisions of MFA III, namely, the third multi-fibre arrangement as extended by the 1981 protocol of extension agreed on between the exporting and importing countries last December, which is today governing the international textiles trade.

The communique lays bare the intention of the major textiles importers to substitute the MFA III with "a whole new sub-system" in textiles trade, which is detrimental to the interests of the exporting developing countries. The press communique says that the developing countries will put forth a joint proposal at the forthcoming GATT ministerial meeting regarding the textiles issues.

POPULATION CONTROL FORUM CLOSES IN SHANGHAI

[Text] Shanghai, September 2 (XINHUA) -- A 12-day, ten-nation Asian women's meeting, sponsored by UNESCO and Asia-Pacific institute for broadcasting developing, closed today with agreement that China's population-control policies represented an efficient and effective program.

The meeting, a training course in social communication for women professionals engaged in population control, drew representatives from Bangladesh, China, India, Indoesia, Malaysia, Nepal, Pakistan, the Philippines, Sri Lanka and Thailand.

They exchanged information about their nation's population-control and family-planning policies, and heard additional Chinese policy reports on communication and women's development. The participants held the common view that it is a tremendous achievement for a country like China, with the largest population in the world, to institute massive family planning and give it very popular publicity. It is of special reference value for the developing countries of the Third World."

A proposal was adopted at the closing session urging governments, international organizations and women's organizations to take positive measures for population control and family planning and to defend women's rights and child wellbeing. The representatives toured Shanghai family-planning organizations, hospitals, and homes, and viewed movies on China's population policies.

AFP: WANG BINGQIAN CITED ON WORLD ECONOMY

OW050437 Hong Kong AFP in English 2255 GMT 4 Sep 82

[By Hugh Dent]

[Text] Toronto, Canada, Sept 4 (AFP) -- China has called on developed countries to cease "shifting economic crises onto others", favours a doubling of International Monetary Fund (IMF) quotas, and seeks greater cooperation between developing countries. These are the main points of a speech by Chinese Finance Minister Wang Bingqian to a meeting of ministers from the group of 24 developing countries here yesterday.

Mr Wang, who is attending annual meetings of the IMF and the World Bank, highlighted the "grim nature and urgency" of the world economic situation. He said that "the major developed countries must desist from their policy of shifting economic crises onto others -- a policy that contravenes the spirit of international economic cooperation."

The quota review should be completed before the 1983 IMF annual meeting, he said, adding: "We support the view that the increase should be roughly double" the present level. China, which joined the fund in May 1981, agreed that IMF proposals for adjustment policies in developing countries "must be reasonable and suited to the actual circumstances of the countries concerned."

Commenting on controversy over tough conditions often laid down by the fund, the Chinese minister declared: "Conditionality should be appropriate and pre-conditions should not be insisted on".

He also referred to the funding problems of the International Development Association (IDA), which are of particular interest to China and India -- two major nations which in the long term could find themselves competing for IDA interest-free loans for the poorest countries. China supported the group 24 view that IDA financing for 1984 should be roughly one-third of financing for the three-year period ending in 1983.

But the minister added: "We hold that in any event, the level of IDA commitment authority in fiscal 1984 should be larger than that of fiscal 1983" and that funding for the next IDA three-year period should represent an increase over the last period "in real terms".

Mr Wang said that co-financing in cooperation with commercial banks "should not be a substitute for the [word indistinct] through the int[illegible]tional financial institutions, nor should it become a pre-condition for World B[illegible]ns".

China endorses the view "that the volume of lending to the developing countries should increase in real terms", the minister said, adding that he hoped that the share of IDA resources for sub-Saharan countries would increase in real terms.

"While the developing economies are in deep trouble, there has been virtually no progress in the struggle to establish a new international economic order," the minister declared.

Mr Wang said: "The North-South dialogue is at a stalemate, and the cause of international cooperation is beset with obstacles. Despite the efforts of the parties concerned, global negotiations have yet to be launched owing to the intransigence of a major power" -- seen as a reference to the United States.

In this context, China believed that "South-South co-operation has become ever more important" and hoped for "tangible progress" between developing countries in the field of international finance, which would strengthen "the economic power and negotiating position of the developing countries," Mr Wang concluded.

GUANGMING RIBAO DESCRIBES 'SWEAT SHOPS' IN U.S.

[Article by Chen Bolin: [7115 0130 7207]: "'Sweat Shops' in Today's America"]

[Text] When we refer to "sweat shops," we mean those illegal factories, established by labor contractors, in which working conditions are poor, wages are lower than the statutory standard and there is no social welfare or insurance. At present, there are many such factories in Western capitalist countries. In the United States, the so-called big power of Western civilization, "sweat shops" can be found everywhere in the streets and lanes, from New York's Manhattan area abounding with skyscrapers to Los Angeles on the West Coast; from Houston to Miami in the South. It is estimated that there are more than 3,000 such factories in New York alone, employing 50,000 workers. Of all the colorful women's fashions and children's wear produced in New York, which sell the best and account for 85 percent of the country's output, 50 percent are manufactured by workers of "sweat shops."

At the beginning of the century, a fire broke out in a women's under-garment factory in New York City. Of the more than 140 workers who were killed in the fire, the vast majority were young, underaged girls. The true story of "sweat shops" was thus disclosed and there was a public outcry. As a result, the U.S. Government was forced to promulgate a decree on banning "sweat shops." Although several decades have passed since then, such factories have not been eliminated. On the contrary, they are growing more and more prosperous. What is different is that the factories' operations are more concealed than before. In addition to engaging in the traditional clothing business, these factories have extended their activities to many industrial and enterprise departments such as construction companies, farms and wharves. The number of the workers employed by them range from more than 10 to several hundred.

Most of these factories use the top floors of dilapidated buildings and abandoned warehouses as their workshops. With tens of people or even 100 people working together in a tight space, working conditions are terrible. Afraid of being exposed, the factory proprietors usually place thick ash or cotton shreddings over windows to prevent being discovered. The workshops are dirty and stink inside, and people are suffocated by stale air. Dim lighting makes it difficult to identify others only yards away. It is extremely hot in summer and severely cold in winter inside the workshops. Some officials of the U.S. Labor Department have said that such workshops could only be found in textbooks of history. A responsible trade union member said that human dignity is damaged in such factories which remind people of life in Dickens' times.

Most workers of these factories are contract workers, recruited secretly by the labor contractors . The backstage bosses of these labor contractors are closely associated with the underworld. Being manufacturers as well as wholesalers, they have organized a huge and well-controlled processing and marketing network and have built up an entire network, from materials, manufacturing and transportation to sales.

They keep their processing and stocking sites top secret. The vast majority of the workers in these factories are immigrants from foreign countries who speak only their native tongues. Although some of them speak a little English, they dare not disclose any details of the factories because they are afraid of losing jobs, being expelled or being plotted against by the underworld. Most of them live in simple and crude wooden huts and sleep on the ground. They have no water supply, no sanitary facilities, no social welfare or insurance, let alone having their own trade union. Their wages are even lower than half of the minimum wage of $3.35 per hour and they have to work 12-13 hours every day. They are often required by the capitalist to work extra hours and do not get overtime pay. According to investigations, a construction company in Houston embezzled its workers overtime pay to the amount of $130,000. The foreman of a gardening and nursery company in Houston extorted $25 from his workers every week as remuneration and every worker had to pay him $1,000 as commission when drawing their pay. Almost all the "sweat money" of the workers is thus extorted and exploited by the proprietors of the "sweat shops."

Under the powerful pressure of public opinion, a so-called "group for smashing 'sweat shops'" was established last year by the U.S. Labor Department to launch surprise raids on suspicious looking places. However, it is not easy to thoroughly outlaw all the "sweat shops" in the United States; it is impossible. At a time of economic recession, the Reagan administration is further cutting down administrative expenses and depleting the number of staff in the government, and both the outlay and personnel in the Labor Department are being reduced. As a result, fewer investigations will be conducted by the Labor Department on the working conditions in these factories. Due to the close association between the capitalists of the "sweat shops" and the underworld, the so-called "investigations" are but motions. For a long time, the U.S. Government has not had any effective result in suppressing "sweat shops," which has aroused vigorous resentment from the public. Not long ago, it was demanded in the press by the U.S. trade union of women's wear that the government seriously handle the problem of "sweat shops."

[Text] Pyongyang, September 4 (XINHUA) -- Joseph White, a U.S. Army soldier who has sought political asylum here, today called for U.S. troop withdrawal from South Korea.

He said that so long as the U.S. troops stay in South Korea, Korea cannot achieve its reunification.

White told newsmen that he was sent to South Korea in March 1981, where he saw with his own eyes the surging anti-U.S. struggle of the South Korean people and the brutalities inflicted upon the people by the military police.

He was convinced that his relatives in the United States will understand his just action. He expressed the determination to contribute to peace and justice as well as Korea's reunification.

White, who crossed over the demarcation line into the northern half of Korea on August 28, has been well received by the Korean People's Army.

DPRK DEMANDS U.S. TROOP WITHDRAWAL FROM S. KOREA

OW070810 Beijing XINHUA in English 0743 GMT 7 Sep 82

[Text] Pyongyang, September 7 (XINHUA) -- The Democratic People's Republic of Korea issued a memorandum today demanding that the United States immediately withdraw all its aggressor troops from South Korea.

The memorandum, issued on the occasion of the 37th anniversary of the U.S. military occupation of South Korea, exposed the crimes committed by the U.S. imperialists in turning South Korea into their colony, and condemned the schemes of the United States and South Korea regime to suppress the South Korean people's just struggle and permanently divide Korea into "two Koreas".

"Provided that the U.S. imperialists withdraw their aggressor troops from South Korea and put an end to their intervention in the internal affairs of our country," the memorandum said, "the Korean people will surely resolve the problem of reunification of the fatherland independently and peacefully."

It said: "The reunification program by way of establishing a Democratic Confederal Republic of Koryo embodies the noble spirit and principles of the North-South joint statement put forward on July 4, 1972, and reflects the demand of the time for a peaceful solution to the reunification of Korea."

"The whole Korean people will drive out the U.S. imperialist aggressor troops from South Korea with the strength of national unity and set up a Democratic Confederal Republic of Koryo, thus crowning with success the historical cause of the reunification of the fatherland," it stressed.

It concluded that the government and people of the Democratic People's Republic of Korea are convinced that their just struggle will win unreserved support and solidarity from the governments and peoples of all countries of the world who cherish justice, peace, sovereignty and independence.

[Article by Zhong Yan [6945 1484]: "The Foundation of Sino-Japanese Friendship Must Not Be Undermined by Militarist Forces"]

[Text] The distortion of the history of Japanese imperialist aggression in school textbooks by the Japanese Ministry of Education has aroused the anger and vigilance of the Chinese people and the people of other Asian countries. Numerous signs show that in Japan some people hold the ulterior motive of reversing the verdict on the Japanese imperialist history of aggression, obstinately sticking to militarism and wanting to stage a comeback.

The Japanese Ministry of Education started long ago to distort the Japanese history of aggression. Its officials tried to find excuses to apply pressure on the writers and publishers of history books, asking them to change the wording of Japanese "aggression" into "intrusion" and "occupation" and eventually forcing them to change it to read "advance."

This change completely altered the meaning and nature of the matter. According to Japanese dictionaries, "aggression" means attacking a foreign country and occupying its land while "advance" means economic expansion and entry into a new market. So, "aggression" is a military term and "advance" is an economic term. This was a very ignominous tactic adopted by the Japanese Ministry of Education. For half a century Japanese militarism had engaged in military aggression against other countries and in burning, killing and looting. History has already drawn a conclusion from it, which can never be distorted and reversed by anyone.

Since last autumn some people having powerful backing in the Liberal-Democratic Party jointly sent a so-called "urgent appeal" to the Ministry of Education, denouncing the Japanese history textbooks of the past and demanding that the textbooks be infused with more "spirit in defending the country" and a "sense of respecting the emperor." There upon, the supreme advisory of the Ministry of Education was more energetic in accusing the history textbooks of "deviation" and clamored for "resolutely making corrections." At the same time, some people openly said that the Japanese history textbooks had "deviated to the left" and called for "vigorously mopping up" the "distorted" textbooks." Some monopoly capitalists also publicly demanded that the schools conduct "education in national defense" so as to "raise the people's consciousness with the imperial family as the center." Some people even suggested restoring worship of the emperor, advocating the "imperial edicts on education" of Shintoism. In April 1981 the "Japanese Committee for Formulating a Charter for Education" published a "charter for Education" which stressed that it was essential to defend "the history-created noble tradition centering around the royal family," thus openly advocating the restoration of this imperial nationalism.

In Japan's wars of aggression, the main reason why some people were willing to give their lives for such wars and serve with such brutal enthusiasm was that they had been brought up from an early age under militarist education, which deeply poisoned them. Obviously, the changing of the word "aggression" into "advance" is not merely a matter of misuse of words but a matter with a deep background and objectives. It is precisely for this reason that this question manifests itself as a serious political issue concerning not only important historic facts that involve the national feelings of the peoples of Asia but also Japan's future and the relations between Japan and other Asian countries. The actions of the Japanese Ministry of Education and certain people go against the spirit and principles as set forth by the joint statement on the normalization of Sino-Japanese relations and deny the deep self-reproach expressed by the Japanese Government toward the Chinese people because of its aggressive wars against China. The issue also concerns the prospects for friendly cooperation between China and Japan, the education of future generations and the thorough annihilation of militarism or the restoration of it, as well as a future of peace or war in Asia. Therefore, the strong reactions from the Chinese people and the peoples of other Asian countries fully demonstrate the gravity of the issue.

In connection with the Ministry of Education's distortion of the history of Japanese aggression, there are many extremely serious trends. For example: In the past few years, rightist organizations have been on the rise, which, believing that the time is ripe, are ready to make trouble. From the titles of these rightist groups it is evident that they have two characteristics: They have the signboard of "patriotism"; and they regard young people as their main recruiting targets. Although there are not many people in these groups, they have considerable capacity, and make trouble the moment they get the chance. They represent the social base for a revival of Japanese militarism.

The religious activity of paying respect to the Yasukuni Shrine has become an open function. The Japanese Constitution clearly stipulates the rule "separating government from religion," banning Japanese Government officials from taking part in religious activities and government institutions from supporting such activities.

Since 1969, however, a number of people in the Liberal Democratic Party have been proposing a so-called "Yasukuni Shrine bill" to nullify the non-support-of-religion rule in the Constitution and make it legal for government officials to take part in or provide funds for such activities. Beginning in the early 1970's, a number of important Japanese Government officials, heedless of opposition from the people and opposition parties, have openly taken part as official participants in these activities. Since the beginning of the 1980's, every 15 August a number of major Japanese Government officials take part in the "memorial gathering for those who fell in the war," and they have never uttered a word of regret at these gatherings for the war of aggression.

During the early 1970's, films were used as a means to prettify Japanese militarism, and this trend has been gaining momentum in recent years. Certain people with ulterior motives have made a great fanfare over films of this type. "Height 203" of 1980, "Joint Fleet" of 1981 and "Dai Nippon Teikoku," which was shown recently, are representative of this type of film. Such films have played a certain function in hoodwinking and deceiving some youths and juveniles who did not experience the war.

Japanese rightist elements recently had the gall to propose setting up a so-called "monument to the founding of the Manchurian state." They claim that by doing this they are demonstrating that Japan "had not invaded" China. They even claim that they want to hand down the "ideals and exploits" of Japan's aggression against China's northeast to future generations.

The above-mentioned trends clearly tell us: Certain people with a militarist ideology are still poisoning young Japanese, and a handful of militarists are still trying to revive the old dream of the "Greater East Asia Co-prosperity Sphere." The Chinese people, who were long the victims of Japanese militarist aggression, will naturally expose these schemes and, together with the Japanese people, wage resolute struggle against them.

These attempts to reverse the wheel of history in Japan are not isolated; they are linked to the economic and political situation in Japan.

During the postwar years, the Japanese economy has seen such rapid development that it has become the focus of world attention. Japan has become "the second economic power" in the capitalist world. The credit for this goes to the hard work of the Japanese people and their government. However, Japan is poor in resources and its economic growth is dependant on large quantities of cheap raw materials from other Asian countries. These countries not only provide the major portion of necessary materials for Japan but also serve as important markets for Japanese goods and capital. It can be said that, without the cooperation of the Asian countries, Japan could not be what it is today. And it is only natural that the Asian peoples should concern themselves with the course of the Japanese economy, which has a close bearing on their own. Certain Asian countries with close ties to Japan have already pointed out that common prosperity of Asia, instead of being solely concerned with equality and mutual benefit, with each country supplying what another needs, is the principle for economic cooperation. The notion that Japan's economic cooperation with developing nations is a "favor" and that Japan's assistance is indispensable to China's four modernizations is totally wrong. Capitalizing on one's economic strength to trample on the basic principles of Sino-Japanese relations is a practice bound to be rebuffed.

Since Japan became the "second economic power," it has been repeatedly expressed that the country should play in its region "a political role commensurate with its economic power," and recently certain politicians expounded on that by stating that Japan should become a "political power."

Historical experiences warn the Asian people and the international community to express concern over what kind of political power Japan will become in the future. Already the revision of textbooks by the Japanese Ministry of Education on the history of Japan's aggression against Asian-Pacific countries has aroused universal suspicion in that region about that future. "Whither Japan" is becoming an issue attracting close attention.

The above-mentioned facts show that there indeed exist forces in Japan determental to Sino-Japanese relations of friendly cooperation; however, people perceive that friendly cooperation represents the main current in Sino-Japanese relations. That the Japanese people have opposed the erroneous moves of the Ministry of Education and have demanded speedy correction shows that the development of Sino-Japanese friendship represents the trend of the times and the desire of the people. The disruptive activities of a handful of militarist forces will certainly not be able to halt the pace of friendly cooperation between the Chinese and Japanese peoples.

Publisher To Correct Texts

[Text] Tokyo, September 3 (XINHUA) -- The Sanseido Company, a major publishing house for textbooks, decided today to apply to the Education Ministry for printing errata for erroneous statements in textbooks about Japan's past aggression, KYODO reported this evening.

The Sanseido Company publishes six kinds of history textbooks. Its compilers have reached the unanimous view of printing errata promptly for the wrong descriptions in the textbooks to be used from next spring. This publishing house accepted the compilers view and decided today to apply to the Education Ministry for making the errata. Other publishing houses are also considering to take coordinate steps with the Sanseido to print errata for the mistakes in the textbooks they have published.

It was reported that mistakes are allowed to be corrected in the form of errata with approval by the education minister, provided application is made to the Education Ministry in accordance with "the regulation for the screening of textbooks. The textbook compilers have scrupulously studied the regulation and the practice of making errata in the past. They think that to restore "aggression" instead of "advance" conforms to article four of the regulation, namely, "accounts that hamper learning".

The writers cited a number of classes in which accounts of textbooks were corrected in the form of corrigenda to prove that the Education Ministry is wrong to forbid any changes once textbooks have been revised and that it is unreasonable in refusing to correct errors in printing.

Other companies publishing textbooks also reached an agreement with the writers that textbooks should be corrected in the form of corrigenda.

VODK WARNS OF SRV MOVES AT UNITED NATIONS

OW060908 Beijing XINHUA in English 0828 GMT 6 Sep 82

[Text] Beijing, September 6 (XINHUA) -- Radio Democratic Kampuchea today warned probable Vietnamese tricks at the forthcoming 37th U.N. Assembly.

The radio said in a commentary that this time Vietnam will probably move to vacate Kampuchea's U.N. seat.

Since its invasion of Kampuchea in 1978, Vietnam has tried year after year to deprive Democratic Kampuchea of its legitimate seat and thrust its puppet Heng Samrin regime into the United Nations.

Vietnam, a country which defies U.N. resolutions demanding the withdrawal of its troops from Kampuchea and tramples upon the U.N. Charter, "should itself be condemned at the Assembly and deprived of its seat in the U.N.," the commentary stressed.

"What right does such a country have to move that the legitimate seat of the Democratic Kampuchea be left vacant in the U.N.?" it queried.

The commentary urged more countries to support the legitimate seat of Democratic Kampuchea at the forthcoming U.N. Assembly, which it said is an act to uphold the U.N. Charter.

THAI PAPER REPORTS SRV HELICOPTER PADS IN DK

OW060830 Beijing XINHUA in English 0818 GMT 6 Sep 82

[Text] Bangkok, September 6 (XINHUA) -- Vietnamese forces had stepped up the construction of "numerous" helicopter pads in Kampuchea, a highly Thai authoritative source told the Thai English language paper "NATION REVIEW" over the weekend.

He said that the Vietnamese virtually started building the helicopter pads late last year to prepare for their dry season offensive during November-April, but the construction had obviously been stepped up recently.

The introduction of helicopter pads in the border areas coincided with a report that the Soviet Union had sent a substantial number of helicopters to Hanoi, the source said.

The helicopter pads, the source added, had been constructed on communications knots and would form a logistic network linking the Vietnamese military installations in western Kampuchea and their troops at the front.

He disclosed that the Vietnamese forces had also started building permanent military facilities, including field hospitals, at their military bases near the Kampuchean-Thai border.

The stepped-up construction of the helicopter pads and other military facilities indicated their preparations for another military offensive against the Kampuchean resistance forces, he noted.

As a result, Thai forces on the eastern border had been put on alert and Thailand had also mapped out counter-offensive plans against a possible Vietnamese attack.

Heavy weapons have been sent from Battambang and Koh Kong to the Vietnamese troops along the Thai-Kampuchean border.

AUSTRALIA'S SINCLAIR ON SOVIET THREAT IN ASIA

OW041532 Beijing XINHUA in English 1513 GMT 4 Sep 82

[Text] Canberra, September 4 (XINHUA) -- The military build-up of the Soviet Union is threatening the security of the Southeast Asian region, Australian Defense Minister Ian Sinclair has declared.

Addressing the biennial federal conference of the Australian Air Force Association here yesterday, Sinclair said that "there is little doubt that the build-up in Soviet capability is a factor of real concern for the strategic security of this region." "The rapidity and extent of the build-up remains a prime threat to world peace," he added.

During his recent visit to the region, he said, "We learned of the increased frequency and capability of the Soviet military use of Da Nang and Cam Ranh Bay."

"Bear aircraft are now permanently stationed in Vietnam while for the first time four Soviet submarines have been sighted in Cam Ranh Bay."

"In the Philippines we were advised of unauthorized Soviet military aircraft entering that country's air space," he said.

The Australian defense minister noted that the continued occupation of Kampuchea by the more than 250,000 Vietnamese troops "represents a destabilizing force in Southeast Asia."

Sinclair said that "ASEAN countries are supporting a coalition under Prince Sihanouk in an effort to achieve the withdrawal of Vietnamese forces." This "has particular importance for Australia."

He said that the Australian Government had given priority to defense over the past few years. Defense outlay, taking this year's estimates into account, has increased by 148 percent since 1964-76. As a proportion of GDP [as received], defense has risen from 2.6 percent in 1975-76 to 2.9 percent in 1982-83.

"Australia continues to play her part within our capability in this region of our particular responsibility," Sinclair said.

[Excerpts] Beijing, 3 Sep (DPA) -- In a talk today with Social Democratic Party of Germany [SPD] Presidium member Egon Bahr, CPC Chairman Hu Yaobang expressed a wish for closer contacts between Chinese Communists and the SPD. Bahr also told journalists in Beijing that he had not made any conclusive statement to Hu Yaobang on the subject because a decision must first be made by the SPD executive. Bahr stressed: "I do not believe that there will be official party relations between the SPD and the CPC." The Social Democrats do not have any such formal relations with other communist parties. However, he certainly regards "contacts" with Beijing as "useful".

SPD Chairman Willy Brandt is to visit Beijing next spring.

In the 1 and 1/2 hour talk with Bahr, Hu Yaobang said that he would like to meet foreign politicans in Beijing more often. Hu Yaobang later gave a dinner for the Social Democratic politician.

STREET CLASHES CONTINUE IN LUBIN, POLAND

OW040540 Beijing XINHUA in English 1502 GMT 3 Sep 82

[Text] Beijing, September 3 (XINHUA) -- Street clashes continued on Wednesday and Thursday in the Polish southwestern copper-mining center of Lubin, where two demonstrators were killed and 12 others wounded on August 31 when the police fired at the protesters, according to reports reaching here.

The Polish press agency, PAP, was quoted as saying that two groups of "several hundred people" gathered by the city's post office and hospital Wednesday morning, and then began marching towards the local United Workers Party headquarters and building barricades, fighting with police into the night. A reading room and bookshop in Lubin's Town Hall were set on fire and people hurled stones and petrol bombs at the police.

Order was restored Wednesday night "due to the determined efforts" of police, said an AP report quoting PAP. An overnight curfew was imposed in the city.

But on the following day, Thursday, protesting youths again clashed with security forces for the third straight day in Lubin. Riot police used tear gas and shot red, blue and green flares at groups of 30 to 50 youths running through the city center. The running battles lasted for more than two hours.

POLISH SPOKESMAN COMMENTS ON STREEET DISTURBANCES

[Text] Warsaw, September 3 (XINHUA) -- Poland's public prosecutor-general has ordered the arrest of four leaders of the dissident organization, the Committee for Social-Workers Self-Defense (KOR), said government spokesman Jerzy Urban at a press conference today. The four are Jacek Juron, Adam Michnik, Jan Litynski and Henryk Wojec. They were interned when the martial law was imposed last December 13.

Referring to the street clashes earlier this week, Urban said that the underground Solidarity union took the advantage of the second anniversary of the Gdansk accords to stir up large scale street clashes engulfing 54 cites or towns in 34 of the 49 provinces. This was the most serious confrontation since the imposition of the state of siege.

He said the so-called "peaceful demonstrations," organized by the underground Solidarity under the instigation of foreign subversive centers and the domestic dissidents, the KOR, were in fact an aggressive attack participated mainly by young people under 30. The youths were duped, he said, adding that the government would draw a lesson from this event and work out a programme for educating them.

The spokesman said that street disturbances continued in Czestochowa Province and Lubin City on September 1 and 2, but the situation was calm in other parts of the country, and production went on as usual. There were no disturbances today, he said.

He declared that the government would stick to the policy of dialogue and consultation, but Walesa and other Solidarity leaders would not be party to talks with the government on problems concerning the working class. "We shall discuss with the rank and file of Solidarity directly without the intermediary of its former leaders," he said.

ISRAEL BUILDING SETTLEMENTS ON OCCUPIED LAND

OW060748 Beijing XINHUA in English 0726 GMT 6 Sep 82

[Text] Beijing, September 6 (XINHUA) -- Israel approved at least four new settlements in the occupied West Bank and Gaza Strip yesterday and the United States responded with a statement describing Israel's intention as "most unwelcome."

Israel's Prime Minister Menahem Begin formally rejected Reagan's peace plan and vowed never to relinquish control of the territories captured from Jordan in the 1967 Arab-Israeli war.

Using the biblical Hebrew name for the West Bank in a letter to U.S. President Ronald Reagan, Begin said: "Judea and Samaria will never again be the West Bank of the Hashemite Kingdom of Jordan."

In a statement issued in Santa Barbara, California, where President Reagan is vacationing, the U.S. administration declared that the Israel's decision to add more settlements is "most unwelcome" and that the U.S. position calling for immediate freeze on new settlements "shall remain unchanged."

The statement said: "We cannot understand why at a time when broader participation in the peace process is both critical and possible, Israel has elected to extend a pattern of activity which erodes the confidence of all and, most particularly, the inhabitants of the West Bank and Gaza, for a just and fairly negotiated outcome to the peace process."

"Moreover, such settlement activity can only raise questions about Israeli willingness to abide by the promise of United Nations Resolution 242 that territory will be exchanged for peace," he said.

In Washington, U.S. Secretary of State George Shultz explained Reagan's proposal, saying the U.S. did not envisage sanctions against Israel over its rejection of the Reagan peace plan. He forecast that the greatest pressure on Israel would be exerted if Arab countries came out in support of the plan.

Egypt Denounces Settlements

[Text] Cairo, September 6 (XINHUA) -- A spokesman of the Egyptian Foreign Ministry today denounced Israel's recent decision to set up more settlements in the occupied Arab territories as a continuation of its flagrant violation of the U.N. Charter and international law. He described the decision as a challenge to the world community which condemns the Israeli procedures against the legitimate rights of the Palestinians, and appealed to all countries in the world, particularly the United States, to condemn and stand firm against the Israeli practice.

Egyptian Minister of State for Foreign Affairs Butrus Butrus Ghali today received a U.S. memorandum delivered by the U.S. ambassador to Cairo which spelled out the U.S. rejection of Israel's decision to build more settlements in the occupied territories.

The Israeli Government, defying Reagan's call for a freeze on Jewish settlements on the occupied land, approved yesterday seven new settlements on the West Bank for more than 2,000 families and an eighth one on the Gaza Strip for 90 families. The new settlements were announced after Prime Minister Menahem Begin wrote to President Reagan telling him that Israel stood with "total dedication" by its decision of last Thursday to rebuff his initiative.

Under Israel's settlement policy, more than 25,000 Jews have been moved into about 100 towns and villages on the West Bank and Gaza Strip since Israel occupied the territories in the 1967 Middle East war.

REACTION TO REAGAN'S NEW MIDEAST PROPOSAL

OW031241 Beijing XINHUA in English 1228 GMT 3 Sep 82

[Text] Beijing, September 3 (XINHUA) -- U.S. President Ronald Reagan's new Middle East peace plan has evoked different reactions from Arab countries and the Palestine Liberation Organization, according to agency despatches from Athens and Arab capitals.

In Athens, head of the PLO Political Department Faruq Qaddumi expressed his approval of what he termed "new elements" in Reagan's proposals on the Palestinian issue, saying "it's new, it's good".

However, the PLO's authoritive stand toward the proposals is still unclear. PLO leader Yasir 'Arafat made no immediate comment on the plan Thursday but called an emergency meeting of the PLO leadership to discuss Reagan's plan.

Jordan, the country that has direct connection with the U.S. proposals, commented favourably on the plan but made it clear that the stand taken by the PLO would be decisive. In Tunis, the first official reaction to Reagan's program was favourable. Foreign Minister Beji Caid es-Sebsi said Thursday that Reagan's new Middle East plan represented a step forward in the U.S. policy toward the region.

In Rabat, Moroccan Minister of State Ahmed Alaoui said that Reagan's peace plan had "considerable political and psychological significance".

Claiming that "any initiative based on the Camp David accords will not realise peace", Damascus radio announced Thursday that Syria would not accept Reagan's initiative because it was a "new manoeuvre in an established American policy that supports Israel's aggression, expansionist plans and racist goals."

Syria, PLO Reject Plan

[Text] Damascus, September 4 (XINHUA) -- Syria and high-ranking officials of the Palestine Liberation Organization rejected U.S. President Ronald Reagan's proposals for a Palestinian settlement, Damascus radio reported today. The rejection came up after Syrian President Hafiz al-Asad met today with a delegation headed by Khalid al-Fahum, chairman of the Palestinian National Council.

The delegates attending the meeting were PLO political and military leaders who came to Syria from Beirut. They were: Abu Iyad, member of the Central Committee of Fatah, Faruq Qaddumi, head of the PLO's Political Department; George Habash, secretary-general of the Popular Front for the Liberation of Palestine; Nayif al-Hawatimah, secretary-general of the Democratic Front for the Liberation of Palestine; and Ahmad Jibril, secretary-general of the Popular Front for the Liberation of Palestine (General Command), as well as other PLO leaders Yasir 'Abd Rabbuh, Assam al-Qadi and Nimr Salih.

Reports said that Al-Asad told the PLO leaders that he would attend the Arab summit scheduled to open Monday in Fez, Morocco, where he would confront the American proposals together with the Palestinian representatives.

This is the first time the PLO leaders met with President al-Asad since they left west Beirut.

During the meeting, Al-Asad welcomed the PLO leaders to Damascus and assured them that Syria will continue defending the Palestinian Revolution and making sacrifice for it, a spokesman for the Syrian president said.

The PLO delegation reportedly requested that Syria give, now more than ever before, support for the Palestinian Revolution. The PLO leaders said they attached great importance to deepening the relationship with Syria, which they regarded as the best guarantee for the Palestinian cause, reports said.

Shortly after the meeting, the PLO leaders flew to Tunis where they were expected to conduct a meeting with PLO Chairman Yasir 'Arafat.

Kuwait Welcomes Plan

OW091216 Beijing XINHUA in English 1211 GMT 5 Sep 82

[Text] Kuwait, September 4 (XINHUA) -- Kuwait welcomed U.S. President Reagan's Middle East peace plan as a topic worthy of study for the Arab countries, the Palestine Liberation Organization (PLO) in particular, despite some vague and equivocal views, said 'Abd al-Aziz Husayn, Kuwaiti minister of state for cabinet affairs today.

According to the KUWAITI NEWS AGENCY, a Cabinet meeting was held today to discuss Reagan's plan, which was attended by Crown Prince and Prime Minister Sa'd al'Abdallah as-Salim as-Sabah.

Husayn said PLO's comments on Reagan's plan will be the basis for Kuwaiti acceptance.

It was reported that PLO has reservations on the U.S. Middle East peace plan, although its formal position has not been made public.

He pointed out that PLO's bravery in countering Israel aggression has proved to the world that the Palestinian people's cause and their legitimate rights can't be negotiated. The PLO is capable of embarking on a road toward realizing their national targets. PLO's choice is the choice of Kuwait.

OW061600 Beijing XINHUA in English 1512 GMT 6 Sep 82

[Text] Tehran, September 6 (XINHUA) -- Iranian religious leader Ayatollah Khomeyni today warned his Gulf neighbors against approving any Middle East peace plan which recognises Israel as an independent state, according to an IRANIAN NEWS AGENCY report.

He said that if countries of the region yield to the Camp David accords, the Saudi Arabian peace initiative and the latest U.S. plan for settling the Arab-Israeli differences, "the Iranian Muslim combatants would be impelled to punish them".

Speaking to a group of administrative reform officials and relatives of martyrs of the Islamic Revolutionary Guards Corps, he also said that Iran "would never back down from its original demands" for ending the war with Iraq.

Khomeyni said that his country would be receptive to any mediation by "rational people" aiming at administering justice and compensating Iran for the losses it had suffered in the war.

OW040306 Beijing XINHUA in English 0252 GMT 4 Sep 82

[Text] Beijing, September 4 (XINHUA) -- Israeli forces advanced to the southern suburbs of west Beirut yesterday and the troop movement was charged by Lebanon as a ceasefire violation, according to Western news agencies.

The Israeli advance came from the south of Beirut. One group moved up the coast encountering resistance from Lebanese forces and another group moved inland and took up positions at key intersection overlooking a Palestinian refugee camp.

The Lebanese Government was informed by the Israelis through American Ambassador Robert Dillon that the forces had made their move to defuse mines and dismantle barricades, but eyewitnesses said the Israelis had begun digging trenches.

Some Israeli soldiers were reported to have withdrawn yesterday afternoon and the Lebanese television quoted Prime Minister Shafiq al-Wazzan as saying that the pullback of these forces would be completed today.

The spokesman said, however, that eight Israeli soldiers were captured yesterday afternoon in their out post and were taken to the Syria-controlled region in central Lebanon.

This encounter was the second one since the evacuation of Palestinian and Syrian soldiers from Lebanon. A Syrian MIG-25 was shot down by Israeli airforce August 31 in Beirut.

Walking hand-in-hand, the two leaders inspected an honour guard of Tunisian armed forces and Palestinian guerrillas.

At an official welcome ceremony at Tunis-Carthage airport, 'Arafat said that "the battle is long and we have just moved from one position to another in order to continue our struggle until we achieve victory in returning to Palestine and Jerusalem."

"As we had said in Beirut, we will strive for victory of our Arab nations over the Zionist rule in the region," he said.

LEBANESE GOVERNMENT ENFORCING SECURITY LAW

OW030043 Beijing XINHUA in English 1520 GMT 2 Sep 82

[Text] Beirut, September 1 (XINHUA) -- The Lebanese Ministry of the Interior issued a regulation on public security today to be put into effect Thursday throughout the country. Under the regulation, all firearms, explosives, street barricades and unauthorized demonstrations are banned. No slogans or placards detrimental to national unity are allowed.

Sentries and patrols will be established by the Lebanese internal security forces between east and west Beirut to ensure the security of such government departments as the television station and banks. When necessary, Prime Minister Wazzan is authorized to call out government troops.

The prime minister said these regulations have met with support from all circles. Muslim and other organizations have issued statements in support of the government regulation and agreed to relinquish all street fortifications and withdraw all their armed sentries.

The 1,500-strong Muslim militia is the most powerful military force on the border between east and west Beirut. In the last few days, Israel repeatedly accused it of having received arms from the PLO and demanded its withdrawal from Beirut together with the Palestinian fighters. The demand was rejected by the Lebanese Government.

FURTHER COVERAGE OF 12TH CPC NATIONAL CONGRESS

Hu on Foreign Policy

OW040118 Beijing XINHUA in English 0108 GMT 4 Sep 82

["Hu Yaobang Reiterates China's Independent Foreign Policy" -- XINHUA headline]

[Text] Beijing, September 4 (XINHUA) -- China will adhere to an independent foreign policy, reiterated Chairman Hu Yaobang of the Communist Party of China in his report to the C.P.C. 12th National Congress on September 1.

China never attaches itself to any big power or group of powers, or yields to pressure from any big power, he said.

Hu Yaobang pointed out that China's foreign policy follows an overall long-term strategy, and is definitely not swayed by expediency or by anybody's instigation or provocation. Integration of patriotism with internationalism has always been China's point of departure in handling its external relations, he said.

He said that the five principles of mutual respect for sovereignty and territorial integrity, mutual non-aggression, non-interference in each others internal affairs, equality and mutual benefit, and peaceful coexistence have consistently guided China in it's effort to develop relations with other countries. The five principles of peacful coexistence, he added, are applicable to China's relations with all countries, including socialist countries.

Hu Yaobang said that China does not station a single soldier abroad, nor has it occupied a single inch of foreign land. China has never infringed upon the sovereignty of another country, or imposed an unequal relationship upon it. In no circumstances will China seek hegemony, he stressed.

Hu on PRC-U.S. Relations

[Text] Beijing, September 4 (XINHUA) -- Chairman Hu Yaobang of the Communist Party of China said the Sino-U.S. relations can continue to develop soundly only if the principles of mutual respect for sovereignty and territorial integrity and non-interference in each other's internal affairs are truly adhered to.

In his report to the 12th party congress, he said that not long ago, after talks lasting for nearly a year, the Chinese and U.S. Governments issued a joint communique providing for a step-by-step solution of the question of U.S. arms sales to Taiwan, leading to a final thorough settlement. It is China's hope that these provisions will be strictly observed.

He said that since the establishment of diplomatic ties between China and the United States of America in 1979, relations between the two countries have developed in the interests of their peoples. China has always hoped that these relations will continue to grow, and considers them beneficial both to the two peoples and to world peace.

Hu Yaobang pointed out that a cloud has all along hung over the relations between the two countries. This is because the United States, though it has recognized that the Government of the People's Republic of China is China's sole legal government and that there is only one China and Taiwan is part of China, has passed the "Taiwan Relations Act" which contravenes the principles embodied in the joint communique on the establishment of diplomatic relations and has continued to sell arms to Taiwan, treating Taiwan as an independent political entity.

He said that these are acts of infringement on China's sovereignty and of interference in China's internal affairs, as the Chinese Governement has repeatedly stated.

Hu on PRC-Soviet Relations

OW040136 Beijing XINHUA in English 0118 GMT 4 Sep 82

[Text] Beijing, September 4 (XINHUA) -- Chairman Hu Yaobang of the Communist Party of China said that if the Soviet authorities really have good faith to improve relations with China and take practical steps to lift their threat to China's security, it will be possible for Sino-Soviet relations to move towards normalization.

Reporting at the 12th party congress on September 1, Hu Yaobang said China has noticed that Soviet leaders have expressed more than once the desire to improve relations with China. But deeds, rather than words, are important.

Hu Yaobang said the relations between China and the Soviet Union were friendly over a fairly long period. They have become what they are today because the Soviet Union has pursued a hegemonist policy.

He pointed out that for the past twenty years, the Soviet Union has stationed massive armed forces along the Sino-Soviet and Sino-Mongolian borders. It has supported Vietnam in the latter's invasion and occupation of Kampuchea, acts of expansion in Indochina and Southeast Asia and constant provocations along China's border. Moreover, it has invaded and occupied Afghanistan, a neighbour of China, by force of arms. All these acts constitute grave threats to the peace of Asia and China's security.

Hu Yaobang said the friendship between the Chinese and Soviet peoples is of long standing, and the Chinese people will strive to safeguard and develop it, no matter what the Sino-Soviet state relations are like.

Hu on Relations With Japan

OW040126 Beijing XINHUA in English 0109 GMT 4 Sep 82

[Text] Beijing, September 4 (XINHUA) -- Chairman Hu Yaobang of the Chinese Communist Party stated that the Chinese people will work, together with the Japanese people and with far-sighted Japanese public figures in and out of government, to eliminate all factors detrimental to the relations between the two countries and make their friendship flourish from generation to generation.

In his report to the 12th party congress on September 1, Hu Yaobang said Japan is China's neighbour. There have been frequent exchanges and a profound friendship between the Chinese and Japanese peoples since ancient times. During a hundred years of modern history, the Japanese militarists unleashed one war of aggression after another against China, inflicting colossal calamities upon the Chinese people. Thanks to prolonged joint efforts made by the Chinese and Japanese peoples, diplomatic relations were eventually resumed ten years ago and friendly ties have since been developed between the two countries.

He said now some forces in Japan are white-washing the past facts of Japanese aggression against China and other east Asian countries and are carrying out various activities in an attempt to revive Japanese militarism. These dangerous developments cannot but put the people of China, Japan and other countries sharply on the alert.

Hu Yaobang on Hegemonism

[Text] Beijing, September 4 (XINHUA) -- Chairman Hu Yaobang of the Communist Party of China said that the most important task for the people of the world today is to oppose hegemonism and safeguard world peace. In his report to the 12th party congress, Hu Yaobang said that the superpowers that practise hegemonism pose a new threat to the people of the world. In their pursuit of global domination, the superpowers have been contending on a worldwide scale with military power far exceeding that of any other countries. This is the main source of instability and turmoil in the world.

The danger of a world war is growing ever greater, due to rivalry between the superpowers, Hu Yaobang said. However, experience shows that the people of the world, by persevering in struggle, can upset the strategic plans of superpowers. World peace can be safeguarded, provided the people truly unite and fight resolutely against all expressions of hegemonism and expansionism.

He pointed out that China has always firmly opposed the arms race between the superpowers, stood for the prohibition of the use of nuclear weapons and for their complete destruction and demanded that the superpowers be the first to cut their nuclear and conventional arsenals drastically. China is against world war being fomented by the superpowers and also against all the local wars of aggression they instigate or back.

Hu Yaobang stressed that China has always firmly supported all victim countries and peoples in their struggle against aggression. He said China supports the Korean people in their struggle to reunify their fatherland. China supports the Kampuchean people led by the Coalition Government of Democratic Kampuchea in their struggle against Vietnamese aggression. China supports the people of Afghanistan in their struggle against Soviet aggression. China supports the African people in their struggle against South Africa's racism and expansionism.

Hu Yaobang strongly condemned Israel for its heinous aggression and atrocities against the people of Palestine and Lebanon. With the support and protection from U.S. hegemonism, he said, Israel has outrageously occupied Palestine and carried out repeated armed aggression against Arab countries, posing a grave threat to peace in the Middle East and the world as a whole. China continues its resolute support of the Palestinian people in their struggle to return to their homeland and to found their own state and of other Arab peoples in their struggle against Israeli expansionism, he stated.

Hu on Third World Cooperation

["China Will Expand Cooperation With Third World Countries, Says Hu Yaobang" -- XINHUA headline]

[Text] Beijing, September 4 (XINHUA) -- China regards it as its sacred international duty to wage a resolute struggle against imperialism, hegemonism and colonialism together with the other Third World countries, declared Chairman Hu Yaobang of the Communist Party of China.

China will steadily expand its friendly cooperation with the other Third World countries and people, he added.

In his report to the 12th party congress, Hu Yaobang said China belongs to the Third World and is a developing country, but it has always done its best to help other Third World countries with whom it shares a common destiny. The Chinese people have always spurned the attitude and actions of despising the poor and currying favour with the rich, bullying the weak and fearing the strong. China's friendship with other Third World countries is sincere. Whether in providing aid or co-operation for mutual benefit, China has always strictly respected the sovereignty of the other party, attaching no string or demanding no privileges.

The emergence of the Third World on the international arena after World War II is a primary event of the time, Hu Yaobang said. This has greatly changed the situation in which the superpowers could wilfully manipulate the fate of the world.

He said the common task confronting the Third World countries is, first and foremost, to defend their national independence and state sovereignty and actively develop their national economies so as to back up their new-won political independence with economic independence. In this connection, mutual aid among Third World countries is of particular importance. Mutual economic co-operation among Third World countries, commonly known as "South-South co-operation', is of great strategic significance as it helps to break out of the existing unequal international economic relations and create a new international economic order.

Hu on Party Relations

[Text] Beijing, September 4 (XINHUA) -- Chairman Hu Yaobang declared the Chinese Communist Party will conduct its relations with the communist or working-class parties of other countries in strict conformity with Marxism and the principles of independence, complete equality, mutual respect and non-interference in each other's internal affairs.

Reporting at the 12th party congress on September 1, Hu Yaobang said that the success of the revolution in any country depends on the ripeness of conditions for it and the people's support for the line and policies of the country's communist party. Communist parties should of course help each other, but to issue orders or run things for others from outside is absolutely impermissible. Any attempt to impose one's own views on other parties or interfere in their internal affairs will only lead to setback or failure in the revolution in these countries.

He stressed that all communist parties should respect each other. Each party has its strong and weak points. Being situated in different circumstances, all parties cannot be expected to hold completely identical views on the assessment of the situation and their tasks. Their differences of opinion can only be resolved gradually through friendly consultations and patiently giving each other time. The C.P.C. favours the idea that all communist parties learn from each other's successes and failures, and it believes that this will contribute to the growth and flourishing of the international communist movement.

On the principles mentioned above, Hu Yaobang said, the C.P.C. has maintained friendly relations with many other communist parties. The C.P.C. appreciates their support and help and is conscientiously learning from their experience whatever is of help to China's revolution and construction. The C.P.C. also wishes to establish similar contacts with a greater number of progressive parties and organizations.

Hu on Party Chairman Post

[Text] Beijing, 4 Sep (XINHUA) -- There will be a general secretary [zong shu ji 4920 2579 6068] in place of the chairman in the party Central Committee and there will be advisory committees at the central and provincial levels.

This was what Comrade Hu Yaobang said in his report to the 12th CPC National Congress.

He said: The new party constitution contains many new stipulations designed to improve the central and local organizations of the party, to strengthen the party's discipline and discipline inspection organs and to strengthen the building of its primary organizations.

He said: According to the stipulations of the new party constitution, the general secretary in the party Central Committee is responsible for calling meetings of the Central Political Bureau and the Political Bureau Standing Committee is in charge of the work of the Central Secretariat. Advisory committees are set up at the central and provincial levels in order to bring into play the role of many politically experienced veteran cadres in giving advice on the cause of the party. The committees for inspecting discipline of the party at various levels are elected by the party congresses of corresponding levels. They exercise supervision as prescribed by the party constitution over the party committees of the corresponding levels below the Central Committee and their members. They may report to the Central Committee on any discipline violations by members of the Central Committee. The party organizations at all levels must attach importance to party building and constantly discuss and inspect the party's work in propaganda, education, organization, discipline inspection, its work among the masses and its united front work.

Hu on Party Discipline

["Hu Yaobang on Revision of Party Constitution" -- XINHUA headline]

[Text] Beijing, September 5 (XINHUA) -- Chairman Hu Yaobang told the 12th National Congress of the Communist Party of China that the general principle guiding the revision of the party constitution is, in conformity with the characteristics and needs of the new historical period, to set more exacting demands on party members, enhance the fighting capacity of the party organization and uphold and improve party leadership.

Reporting at the congress on September 1, Hu Yaobang said that the draft of the revised party constitution now submitted to this congress for its consideration has made many fundamental changes and discarded the "left" errors in the constitution adopted by the eleventh congress, and carries forward the merits of the party constitutions passed respectively by the seventh and eighth congresses. The general programme section in the draft constitution includes Marxist definitions about the character and guiding ideology of the party, the principal contradiction in China at the present stage and the general task of the party, and the correct way for the party to play its leading role in the life of the state.

He pointed out that the ideological, political and organizational requirements this draft constitution sets for the party members and cadres are stricter than those in all the previous constitutions. In stipulating the duties of party members, the draft absolutely forbids them to use public office for personal gain or to benefit themselves at the expense of the public interests, and requires that they firmly oppose factionalism and be bold in backing good people and good deeds and in opposing bad people and bad deeds.

In the light of the historical experience and lessons, Hu Yaobang noted, the draft constitution emphasizes that all organizations from the central down to the primary levels must strictly observe the principles of democratic centralism and collective leadership, and it explicitly stipulates that the party "forbids all forms of personality cult". It makes many new provisions for improving the system of the central and local organizations, tightening party discipline, reinforcing the discipline inspection organs and strengthening the primary party organizations.

He pointed out that all these stipulations should help to reinforce the party's collective leadership, enhance its fighting capacity and strengthen its ties with the masses.

He said that the present draft is an improvement on all the previous constitutions and is fuller in content. Being a precious crystallization of the party's historical experience and collective wisdom, it is an important guarantee for building the party to greater strength in the new historical period.

["Hu Yaobang on Party's Leading Organs" -- XINHUA headline]

[Text] Beijing, September 5 (XINHUA) -- The Central Committee of the Communist Party of China is to have no chairman but only a general secretary, said Chairman Hu Yaobang in his report to the 12th party congress on September 1.

According to the draft constitution submitted to the congress for consideration, he said, the general secretary is to convene meetings of the Political Bureau and it's Standing Committee and preside over the work of the Secretariat. Advisory committees are to be established at the central and provincial levels to give many veteran comrades rich in political experience a role as consultants in the service of the party's cause. Commissions for discipline inspection are to be elected by party congresses at the respective levels and, within limits prescribed by the party constitution, they are to supervise party committees and their members at the respective levels below the Central Committee and may report to the Central Committee any breach of party discipline by its members. Party Organizations at all levels must pay great attention to party building and regularly discuss and check up on the party's work in propaganda, education, organization and discipline inspection, its mass work and united front work.

All these stipulations, Hu Yaobang said, should help to reinforce the party's collective leadership, enhance its fighting capacity and strengthen its ties with the masses.

Hu on Cadre System Reform

OW050140 Beijing XINHUA Domestic Service in Chinese 0035 GMT 5 Sep 82

["Hu Yaobang on Cadres" -- XINHUA headline]

[Text] Beijing, September 5 (XINHUA) -- Chairman Hu Yaobang of the Communist Party of China said in his report to the 12th national party congress that an important question in party building is to reform the leading bodies and the cadre system and ensure that the ranks of the cadres become more revolutionary, younger in average age, better educated and more professionally competent.

The main aim of reforming the system of leadership and the leading organs of the party and state, he said, is to eliminate such defects as overconcentration of power, proliferation of concurrent and deputy posts, organizational overlapping, lack of clear-cut job responsibility, overstaffing and failure to separate party work from government duties, and thereby overcome bureaucracy and increase work efficiency.

Hu Yaobang said the first stage of reform of the party and government organs at the central level has been basically completed, and the reform in the provinces, municipalities and autonomous regions is scheduled to start in the second half of this year or in the coming year. This reform is an important political guarantee for the success of China's modernization and adherence to the socialist road.

During the organizational reform, he noted, measures should be taken to relieve the many veteran cadres who are advanced in age of their heavy responsibilities in "front line" posts, and at the same time enable them to continue their service to the party, the state and society by utilizing their rich experience in leadership work. Large numbers of energetic young and middle-aged cadres who possess both political integrity and ability must be appointed to various posts in good time, so that they can be tempered over a longer period practically and effectively by working with older cadres and gradually taking over responsibilities from them.

He emphasized: We must resolutely remove from leading posts those who rose to power by rebelling, those with serious factional thinking, those smash-and-grabbers, those who oppose the line adopted by the central authorities since the 3d Plenary Session of the 11th CPC Central Committee and those serious violators of law. Those who committed crimes must be dealt with according to law. They of course are absolutely disqualified for selection. These are matters important to the continuation of China's socialist cause, he added.

Strenuous efforts must be made to strengthen the education and training of cadres in order to bring up large numbers of specialized personnel needed for socialist modernization, Hu Yaobang said. Party schools at all levels, cadre schools run by government organizations and enterprises, and especially designated institutions of higher learning and specialized secondary schools should all, as required by socialist modernization and in their different capacities, revise their teaching plans and shoulder the regular training of cadres. All functionaries on the job who need further study should be trained in rotation.

Hu on Party Consolidation

["Hu Yaobang on Party Consolidation" -- XINHUA headline]

[Text] Beijing, September 5 (XINHUA) -- Chairman Hu Yaobang of the Communist Party of China announced that the Central Committee has decided on an overall rectification of party style and consolidation of party organizations, which will proceed by stages and by groups over a period of three years beginning from the latter half of 1983, to achieve a fundamental turn for the better in the style of the party.

In his report to the 12th party congress, Hu Yaobang said the Communist Party of China is the vanguard of the Chinese working class. It has been nurtured over the years by Marxism-Leninism and Mao Zedong Thought and has grown up in the course of repeated steeling by successes and failures. Rallied in the party are outstanding elements of the Chinese working class and people. The main body of the party remains politically pure and strong in spite of the serious damage inflicted by the "Cultural Revolution". After recovery and consolidation in the past few years, the situation in the party is now much improved, and it's prestige is being restored and on the rise.

However, he pointed out, the pernicious influences of the ten years of domestic turmoil have not yet been eradicated, and there has been some increase in the corrosive influence of the exploiting-class ideologies under new conditions. It is true that impurities in ideology, style and organization still exist within the party and that no fundamental turn for the better has as yet been made in the party style.

He said the style of a party in power determines its very survival. The rectification of party style and consolidation of party organizations will be of primary importance for the party, and it requires very careful attention and preparation and should be carried out step by step in a planned way. The key link in accomplishing this work must be thorough-going ideological education throughout the party.

Stress must be laid on getting every party member to understand clearly the character, position and role of the party and to realize that all party members have only duty to serve the people diligently and conscientiously, and have no right whatsoever to take advantage of their power and positions to "fatten" on the state and on the masses.

In matters of organization and leadership, Hu Yaobang said, the consolidation will start with the leading organs and cadres and then proceed, from top to bottom, with the leading bodies at different levels which have already been consolidated leading the consolidation of the subordinate and primary organizations. Bad elements must on no account be permitted to take this as an opportunity to frame and attack good people. It is imperative to act in, and develop further, the spirit of the Yanan rectification movement of 1942, follow its principle of "learning from past mistakes to avoid future ones and curing the sickness to save the patient" and it's twofold objective of "clarity in ideology and unity among comrades" in unfolding earnest criticism and self-criticism, and take appropriate measures to solicit opinions from the masses outside the party.

In the final stage, he said, there will be a re-registration of all party members and, in strict accordance with the provisions of the new party constitution, those who still fail to meet the requirements of membership after education shall be expelled from the party or asked to withdraw from it, at the same time, steps must be taken to effectively improve the work of leadership by party organizations at all levels, and concrete measures adopted to strengthen and improve party leadership.

Hu Yaobang said the proposed consolidation of the party is meant to further normalize inner-party political life, check the unhealthy tendencies effectively and greatly strengthen the ties between the party and the masses. In this way, a fundamental turn for the better in the style of the party will certainly be achieved.

Hu on Reunification

["Reunification of Motherland is China's Internal Affairs, Says Hu Yaobang" -- XINHUA headline]

[Text] Beijing, September 5 (XINHUA) -- Chairman Hu Yaobang of the Communist Party of China told the 12th party congress that the reunification of the motherland is the common desire of all Chinese compatriots, it is an inevitable outcome of historical development, which no political party or individual can resist.

This is China's internal affair with which no foreign country has the right to interfere, he said.

Reporting at the congress on September 1, Hu Yaobang said that the party faces yet another historic task, that of joining hands with all Chinese patriotic fellow-countrymen in the common endeavor to accomplish the sacred task of reunifying the motherland. Taiwan is part of the sacred territory of the motherland, and the people in Taiwan are kith and kin of the people on the mainland.

He said he hoped the compatriots in Taiwan, Hong Kong and Macao and Chinese nationals residing abroad will urge the Kuomintang authorities to take a realistic view of the situation, put the future of the country and the interests of the nation above all else, and not stick obstinately to a wrong course so that talks between the Kuomintang and the Communist Party may be held at an early date and joint efforts made to bring about the peaceful reunification of the motherland.

Holds 2d Plenary Session

[Text] Beijing, September 6 (XINHUA) — The 12th National Congress of the Communist Party of China held a plenary session in the Great Hall of the People here this afternoon.

Presiding Chairman Hu Yaobang presided over the session which was attended by 1,559 delegates and 144 alternate delegates.

Comrades Ye Jianying and Chen Yun spoke at the plenary session. Their speeches drew many rounds of warm applause.

The congress passed a resolution which approved the report made by Hu Yaobang on behalf of the 11th party Central Committee.

The resolution says the congress considers that the line, principles and policies followed by the party since the third plenum of the 11th Central Committee are correct and the work done in this period has been very fruitful.

A correct program and a series of principles and policies for creating a new situation in all fields of socialist modernization are put forward in the report and they should become the basic guideline for all work of the party in the future, the resolution says.

The congress approved the new party constitution in a resolution adopted at the plenary session. It decided that the new constitution goes into effect immediately.

Then, Comrade Ye Jianying made a speech at the session. He said, "After this congress, a good number of comrades who are in their prime will take up leading positions in the Central Committee and elsewhere. This is a major sign that our party's cause is flourishing."

He quoted the Tang Dynasty poet Li Shangyin's verse, "The phoenix chick sings sweeter than the older birds," to encourage newly promoted young comrades to work in close cooperation with old comrades, shouldering heavy responsibilities and forging courageously ahead.

Ye Jianying said that many old comrades will retire from their leading posts, as required by the development of the party's cause. They are meritorious contributers to the revolution, and the party and the people will never forget their services.

He said he hoped that the retiring comrades would not retire ideologically and would always keep the interests of the party and the people at heart and continue to do some work that is within their strength.

Ye Jianying said that all party committees from the central down to the local levels must do still better in practicing democratic centralism and upholding the principle of collective leadership so as to ensure the normal functioning and correct leadership of the party and prolonged political stability in China.

In his speech, Comrade Chen Yun said the party's cadres have long faced the problem of aging to varying degrees and a gap between the old and the young. Unless this problem is solved now, and satisfactorily, the cause of communism may suffer a setback in China, he said.

The first step in solving this problem, Chen Yun said, is for the old cadres to retire successively from the leading bodies. When the old cadres withdraw from the "front line", they should support the young and middle-aged cadres in their work and take upon themselves the task of helping and guiding the latter and passing on experience to them. Only when the old cadres have fulfilled this task can it be said that they have done their bit to the last for the party and the revolutionary cause.

Chen Yun pointed out that since the ranks of cadres now show a gap between the old and the young, the old comrades cannot leave the leading bodies all at once. They should devote their energies mainly to helping and guiding younger people, passing on experience to them, giving advice on major issues and seeing to it that these issues are handled correctly.

Chen Yun made two points in connection with the question of promoting young and middle-aged cadres to the leading bodies at all levels. One is that not just a few dozen or a few hundred, but thousands and tens of thousands must be promoted, he said. The other point, he continued, is that none of the following three types of people should be promoted: people who rose to prominence during the "Cultural Revolution" by following Lin Biao, Jiang Qing and their like in "rebellion"; people who are seriously factionalist in their ideas; and people who indulged in beating, smashing and looting. Any of them who have already been promoted must be resolutely removed from the leading bodies, he added.

He stressed: "There are two other types of people whom we should also not promote to leading posts. I mean people who are opposed to the line followed by the Central Committee of the party since its third plenary session, and people who have seriously violated the law and discipline in the economic and other spheres."

He pointed out that there are plenty of young and midde-aged people who behaved well or basically well during the "Cultural Revolution". "It is mainly from among them that we should select cadres for promotion," he said.

Chen Yun said: "I am convinced that so long as we solve well the problem of succession from old cadres to younger ones, there will be no lack of successors to carry on the cause of our party."

The other presiding chairmen at today's session were Ye Jianying, Chen Yun, Li Desheng, Yu Qiuli, Zhang Tingfa, Gu Mu, Song Renqiong and Hu Qiaomu.

Leading members of various democratic parties, non-party personages, public figures and some veteran cadres and leading cadres of the party attended the session as observers.

[Text] Beijing, September 6 (XINHUA) -- The Constitution of the Communist Party of China adopted today at the 12th party congress is drawing attention for its many new contents not included in the previous party constitutions.

One of the salient features of the new party constitution is that its general program, with its enriched contents, fairly completely outlines the party program.

The general program is followed by ten chapters with 50 articles. The main contents of the program include the following three aspects:

-- Setting stricter demands on party members, party cadres and party grassroots organizations than previous party constitutions;

-- Making some important revisions on party organizational system; and

-- Containing concrete and fairly comprehensive provisions with regard to the party's democratic centralism and the party's discipline.

The general program of the party constitution says the Communist Party of China is the vanguard of the Chinese working class, the true representative of the interests of the people of all nationalities in China, and the force at the core leading China's cause of socialism. The ultimate goal of the party is the achievement of the social system of communism, and the party takes Marxism-Leninism and Mao Zedong Thought as its guide to action.

Based on the theory of scientific socialism, the general program analyzes the trend of development of world history, China's present historical stage and the basic features of the socialist system. It points out: "The development and improvement of the socialist system is a long historical process. Fundamentally speaking, the socialist system is incomparably superior to the capitalist system in that it eliminates the contradictions inherent in the capitalist system, which the latter by itself is incapable of overcoming. [quotes as received]

The general program stipulates: "Under socialism the people truly become masters of the country, and they gradually shed the old ideas and ways formed under the system of exploitation and private ownership of the means of production, steadily increase their communist consciousness, and steadily foster among themselves common ideals, common ethics and a common discipline. Under socialism full scope is given to the initiative and creativeness of the people, the social productive forces are developed rapidly and proportionately and in a planned way, and the growing material and cultural demands of the members of society are met.

"The cause of socialism is advancing and is bound gradually to triumph throughout the world along paths suited to the specific conditions of each country and chosen by its people of their own free will."

The general program stipulates the general task of the Communist Party of China at the present stage is to unite the people of all nationalities in relying on their own efforts and working hard so as to achieve, step by step, the modernization of industry, agriculture, national defence and science and technology and turn China into a socialist country that is highly civilized and democratic.

The general program explicitly stipulates that the party is the vanguard of the working class, and it defines the party's guiding thinking and lists the party's three main characteristics or basic requirements. The three requirements are:

-- First, a high degree of ideological and political unity. The Communist Party of China makes realization of communism its maximum program, to which all its members must devote their whole lives. At the present stage, upholding the socialist road, the people's democratic dictatorship, the leadership of the party, and Marxism-Leninism and Mao Zedong Thought and concentrating efforts on China's socialist modernization constitute the political basis for the solidarity and unity of the whole party. The party's ideological line is to proceed from reality in everything, integrate theory with practice, seek truth from facts, and verify and develop truth through practice.

-- Second, whole-hearted service to the people. The party has no special interests of its own except the interests of the working class and the broadest masses of the people. The party's program and policies are the scientific expressions of the fundamental interests of the working class and the broadest masses of the people. In the whole process of leading the people in realising the ideal of communism, the party always shares weal and woe with the people, keeps in closest contact with them, and allows none of its members to become divorced from the masses or place himself above them. The party perseveres in educating the people in communist ideology and follows the mass line in its work.

-- Third, adherance to democratic centralism. Full scope is given to democracy in the party. The party practises a high degree of centralism on the basis of full democracy and strengthens the sense of organization and discipline, so as to ensure unity of action of the whole party and the prompt and effective implementation of its decisions. The principle is applied of equality of all members before party discipline.

The general program also defines the party's basic policies on domestic affairs:

-- The centre of gravity of all the work of the party is to lead the people of all nationalities in accomplishing the country's socialist modernization;

-- The party leads the people in building a highly-developed socialist spiritual civilization while they strive for a highly-developed material civilization;

-- The party leads the people in promoting socialist democracy, perfecting the socialist legal system, and consolidating the people's democratic dictatorship;

-- The party upholds and promotes the relations of equality, unity and mutual assistance among all nationalities in the country, persists in the policy of national regional autonomy; and

-- The party unites with the workers, peasants and intellectuals of all nationalities and with all the democratic parties and people with no party affiliations and the patriotic forces of all nationalities in further expanding and fortifying the broadest possible patriotic united front embracing all socialist working people, all patriots who support socialism or support the reunification of the motherland. The party works together with the whole nation, including the compatriots in Taiwan, Hong Kong and Macao or residing abroad, for accomplishing the great task of reunifying the motherland.

The general program stipulates the party's basic stand in international affairs:

-- The party adheres to proletarian internationalism and firmly unites with workers of all lands, the oppressed nations and oppressed peoples and all peace-loving and justice-upholding organizations and people in the common struggle against imperialism, hegemonism and colonialism and for defending world peace and achieving human progress;

-- It stands for the development of state relations between China and other countries on the basis of the five principles of mutual respect for sovereignty and territorial integrity, mutual non-aggression, non-interference in each others internal affairs, equality and mutual benefit, and peaceful coexistence; and

-- It develops relations with communist parties and other working-class parties in other countries on the basis of Marxism and the principles of independence, complete equality, mutual respect and non-interference in each others internal affairs.

The general program says party leadership consists mainly in political, ideological and organizational leadership. The party must formulate and implement correct lines, principles and policies and brings into play the exemplary vanguard role of all party members in every work and every aspect of social life. The party must operate within the scope of the Constitution and the laws of the state. It must see to it that the legislative, judicial and executive organs of the state and the economic, cultural and people's organizations function on their own initiative, independently, responsibly and in harmony. The party must strengthen its leadership over the trade union, the Communist Youth League, the Women's Federation and other mass organizations and give full scope to their roles.

The titles of the ten chapters are: 1, Membership; 2, Organizational System of the Party; 3, Central Organizations of the Party; 4, Local Organizations of the Party; 5, Primary Organizations of the Party; 6, Party Cadres; 7, Party Discipline; 8, The Party's Organs for Discipline Inspection; 9, Leading Party Members Groups; and 10, Relation Between the Party and the Communist Youth League.

Stresses Democratic Centralism

OW061233 Beijing XINHUA in English 1217 GMT 6 Sep 82

[Text] Beijing, September 6 (XINHUA) -- The constitution of the Communist Party of China adopted today at the 12th party congress stresses adherence to the principle of democratic centralism and perfecting inner-party democratic life while setting new and stricter demands on party members and cadres.

With regard to the party's organizational system, the new party constitution reaffirms the principle of a high degree of centralism on the basis of a high degree of democracy.

The party constitution stipulates: "Individual party members are subordinate to the organization, the minority is subordinate to the majority, the lower party organizations are subordinate to the higher party organizations, and all the constituent organizations and all the members of the party are subordinate to the national party congress and the Central Committee.

"Party committees at all levels shall function on the principle of combining collective leadership with individual responsibility under a division of labour. All major issues should be decided upon by the party committees after democratic discussion.

"The party forbids all forms of personality cult. It is necessary to ensure that all the activities of party leaders are subject to supervision by the party and the people while the prestige of party leaders who represent the interests of the party and people is to be protected."

The party constitution also provides:

-- The election of delegates to party congresses and of members of party committees at all levels should reflect the will of the electors. Elections shall be held by secret ballot:

-- Party organizations must keep to the principle of subordination of the minority to the majority in discussing and making decisions on all matters. Serious consideration should be given to the differing views of a minority;

-- On major policies of a national character, only the Central Committee of the party has the power to make the relevant decisions. Party organizations of the various departments and localities may make suggestions regarding them to the Central Committee, but they shall not make any decisions or make their views known outside the party without authorization;

-- The newspapers and journals and other means of publicity run by party organizations at all levels must propagate the line, principles, policies and decisions of the party; and

-- No party members, whatever their position, are allowed to make decisions on major issues individually. No leaders are allowed to practise arbitrary individual rule or place themselves above the party organization.

The party constitution sets stricter demands on party members. It stresses members of the Communist Party of China must serve the people whole-heartedly and dedicate their whole lives to the realization of communism, not hesitating to make any personal sacrifices. Members of the Communist Party of China are forever ordinary members of the working people. Apart from those personal interests and job functions and powers as allowed by the relevant regulations and policies, Communist Party members must not seek personal gains or special privileges.

The party constitution lists eight duties party members must fulfil, including:

-- To conscientiously study Marxism-Leninism and Mao Zedong Thought, and acquire general, scientific and professional knowledge;

-- To observe the principle that the interests of the party and the people stand above everything, subordinate to them their personal interests, be the first to bear hardships and the last to enjoy comforts, work selflessly for the public interests, and absolutely not use public office for personal gains or benefit oneself at the expense of the public;

-- To perseveringly execute the party's decisions;

-- To uphold the party's solidarity and unity;

-- Be truthful and honest with the party, be as good as one's word;

-- To maintain close ties with the masses;

-- To play an exemplary vanguard role in production, other work, study and social life; and

-- In order to defend the motherland and the interests of the people, step forward and fight bravely in all times of difficulty and danger, showing the spirit of fearing neither hardship nor death.

The party constitution says every party member, irrespective of his position, must be organized into a branch, cell or other specific unit of the party to participate in the regular activities of the party organization and accept supervision by the masses inside and outside the party. There shall be no privileged party members who do not participate in the regular activities of the party organization and do not accept supervision by the masses inside the outside the party.

It stipulates party members are free to withdraw from the party. A party member who loses his revolutionary will, wo refuses to fulfil the duties of a party member and has ceased to be qualified for membership and remains incorrigible after repeated education should be persuaded to withdraw from the party.

A special chapter "party cadres", not contained in any previous party constitutions, has been added to the new constitution.

The party constitution explicitly stipulates party cadres are public servants of the people. The party selects its cadres according to the principle of combining ability and political integrity. It calls for genuine efforts to make the cadre contingents revolutionized, younger, knowledgeable and professional. Party cadres must accept training by the party as well as its examination and appraisal of their work. The party should attach importance to the training and selection of women cadres and cadres from among the minority nationalities.

The party constitution says leading party cadres at all levels, in addition to performing, in an exemplary way, their duties as party members as provided in the party constitution, should meet the following six basic requirements:

-- To have a fair grasp of the theories and policies of Marxism-Leninism and Mao Zedong Thought, and be able to adhere to the socialist road;

-- To make investigation conscientiously, and persist in proceeding from reality and properly carry out the line, principles and policies of the party in their work as leaders;

-- To be fervently dedicated to the revolutionary cause and imbued with a strong sense of political responsibility, be qualified for leading posts in organizational ability, general education and vocational knowledge;

-- To have a democratic style of work, keep in close contact with the masses, correctly implement the party's mass line, conscientiously accept criticism and supervision by the party and the masses, and oppose bureaucracy;

-- To correctly exercise their functions and powers, observe and safeguard the party and state systems, and combat all acts of abusing power and seeking personal gain; and

-- To be good at uniting with as many comrades as possible on the basis of adherence to the principle, including uniting and working with comrades with differing views.

The party constitution stipulates that leading party cadres at all levels, whether elected through democratic procedure or appointed by a leading body, are not entitled to lifelong tenure, and they can be shifted from or relieved of their posts.

Ye Jianying's Speech

[Text] Beijing, September 6 (XINHUA) -- Following is the full text of the speech made by Ye Jianying, vice-chairman of the Central Committee of the Communist Party of China, at the plenary session of the 12th national party congress here this afternoon:

Our present party congress is well prepared, and it is proceeding smoothly. I fully agree with the opening speech made by Comrade Deng Xiaoping. Comrade Hu Yaobang has made a very important report on behalf of the Central Committee, and the revision of the party Constitution has been well done. I fully agree with both.

Our party is full of vigour and vitality. After this congress, a good number of comrades who are in their prime will take up leading positions in the Central Committee and elsewhere. This is a major sign that our party's cause is flourishing, which pleases us old comrades greatly.

The Tang Dynasty poet Li Shangyin wrote the line "The phoenix chick sings sweeter than the older birds" in praise of the poetic talent of a young man. It means that late-comers surpass old-timers, and the young will excel the old. This can be said to be a basic law in the development of history and the progress of society. I hope that the newly promoted young comrades will work in close cooperation with the old comrades, shouldering heavy responsibilities and forging courageously ahead. Man's ability to acquire knowledge is unlimited, but the knowledge of any individual is limited. Hence, one must be good at learning. We believe that, so long as our comrades strive to arm themselves with communist ideology, the party's historical experience and modern science, and so long as they unite with the masses, work hard, know their subordinates well and make good use of them and readily follow good advice, they will certainly be able to do a remarkable job in their leading positions and accomplish glorious feats befitting this great epoch on the march towards China's modernization.

Following this congress, many old comrades will retire from their leading posts, as required by the development of our party's cause. Having worked diligently for scores of years, these old comrades are meritorious contributers to the revolution. The party and the people will never forget their services. The retiring comrades should not retire ideologically. They should, by their deeds, write the last chapter of their lives well, that is to say, they should always keep the interests of the party and the people at heart and continue to do some work that is within their strength.

I am now eighty-five, failing in health and unable to do as much as I would like. For the sake of our party's cause, I have time and again asked to retire from my leading position. However, until the Central Committee decides to grant this, I will do the best I can and devote my all to the party.

After the twelfth national party congress, we shall strive to create a new situation in all fields of socialist modernization. It will be an arduous task. The new Central Committee must do still better in practising democratic centralism and upholding the principle of collective leadership. When the wisdom and strength of the masses are pooled, all affairs become easier to deal with, difficulties are overcome, dangers averted and errors minimized -- this has been repeatedly borne out by the past experience of the party. The Political Bureau and the Secretariat of the Central Committee have done fairly well in this respect, and achieved notable results in recent years. All party committees from the central down to the local levels should henceforth do likewise in order to ensure the normal functioning and correct leadership of the party and prolong the political stability in our country. I hope that this fundamental principle in running the affairs of the party and the state will be maintained and passed on from generation to generation. That is all I want to say today. I wish this congress complete success.

Chen Yun's Speech

[Text] Beijing, September 6 (XINHUA) -- Following is the full text of the speech by Chen Yun, vice-chairman of the Central Committee of the Communist Party of China, at the plenary session of the 12th national party congress here this afternoon:

I fully agree with the report delivered to this congress by Comrade Hu Yaobang on behalf of the Central Committee, with the draft of the revised party constitution, the opening speech made by Comrade Deng Xiaoping and with the speech made by Comrade Ye Jianying.

After the smashing of the "gang of four", our party set right its course at the third plenary session of its eleventh Central Committee and then, step by step through the fourth, fifth and sixth plenary sessions, it brought the nation's political life and socialist construction onto the correct path of sound development.

However, we must be soberly aware that for various reasons, the ranks of our party's cadres have long faced the problem of aging to varying degrees, and a gap between the old and the young. Unless this problem is solved now, and satisfactorily, the cause of communism may suffer a setback in China. All comrades, particularly the old comrades, should realize the gravity and urgency of this problem.

Therefore, the satisfactory solution of the problem of the smooth succession from old cadres to younger ones is an important task facing the whole party.

The first step in solving this problem is for the old cadres to retire successively from the leading bodies.

In the recent organizational reform of the party central organs and the State Council, some old comrades vacated their "front line" leading posts. And at the recent seventh plenary session of the 11th Central Committee a large number of other old comrades expressed the wish to leave the Central Committee and other leading posts. This shows that our old cadres have a strong sense of revolutionary responsibility.

When the old cadres withdraw from the "front line", does it mean that they have come to the end of their revolutionary career? No, it does not. Whether they withdraw to the second line to do such work as they have the stren gth for or completely retire, they should support the young and middle-aged cadres in their work and take upon themselves the task of helping and guiding the latter and passing on experience to them. Only when the old cadres have fulfilled this task can it be said that they have done their bit to the last for the party and the revolutionary cause.

Besides, since the ranks of our cadres now show a gap between the old and the young, the old comrades cannot leave the leading bodies all at once. As dictated by the actual situation, some old comrades will have to remain at "front line" posts for the time being. Even so, they should devote most of their energy not to the heavy day-to-day work as before, but to helping and guiding younger people, passing on experience to them, giving advice and checking to see that major issues are handled correctly.

To effect the smooth succession from old cadres to younger ones, young and middle-aged cadres must be promoted to the leading bodies at all levels.

In connection with this question, I would like to make two points:

One is that not just a few dozen or a few hundred, but thousands and tens of thousands must be promoted. Why? Because only thus will there be enough people to take over the work of the large numbers of old comrades who retire from the leading bodies; o ly thus will we have a greater choice and find truly reliable successors; and only thus will it be possible to prevent the trouble-makers who were promoted to leading posts during the "Cultural Revolution" from stirring up any serious disturbances in future.

In order to promote thousands and tens of thousands of young and middle-aged cadres, we must take a developmental view in judging them and not just see that they are yet inexperienced. To be sure, the young and middle-aged cadres do not have the righ working experience of the old cadres. But we should ask ourselves the question: Where does experience come from? The answer is, only from tempering in practical work. Placed in posts of responsibility and given a heavy load, the young and middle-aged cadres can certainly gain experience and gradually mature through tempering in three or five years, or at most eight or ten years. In addition, we can create more "assistant" posts. This would help to reduce possible resistance to the promotion of young and middle-aged cadres to full leadership. At the same time, it would enable the party organization to judge their actual leading and organizational ability before they are formally appointed as leaders.

The other point I want to make on the question of promoting young and middle-aged cadres is that none of the following three types of people should be promoted: people who rose to prominence during the "Cultural Revolution" by following Lin Biao, Jiang Qing and their like in "rebellion"; people who are seriously factionalist in their ideas; and people who indulged in beating, smashing and looting. Any of them who have already been promoted must be resolutely removed from the leading bodies.

Why should none of these prople be promoted? Because if they are recruited into leading bodies, they will surface to make trouble and again harm the nation and the people when after a number of years, the political climate is right for them, when the party faces any storms.

Of course, we should realize that only a minority of the young and middle-aged people who committed mistakes during the "Cultural Revolution" belong to these three types, while the majority of them merely drifted along. As regards the latter, so long as they have really acknowledged their mistakes, made a clean break with those three types and given a good account of themselves ever since the smashing of the gang of four, the party should trust and use them, and continue to observe and help them in the course of work.

We must also note that there are plenty of young and middle-aged people who behaved well or basically well during the "Cultural Revolution". It is mainly from among them that we should select cadres for promotion.

Apart from the three types mentioned above, there are two other types of people whom we should also not promote to leading posts. I mean people who are opposed to the line followed by the Central Committee of the party since its third plenary session, and people who have seriously violated the law and discipline in the economic and other spheres.

In short, we should on the one hand be bold and quick in promoting young and middle-aged cadres and, on the other, we should strictly insist on the political criteria. As between political integrity and professional competence, we should pay more attention to the former. In other words, we should be sure to promote people who have a strong party spirit, are honest and upright, and dare to stick to principle.

I am convinced that so long as we solve well the problem of succession from old cadres to younger ones, there will be no lack of successors to carry on the cause of our party.

PLA Delegate Group Meeting

[Text] Beijing, 4 Sep (XINHUA) -- Wu Kehua, PLA delegate to the party's 12th national congress and commander of the Guangzhou PLA units, said at a group meeting to discuss Comrade Hu Yaobang's report: Judging by conditions in our units, to make the ranks of cadres more revolutionary, their average age younger, better educated and more professionally competent, the key lies in the leading cadres and leading organs and in us veteran comrades setting an example to place the cause of the party and the people above everything else, actively recommend and appoint the able and virtuous, and promote young and middle-aged cadres who have both ability and political integrity and are in the prime of life to leading posts. On this question, we veteran comrades should further liberate our chinking and broaden our outlook. I feel that there are several questions which must be further settled:

First, it is necessary to correctly treat the young and middle-aged cadres and turn our feeling of "worry" into feeling of "relief." Some comrades do not trust the young and middle-aged cadres, are worried that they "may not be able to shoulder important responsibilities" and do not dare to boldly select and use them. Practice has shown that this kind of worry is groundless. Facts show that there are a great number of cadres in our units, who have both ability and political integrity and are in the prime of life, and that indeed there is a galaxy of talent. Placed in key positions where they can temper themselves, the outstanding young and middle-aged cadres will be enabled to gradually enhance their abilities and accumulate experience. Weren't we in our 20's and 30's when we became division and army commanders? Of course, we had been tested and tempered in actual combat in the war environment of that time, which was not the same as the present conditions. "The pupil surpasses the master." Today's outstanding young and middle-aged cadres also have come through a great deal of tempering and tests, are full of vigor, have a strong desire to make progress and a wider range of knowledge, modestly accept the experience passed on, help given and example set by the veteran comrades, and certainly can take up the important responsibilities of building a modern, regular and revolutionary army.

Second, veteran comrades should accept the fact that they are getting old and should have a correct understanding of the dialectical relationship between "doing more" and "doing less." We veteran comrades have followed the party in struggle for more than half a century, and now we have entered into old age and do not have much more time to work for the revolution. The law of nature is irresistible. Neither vigor nor physical strength permit us to continue to shoulder arduous leading tasks. Veteran comrades moving back to the second or their lines as soon as possible is conducive not only to making room for large numbers of young and middle-aged cadres who have both ability and political integrity and are in the prime of life to be promoted to leading post, but by relieving themselves from the heavy burdens of work on the first line they can do a good job in passing on experience, giving help and setting an example and continue to do some work within their capabilities for the motherland's modernization.

Third, it is necessary to effectively settle the question of the veteran cadres' political and material treatment. Work should be done in two areas. On the one hand it is necessary to educate the masses of cadres and fighters, especially leading cadres in active service, to create a fine social atmosphere of respect for the old and virtuous and make proper arrangements for and take good care of the veteran cadres who have moved to the second or third lines in accordance with relevant regulations of the party Central Committee and the Military Commission.

On the other hand, we veteran cadres should consciously place strict demands on ourselves and take the lead in preserving and carrying forward the revolutionary tradition of hard struggle and plain living. We should think more of the revolutionary martyrs and comrades in arms who fought bloody battles together with us and gave their lives during the war years. They spilled their blood and gave their lives for the revolution, and what reward did they get? At all times and wherever we are, we Communists should maintain a vigorous revolutionary spirit, unconditionally subordinate our personal interests to the interests of the revolution, never argue about conditions or money, always serve the needs of the revolution and always obey the arrangements made by the organization.

Democratic Party Leaders

[Text] Beijing, 3 Sep (XINHUA) — More than 70 responsible persons of democratic parties, nonparty patriots and well-known personages from various circles this morning held separate group discussions on the opening speech by Comrade Deng Xiaoping at the 12th CPC National Congress and the report made by Comrade Hu Yaobang on behalf of the CPC Central Committee. They are attending the 12th CPC National Congress as observers.

The non-CPC personages who took part in today's discussion deem it an honor to be invited to attend the CPC national congress as observers.

They said: In 1956, the Eighth CPC National Congress invited non-CPC personages to attend as observers. That the 12th CPC National Congress is doing the same shows that it has inherited and carried forward the CPC's glorious traditions.

Zhu Xuefan, vice chairman of the Central Committee of the Revolutionary Committee of the Chinese Kuomintang, said during the discussion: In the opening speech, Comrade Deng Xiaoping said that, in the construction work ahead, the CPC would continue its long-term cooperation with all democratic parties and patriots. In his report, Comrade Hu Yaobang also said that the CPC would strengthen its cooperation with democratic parties by continuing to adhere to the principle of "long-term coexistence and mutual supervision" and "showing utter devotion to each other and sharing honor and disgrace." We are inspired that the CPC attaches so much importance to democratic parties. We democratic parties should enhance our sense of responsibility and play our role as democratic parties under CPC leadership.

Sun Xiaocun, vice president of the China Democratic National Construction Association, described the significance of the convocation of the 12th CPC National Congress as "carrying forward the revolutionary cause and forging ahead into the future."

He said: Since the 3d Plenary Session of the 11th CPC Central Committee, the CPC's policies on the united front have been implemented. The millstone put on us democratic parties has been removed. What we are pondering is how to contribute our strength to the people and to the four modernizations. "While my remaining years are short, my desire to dedicate my service to the country becomes more intense." This reflects our state of mind. I believe that the 12th CPC National Congress will more energetically inspire and prompt us democratic parties and patriots to dedicate ourselves to the four modernizations.

Wen Jiasi, vice chairman of the Central Committee of the China Democratic League, said: I have been profoundly educated and inspired in attending the 12th CPC National Congress as an observer. Since its 3d plenary session, the CPC Central Committee has implemented a series of correct principles and policies. In the short period of 3 years, it has won great victories and improved the confused situation.

This once again forcefully proves that the CPC is indeed a mature and completely trustworthy party, long educated in Marxism-Leninism and Mao Zedong Thought, and repeatedly tempered by success and failure. As an ordinary member of the cultural and educational front, I feel greatly honored and happy to be living in a period of national resurgence and prosperity and to be able to contribute my meager strength to the socialist construction of the motherland.

Ding Guangxun, chairman of the Three-Self Patriotic Committee of the Protestant Church of China, said: The history of the CPC shows that a correct line has not come easily. Not only do the Communists treasure it, but we non-CPC personages also treasure it. We of the religious circles are satisfied with the CPC's principles and policies, particularly its policies on religious belief, pursued since the 3d Plenary Session of its 11th Central Committee, and our hearts are deeply touched. Some of us once worried about the stability of the CPC's policies concerning religious belief. We have had an ease of mind since we listened to Comrade Hu Yaobang's report.

Jia Yibin, vice chairman of the Central Committee of the Revolutionary Committee of the Kuomintang, discussed Comrade Hu Yaobang's report and commented on the passage on joint efforts to accomplish the great cause of the motherland's peaceful reunification.

He said: I have conducted investigations in 10 provinces this year. I have found that there are more and more people in Taiwan who communicate with, or remit money to people on the mainland, and there are more and more people from Taiwan who visit or come to settle on the mainland.

He said: I believe completely the judgment in Comrade Hu Yaobang's report that "the four modernizations will surely triumph and reunification will surely be accomplished" in socialist China.

Ma Bi, a member of the CPPCC National Committee, said: I am very excited when I see the atmosphere of harmony, unity, great strength and impetus of a congress held by such a big party, representing the various nationalities and various social strata in China. I may say that, without the CPC leadership, the Chinese people would not have been able to overthrow the three big mountains in the past [meaning imperialism, feudalism and bureaucratic capitalism]. For the same reason, without the CPC leadership, they would not be able to successfully build a modern socialist country in the future.

He said: To be honest, some 10 months ago, I hoped that the CPC would not become strong and I was afraid that it would. [Ma Bi returned to settle on the mainland from Taiwan 10 months ago] Now, I place the hope of China completely on the CPC. I hope that the CPC's policies will become still more deepgoing and comprehensive and will conform to reality still better. I hope that the CPC will become stronger and stronger.

Xu Binru, 82-year-old vice chairman of the Central Committee of the Chinese Peasants and Workers Democratic Party, said: The CPC is 62 years old. My experience tells me that the CPC and Mao Zedong Thought are powerful. The 12th CPC National Congress has proposed opening up a new prospect for socialist modernization in an allround way. This particularly makes me think that the CPC has ushered in a period of resurgence and its future is boundlessly bright. Although I am old, I will strive to assist the CPC by doing more useful work in my remaining years.

Ye Shengtao, vice chairman of the Central Committee of the China Association for Promoting Democracy, said: The '12th CP National Congress' appealed for the opening up of a new prospect for socialist modernization in an allround way. This is a great task to create prosperity for future generations. We non-CPC personages should join the people throughout the country in shouldering this great historic mission.

Other speakers at today's discussion included Qian Changzhao, Su Buqing, Hua Luogent, Hu Juewen, Zhou Gucheng, Mao Yisheng, Huang Dingchen, Su Ziheng, Hu Ziang, Wu Maosun, Sun Yueqi, Fei Xiaotong, Zhou Siguan, Lei Jiexiong, Yan Xinmin, Cheng Siyuan and Zhao Zonghuan.

RENMIN RIBAO: CPC CONGRESS CREATES NEW SITUATION

[Article by reporters Ji Xichen [4764 1585 2525] and Ma Heqing [7456 7729 7230]: "A Grand Meeting for Creating a New Situation"]

[Text] In a golden autumn, as news of victory kept pouring in from all fronts, the 12th CPC National Congress triumphantly began.

For us and for our posterity, 1 September 1982 is a date that should be engraved on a monument and written in the glorious pages of our party's history.

In recent days, our millions of people have been joyfully talking about the news of the 12th CPC National Congress. What makes tham happy is that, since October 1976, we have smashed the Jiang Qing counterrevolutionary clique and overthrown the great mountain that laid like a dead weight on our back, and that the ship -- our motherland -- has been forging ahead, braving wind and waves along the victorious route opened up by the 3d Plenary Session of the 11th CPC Central Committee. Over the short period of 6 years, we have successfully brought about a stable, united, vivid and vigorous political situation and led our economy onto a healthy path of steady development. Our students have resumed their studies, our workers have resumed their production, our peasants have reaped bumper harvests, our intellectuals' labels of "old stinking ninth category" have been thrown away and our PLA has grown stronger. From these changes, people can see magnificent prospects and have heightened their confidence.

At 0830, the deputies from all fronts throughout the country gradually gathered with emotion and joy at the magnificent Great Hall of the People. Among these deputies, there are the older generation of revolutionaries who fought shoulder to shoulder with Mao Zedong, Zhou Enlai, Liu Shaoqi, Zhu De and other comrades and who enjoy high prestige and command universal respect. Among them, there are a large number of white-haired old party members and old cadres who have experienced the severe tests of the revolutionary wars. There are also a large number of middle-aged and young comrades who are full of vigor and vitality. Some deputies said that this congress is an unprecedently grand congress, a congress to review our victories as well as a congress at which four generations of revolutionaries are gathering to carry forward the revolutionary cause and forge ahead in the future and to mobilize the whole party and the whole country to strive to open up great new prospects for the socialist modernizations.

"The 12th CPC National Congress will be a historical turning point." Wei Guoqing, a deputy from the PLA and the director of the PLA General Political Department, who took part in the Youjiang River uprising in Guangxi in 1929, said after recalling the fighting history of the party: "There are many problems related to modernization that we should solve at the 12th CPC National Congress. One of the key problems is to find, train and appoint successors. The first priority at present is to find and train a large number of talented people and to promote hundreds and thousands of excellent middle-aged and young cadres to leading posts.

Talented people can only be trained in the course of practice. Comrade Wei Guoqing talked about the selection of cadres in light of the conditions related to cadres in the army and said that we must adhere to the principle of selecting those who are both competent and virtuous and overcome the erroneous idea of giving promotion in accordance with seniority. He said that in selecting candidates of cadres, we should go out of our offices and our small circles and actually link leading people with the masses of people. We should interview and talk with various people, whether at the same level or at the upper or lower levels, in order to collect opinions from all sides. We should select successors not only from those who hold deputy posts at the same level or those who hold the principle posts a level below, but also from those who hold the posts two or three levels below. When persons are selected as candidates, we should speed up training and instructing them. We should enthusiastically support them and help them to develop their talents and competence as well as assign heavy tasks to them.

In order to open up new prospects, we need millions of well-trained intellectuals. In order to reflect this historical special feature, the proportion of the deputies who are specialists in the educational, science, theoretical, engineering, technical, literary, art and sport circles has been increased at the 12th CPC National Congress. Chinese Academy of Sciences Vice President Comrade Qian Sanqiang, a physicist who has made contributions to the development of our country's most advanced branches of science, talked about his personal experiences in his scientific research. He said that during the past few years, in order to develop science in our country, our state has adopted many important measures to give play to the initiative of the broad ranks of scientific and technical workers. Compared with the 1960's, our scientific and technical force is much stronger, and there is still much potential to tap. The problem now is how to intensify the organizational, political and ideological leadership on the scientific and technical front and put an end to the old practice of each doing his work on his own independently in order to actually organize our scientific and technical workers in an effective manner, make them closely cooperate in their work and concentrate their force on making breakthroughs in a number of key projects. He earnestly hoped that the successors on the scientific and technical front would become both red and expert and be versed in both cultural and military arts and be able to better combine their present struggle with a long-term aim in their scientific practice.

Attending the congress are deputies of minority nationalities who are in their traditional costumes. They come from areas ranging from the southern and northern foot of the Tianshan mountains to Taiwan Province and from the Hulun Boir grasslands to the stockaded villages of Miao nationality in Yunnan. Among our 55 minority nationalities, 38 nationalities have elected 164 of their excellent party members as deputies to this congress.

The deputies from the party members of various minority nationalities have brought to the party Central Committee and the people of the whole country some exciting good news: During the past 3 years, the unity between the various nationalities has been strengthened, agricultural production in the areas of the minority nationalities has increased, livestock breeding has developed and the livelihood of the various minority nationality people has been improved.

After liberation, relations between our various nationalities were constantly improved and the production and living standard in the minority nationality areas rose steadily. Later, as a result of the impact of "leftism" and especially because of the destruction brought about by Lin Biao and the "gang of four" mountains of problems cropped up in the minority nationality areas and the difficulties greatly increased. Since the 3d Plenary Session of the 11th CPC Central Committee, great importance has been attached to solving problems in the minority nationality areas. The central leading comrades have visited Xizang and Xinjiang and have sent a large number of cadres there to implement the various policies related to minority nationalities. In a short period of 3 years, the minority nationality areas have undergone great changes. The industrial output value, grain output, number of livestock, and income from diversified undertakings have all averaged out or set historical records. Guizhou Province, the poorest minority nationality area, achieved a total agricultural output value that was higher than ever before. The commune members of the nearly 50,000 households in the southern Guizhou Bouyei and Miao Nationalities Autonomous Prefecture have an average annual income of more than 300 yuan. When they talked about these changes, the deputies from minority nationality party members unanimously said that the call of the party Central Committee had created a new situation of socialism which has also emerged in the minority nationality areas.

Attending the congress without voting rights are 70 representatives of various democratic parties and well-known personalities in society. This has embodied the policy for consolidating and strengthening the patriotic united front of the CPC and the democratic parties. This policy upholds that all these parties can "coexist for a long time, supervise one another," "show utter devotion to one another and share both weal and woe." These representatives have very warmly congratulated the CPC for its 12th national congress. Wang Kunlun, chairman of the Revolutionary Committee of the Chinese Kuomintang said that this congress is a very encouraging and exciting great event in the political affairs of the people of our country. It will continue to mobilize the people throughout the country to strive to create a new situation of soicalism. Shi Liang, chairman of the Democratic League of China used the following words to sum up the national situation at present: "With the old, having been eliminated, and the new, being developed, the nation is full of vitality." She enthusiastically stated: We, people in the Democratic League of China, will certainly make full use of our favorable conditions, foster the spirit of creation and conscientiously and actively develop the work of training personnel and opening up intellectual resources in order to make new contributions to speeding up the construction of the material and spiritual civilizations in our country." Mao Yisheng, vice chairman of the Jiu San Society, said with joy that the 3d Plenary Session of the 11th CPC Central Committee was the beginning of a great change and the 12th CPC National Congress is the beginning of a great development. Under the party's correct leadership, the situation in our country will become increasingly better.

During the past 3 years, the various democratic parties have vividly developed their work and the number of their members have increased. Huang Dingchen, chairman of the China Zhi Gong Dang said: "During the past 3 years the number of our members has more than doubled. We should double our efforts in working with the returned overseas Chinese and the relatives of the overseas Chinese whom we are in contact with and strive to achieve the thorough reunification of our motherland at an early date. We should also mobilize all the people to wholeheartedly take part in the socialist construction of our country." When Ye Shengtao, vice chairman of the China Association for Promoting Democracy, who is 88 years old, talked with this reporter, he joyously took a pen and wrote: "I think that the 12th CPC National Congress will certainly be a new starting point and that a magnificent scene with vigorous vitality will soon appear before us."

SICHUAN RIBAO URGES LEARNING FROM CPC CONGRESS

HK040354 Chengdu Sichuan Provincial Service in Mandarin 0030 GMT 3 Sep 82

[Report on 3 Sep SICHUAN RIBAO editorial: "Make a Great New Breakthrough -- Warmly Celebrating the Victorious Opening of the 12th Party Congress"]

[Text] The editorial says: The 12th National Congress of the Communist Party of China has solemnly opened in an atmosphere of unity and victory. Filled with exultation and fervor, the party members and the people of all nationalities in our province warmly congratulate the opening of this great historic congress and wish it complete success.

The editorial says: The news of the opening of the 12th party congress has greatly inspired and aroused the party members and the people in our province. They are now devoting efforts to score new success at their respective posts and are greeting the congress with actual actions. The good news that the 12th party congress has opened further encouraged the broad party members and masses.

Party organizations at all levels in our province should seriously organize party members and masses to study, understand and implement the documents and resolutions which will soon be adopted by this congress. In the course of studying these documents, we should ensure that we clearly realize that the party's general task in the new historical period is to unite the people of all nationalities in working self-reliantly and arduously to achieve, step by step, the modernization of industry, agriculture, national defence and science and technology, and to build China into a socialist country that is highly cultured and democratic. For a long period to come, at least in the next 18 years or so to the end of this century, we must diligently do the following four things: restructure the administration and the economic set-up and make the ranks of cadres more revolutionary, younger in average age, better educated and more professionally competent, build socialist spiritual civilization; strike at criminal activities in the economic and other fields that undermine socialism; and rectify the party style and organization on the basis of serious study of the new party constitution. This is the most important guarantee for us to adhere to on the socialist road and to concentrate all strength for the modernization drive.

SICHUAN RIBAO's editorial hopes all party members and broad masses of this province, under the guidance of the spirit of the 12th CPC National Congress, will boost their revolutionary spirit to strive for the successful fulfillment of the party's general task in the new historical period and the creation of a new situation in all fields of socialist modernization and to make our due contributions.

SICHUAN EXPORTS MORE FARM MACHINERY IN 1982

[Text] Chengdu, September 5 (XINHUA) -- Sichuan Province is exporting more farm machinery as a result of improved quality, according to officials of the provincial farm machinery Industrial company.

The province exported farm machines worth U.S. $5 million in the first six months of this year, equivalent to 75 percent of the total exported last year. Its 61 products including diesel engines, diesel generating sets, walking tractors, water pumps and chains are going to more than 30 countries and regions.

At an international bidding conference on ploughing machines held in Thailand last May, Sichuan-produced "Emei-7" walking tractor was chosen for its high quality. In accordance with a contract signed with Thailand, Sichuan will export 380 such tractors in a short period.

The officials said although Sichuan has expanded farm machine export this year, the total value of exported farm machines in the first six months is only 10 percent of its industrial output value. The province plans to export more farm machinery this year.

CHENG MING CITES PRC OFFICIALS ON HONG KONG

HK021502 Hong Kong CHENG MING in Chinese No. 59, 1 Sep 82 pp 14-15

[Article by Lo Ping [5012 0393]: "CPC Brain Trust's Plans for Post-1997 Hong Kong"]

[Text] Hong Kong is bogged down in a "1997 upheaval." For quite a long time in the past, however, Hong Kong's "1997 issue" was not a popular subject of talk in Beijing. Only recently have the people in Beijing started talking about Hong Kong's future as a result of the distribution and communication of speeches and documents on this issue.

Many reports and discussions have so far been reported by CHENG MING and other Hong Kong newspapers and magazines about the policies and plans of the CPC on Hong Kong's "1997 issue." In order to make a comprehensive survey on all the different opinions expressed, it seems one problem has been really neglected.

Too much has been said about the political and economic interests China gains in Hong Kong. However, from the viewpoint of the CPC, Hong Kong and Macao have also brought China lots of troubles which are seldom mentioned. Here, I would like to present an authoritative person's view on the Hong Kong and Macao issue.

Hu Qiaomu on the Hong Kong-Macao-Taiwan Issue

This authoritative person is Hu Qiaomu. It is common knowledge that Hu Qiagomu, as a secretary of the Secretariat of the CPC Central Committee, holds a very important position at present. He is described as a head, or a senior adviser of the brain trust of the Deng-Hu hierarchy. Therefore, his speeches and comments carry a lot of weight and should be taken seriously.

Not long ago, Hu Qiaomu talked about the Hong Kong-Macao-Taiwan problem in a speech. It was learned that his speech, and Hu Yaobang's speach, were printed as official documents to be distributed to cadres. In his speech, Hu Qiaomu stressed the class struggle under present historical conditions. Does class struggle have something to do with the Hong Kong-Macao-Taiwan issue? Yes. Hu Qiaomu said: "We are now encountering capitalists from Hong Kong, Macao, Taiwan and other foreign countries. They want to corrupt our cadres, and even speak of Hongkongnizing Guangdong. We must wage a struggle against them. However, they (except for a handful of people who are operating joint-venture businesses with us) are not under the rule of the PRC at the moment and we cannot treat them like the national capitalists were handled in 1952. The struggle, therefore, will be a protracted one."

The main points of Hu Qiaomus' remarks are about the smuggling activities in Hong Kong, Macao and Taiwan. According to estimates of the brain trust of the CPC, the smuggling and trafficking activities are far from near the end; on the contrary, the peak time is ahead. From this we can see that the CPC leaders are in a dilemma. On the one hand, they treat Hong Kong and Macao as geese that lay golden eggs; on the other hand, they treat Hong Kong and Macao as epidemic cities which spread germs.

When talking about the future of Hong Kong and Macao, Hu Qiaomu said: "If we regain sovereignty over Hong Kong and Macao, many capitalists will become citizens of the PRC. Although Hong Kong and Macao will be territories of the PRC, the present system will still be maintained and they will remain free ports. With two different systems in one country, new and complicated situations will inevitably arise and we must be fully prepared."

Eight-Point Concrete Proposal

These remarks should be seriously analyzed and understood. Some friends in Beijing hold that these remarks completely negate the possibility that Hong Kong will be ruled by the British Government and Macao by the Macao government after 1997, and that China will firmly take the initiative.

According to another source, the brain trust of the CPC has raised a concrete proposal which is superficially flexible but is based on the essence of the speeches of Hu Yaobang and Hu Qiaomu. The main points of the proposal are as follows:

1. Hong Kong will become a special administrative area.

2. The special feature of this administrative area will be the preservation of a capitalist economic system.

3. The management power of the city will belong to a leading organization comprising Chinese, and the government and the heads of the government will be elected by a popular organization similar to the NPC.

4. There will be no great personnel changes in any departments of the Hong Kong Government.

5. All factories, shops, companies and enterprises will operate and do business as before.

6. Some enterprises, including the enterprises originally of foreign capital, may be leased to interested foreigners.

7. There will be no fundamental changes in the legal system and currency system. However, connections with the British Government will be cut off so as to eliminate the traces left by the British rulers on the currency.

8. Police in the city will be organized by the government and no PLA or people's policemen will be dispatched by China.

More than one concrete proposal has been suggested so far, but none is perfect. Three stratagems have been put forward in the editorial of the August issue of CHENG MING. It seems that the proposal raised by the brain trust of the CPC is close to the middle stratagem of the journal CHENG MING.

It is reported that the top leader in Zhongnanhai once said that if foreigners are able to manage Hong Kong well, so are we. This writer has received confirmation from several well-informed people that a similar sentence has already been recorded in official documents.

It seems that the essence remains the same, whether in the speech of Deng Xiaoping, or in the speeches of Hu Yaobang and Hu Qiaomu.

As a result of too many speeches and documents on regaining the sovereignty of Hong Kong and Macao, some people have neglected the special position of Hong Kong and Macao in the future. When talking about and discussing the problems of domestic economy, they have considered Hong Kong and Macao in the national economic plan and scheme as well. For example, at the discussion meeting on the strategic problems of realigning land, held in early July in Beijing, some experts and scholars put forth suggestions on establishing economic zones centering on large cities. One of the suggestions called for establishing "an economic zone centering on Guangzhou, including part of Guangdong and Guangxi, and also Hong Kong and Macao."

In addition to the Hong Kong-Macao issue, the Taiwan problem was also mentioned by Hu Qiaomu, who made an unexpected remark: "Even if the settlement of Taiwan problem comes later, we must fully prepared as well. In reality, the exchanges between the mainland and Taiwan are increasing with each passing day. Guangdong is faced with the Hong Kong-Macao problem and Fujian is faced with the Taiwan problem."

The Settlement of the Taiwan Problem Comes Later Than the Settlement of the Hong Kong Problem

Hu Qiaomu has made it clear that the reunification between Taiwan and the Chinese mainland may come later than the settlement of the Hong Kong-Macao problem.

It is not strange that the top leaders of the CPC view the whole issue in such a way. Some people may argue that all the proposals of the CPC are but a lofty stance before the Sino-British negotiations and Mrs Thatcher's visit to Beijing in particular. It is true that the CPC is taking a lofty stance. However, the psychological state of the CPC top leaders might also be misjudged as a lofty stance.

It seems that some people still stick to the leftist ideology. It is not with basis to say that the idea of regaining the sovereignty of Hong Kong and Macao has something to do with the leftist ideology.

Furthermore, Deng Xiaoping is eager to resolve the problem of reunification. Knowing that he cannot live forever, he is so anxious to reunify the whole country while he is still alive. In order to reunite both sides of the Taiwan Strait, he could set an example by establishing a very unique special administrative area in Hong Kong and Macao in order to win the trust of the KMT in Taiwan. Such a psychological state should in no way be neglected. Mao Zedong was also ambitious in his late years, eager to accomplish his great cause. However, he adopted a leftist ideological line which did not conform with the objective laws. As a result, he ended with a failure.

DENG CONGRESS SPEECH HINTS HONG KONG REUNIFICATION

HKD40116 Hong Kong HONG KONG STANDARD in English 4 Sep 82 p 1 [by Terry Cheng]

[Text] Chinese leader Deng Xiaoping has hinted at China's intention to reunify Hong Kong, Macao and Taiwan with the mainland before the end of this decade.

This is the first time that a top Chinese leader has openly made such an indication at a Chinese Communist Party's national congress.

In a speech with a strong nationalistic tone at the 12th congress which opened on Wednesday, Vice-Chairman Deng said China would strive for the reunification of the Chinese territories, including Taiwan, in the 1980s.

Local Chinese sources yesterday confirmed that the Chinese territories mentioned by Mr Deng meant to include Hong Kong.

"It is an apparent reference," they commented.

Mr Deng, in his speech, listed in order the country's main tasks for the decade to intensify socialist modernization, to strive for the reunification of the Chinese territories including Taiwan, and to combat hegemonism and safeguard world peace.

A keen scholar on Chinese affairs, Dr Byron S. J. Weng of the Chinese University, said he believed that Mr Deng's statement had implications as regards Hong Kong. "After all Hong Kong, like Taiwan, is a Chinese territory which has to be returned to China," he said.

"While Mr Deng has not stated it specifically, he must have had Hong Kong in mind when making the point."

Dr Weng said the remark was related to a clause in China's new draft constitution stating that China might, where necessary, set up special administrative regions operating under different systems from the rest of the country.

However, he warned that there should not be too much poring over the statement.

"While Mr Deng states that China strives to achieve the tasks within the 1980s, it doesn't mean they can be achieved within the period."

The fact that the Chinese leader had stated that economic construction was at the core of the three tasks (as it was the basis for the solution of China's external and domestic problems), Dr Weng said, could imply that the time of reunification of the territories could be subject to negotiation.

Another expert on China affairs, the editor-in-chief of CHISHIH NIENTAI [SEVENTIES monthly] Lee Yee, shared the view that Mr. Deng's statement was applicable to Hong Kong.

He said by placing economic construction on top of the priority list, China was preparing for the reunification issue.

"As party Chairman Hu Yaobang has put it that China aims mainly at laying a solid foundation for economic development in this decade, it is logical to predict that China cannot solve the reunification issue very soon."

Mr Lee said that Mr Deng's reunification remark was intended more for the mainland people.

"It is a call that can rally support from the people and unite them."

A local diplomatic source, however, argued that Mr Deng's statement was intended for those outside China as it was a time the country was facing a number of external issues.

He listed the U.S. arms sales to Taiwan, the Japanese textbook revision, Hong Kong's status and the disputes over some outlying islands with the neighbouring countries as some of the issues.

XINHUA NEWS AGENCY's English translation of Mr Deng's reunification remark at the party congress runs as follows: "To strive for reunification and particularly for the return of Taiwan to the motherland."

However, it is commonly agreed that Mr Deng's original text could be better translated as: "Striving for the reunification of the Chinese territories, including Taiwan."

UN SECRETARY GENERAL DELIVERS ANNUAL REPORT

OW080724 Beijing XINHUA in English 0701 GMT 8 Sep 82

[Text] United Nations, September 7 (XINHUA) -- U.N. Secretary-General Javier Perez de Cuellar today called for urgent efforts to strengthen the United Nations to prevent and resolve conflicts in the world, which, he noted, is "perilously near to a new international anarchy".

In his first annual report, released here today, the secretary-general said that the past year had seen an alarming succession of international crises as well as stalemates on a number of fundamental international issues. "The United Nations itself has been unable to play as effective and decisive a role as the U.N. Charter certainly envisaged for it," he noted.

He said: "The Security Council, the primary organ of the United Nations for the maintenance of international peace and security, all too often finds itself unable to take decisive action to resolve international conflicts and its resolutions are increasingly defied or ignored by those that feel themselves strong enough to do so. Too frequently the Council seems powerless to generate the support and influence to ensure that its decisions are respected, even when these are taken unanimously. Thus, the process of peaceful settlement of disputes prescribed in the charter is often brushed aside."

After having stressed the need to reverse such a dangerous trend, he pointed out that "our most urgent goal is to reconstruct the charter concept of collective action for peace and security so as to render the United Nations more capable of carrying out its primary function."

The secretary-general urged member states to ensure respect for decisions of the Security Council and to underpin the authority of peace-keeping operations by guarantees for collective or individual supportive action.

"It is not enough for the United Nations merely to reflect change or conflict. The organization was intended to present to the world the highest common denominator of international behaviour and, in doing so, to develop a binding sense of international community," he said.

MINISTER SPEAKS AT IMF, WORLD BANK MEETING

[Text] Toronto, September 7 (XINHUA) -- "While the developing countries do need to adopt adjustment measures to overcome their economic difficulties, the developed countries are also duty-bound to give them economic assistance."

This was said by Chinese Finance Minister Wang Bingqian at the 37th annual meeting of the International Monetary Fund and the World Bank here today. The annual meeting, which was opened Monday, was attended by more than 1,000 delegates from more than 140 countries for a discussion of world financial problems.

"The measures to shift their economic crisis onto other countries by some developed countries have affected in a very adverse manner the economy of the developing countries," he said.

In the past year, the Chinese finance minister went on to say, the developing countries, especially the least developing countries, have met with serious economic difficulties.

He cited as an example the per capita real income in these countries in 1981, which declined in absolute terms for the first time since the end of the Second World War.

Their export commodity prices and earnings have declined sharply and their drive to export manufactured goods continues to be hampered by all sorts of protectionist obstacles from some developed countries, he said.

"Regrettably," he said, "at a time when the developing countries are facing greater economic difficulties, there has been no progress towards the establishment of a new international economic order during the past year."

He said: "Negotiations between the North and the South remain deadlocked, and international economic cooperation is beset with obstacles. Despite the efforts of parties concerned, the global negotiations of universal interest have yet to be launched".

Referring to the "IDA crisis" provoked by the failure of a major developed country to honor fully and on schedule its commitments to the International Development Association, a branch of the World Bank with lending programs, Wang said this crisis is jeopardizing the basic principle of international economic cooperation and development, which is assistance to low-income countries.

"This state of affairs should be ended," he said, adding that "to bring about such a change has become a major task of great urgency on the agenda of the international community."

He expressed the hope that the International Monetary Fund and the World Bank will continue to move in the direction of promoting international economic cooperation and development, and work for more and greater improvements and reforms.

On the adjustment of IMF quotas, the amounts member countries pay into the IMF on the basis of their national incomes and other statistics, the Chinese finance minister said: "We endorse the view that through a new general adjustment of quotas, not only would IMF funds be augmented substantially, but the overall share of quotas held by the developing countries would also be increased, or at least not reduced."

On China's economic policy, Wang Bingqian said: "We will firmly adhere to the policies of outward orientation and of loosening the rigidities in our economy. We extend a welcoming hand to all foreign economic organizations, whether official agencies or non-governmental institutions, that are willing to cooperate and have economic dealings with us on the basis of equality and mutual benefit."

He concluded his speech by saying that "China shares similar experiences with many developing countries and faces many identical problems. We all face the important task of transforming our poor and backward economies into modern and advanced economies. The similarity of our circumstances impels us to support and help each other in developing our economies. China will continue to do what she can in this direction."

Meets Hu Yaobang

[Text] Beijing, September 8 (XINHUA) -- Hu Yaobang, chairman of the Central Committee of the Communist Party of China, met with former U.S. President Richard Nixon in the Great Hall of the People here this afternoon.

Nixon thanked Chairman Hu Yaobang for taking time out to meet with him while the 12th National Congress of the C.P.C. is still in session. He said he has been interested in following the party congress. "The congress has declared a significant and new direction for the party and the state," he said. Nixon said he was inspired by China's present political stability.

Briefing the guest on China's domestic situation, Chairman Hu Yaobang said there are many factors ensuring the long-term stability in China.

"First," he said, "the decade of turmoil brought untold sufferings to the broad masses of the people who have gained experiences and learned lessons. The overwhelming majority of the people wouldn't like to see China in turmoil again. After all, sufferings in history can be compensated by the progress in history.

"The second factor is that our present policies and principles, through the test of four years, have taken root in the hearts of the people. If some people attempt to change the course, the overwhelming majority of the people will not allow it.

"The third factor is that our party's line and policies will be carried forward generation after generation and our political and organizational systems will guarantee the continuity of the line and policies," he said.

Hu Yaobang and Richard Nixon agreed that prospects are bright for the development of Sino-U.S. relations.

Nixon conveyed to Chairman Hu Yaobang President Reagan's best wishes while the chairman asked Nixon to convey his regards to the U.S. President.

Chinese State Councillor and Foreign Minister Huang Hua and Vice-Minister of Foreign Affairs Han Xu attended the meeting, which proceeded in a friendly atmosphere.

[Text] Comrade Hu Yaobang, chairman of the Chinese Communist Party Central Committee, Comrade Ye Jiangying, chairman of the NPC Standing Committee of the PRC, and Comrade Zhao Ziyang, premier of the PRC State Council, sent a message of greetings to Comrade Kim Il-song, general secretary of the KWP Central Committee and president of the DPRK, and Comrade Yi Chong-ok, premier of the Administration Council of the DPRK, on 8 September on the occasion of the 34th anniversary of the founding of the DPRK.

The message of greetings reads:

Pyongyang.

Comrade Kim Il-song, general secretary of the KWP Central Committee and president of the DPRK.

Comrade Yi Chong-ok, premier of the Administration Council of the DPRK.

On the occasion of the 34th anniversray of the founding of the DPRK, we extend our warmest congratulations to you and, through you, to the KWP, the DPRK Government and the fraternal Korean people. For the past 34 years, under the wise leadership of the KWP led by Comrade Kim Il-song, the heroic Korean people have attained brilliant successes in the revolution and socialist construction and have built their fatherland into a prosperous socialist country.

The DPRK Government has greatly contributed to strengthening the Nonaligned Movement and the unity of the Third World countries by enforcing its independent foreign policy and adhering to the principles of proletarian internationalism.

The Chinese people warmly congratulate you for the success you have attained and sincerely wish you greater success in the future. The Korean people have constantly struggled to oppose the aggression and intervention of foreign forces and to achieve independent and peaceful reunification. They have won sympathy and support from the broad peoples of many countries of the world.

We resolutely demand that the United States withdraw its troops from South Korea and stop its intervention in the internal affairs of Korea. We resolutely support the proposal advanced by President Kim Il-song for founding the Democratic Confederal Republic of Koryo and will resolutely support the just struggle of the Korean people for the independent and peaceful reunification until its complete victory has been achieved.

The Chinese people treasure very much the great friendship sealed in blood between the two parties, countries and peoples of China and Korea in their protracted revolutionary struggle. This friendship has been based on Marxism-Leninism and proletarian internationalism and is, therefore, unbreakable. We sincerely wish that the friendship and the friendly and cooperative relations between China and Korea will be strengthened and developed as days go by.

RENMIN RIBAO Editorial

[Text] Beijing, September 8 (XINHUA) -- The PEOPLE'S DAILY in an editorial on September 9 warmly hails the 34th anniversary of the founding of the Democratic People's Republic of Korea (DPRK).

The editorial says the founding of the republic opened a new era in the Korean history. After that, the heroic Korean people defeated the U.S. aggressors, maintained the independence and security of the fatherland and contributed greatly to the safeguarding of peace in Asia and in the world.

After the liberation war of Korea, the editorial points out, the hard-working Korean people, under the revolutionary line of independence, self-support and self-defense, quickly healed the wounds of the war and scored marked achievements in its socialist revolution and socialist construction. Answering the call of the Sixth Congress of the Korean Workers Party, the Korean people are now starting a new upsurge in the socialist revolution and socialist construction to fulfill the targets of the country's second-year plan.

In the international affairs, the paper says, the Korean Government carries out a foreign policy of self-reliance, fighting against imperialism, colonialism, dominationism, and actively strengthening the unity and cooperation with the peace-loving peoples and countries all over the world. Its international prestige has been rising with each passing day.

It says that for a long time, the Korean Workers Party and the government have exerted genuine and unremitting efforts for the independent and peaceful reunification of the fatherland. The new formula of founding a Democratic Confederal Republic of Koryo put forth by President Kim Il-song represents a correct way leading to the reunification of the fatherland, and has won support of all the Korean people and praise from the people of the world.

However, the editorial continues, the Chon Tu-hwan clique in South Korea, going against the historical trend, is still doggedly pushing a "two-Koreas" policy, attempting to perpetuate the division of the country. Peremptorily interfering in the Korean affairs, the United States continuously lends support to the Chon Tu-hwan clique, thus creating a grave obstacle to the peaceful reunification of Korea. The United States should stop its interference and aggression and withdraw all its armed forces from South Korea.

The Chinese people, as always, firmly support the sacred cause of the Korean people to reunify their fatherland until final victory, the paper says. During the long, common struggle, the Chinese and Korean people have formed profound revolutionary friendship cemented with blood and tested by history. Such friendship is invincible and ever-lasting.

Both the Korean Government and people support China to hold up the four basic principles and work to realize its four modernizations program, support Chinese efforts to reunite Taiwan with the motherland, and hail the convening of the 12th National Congress of the Chinese Communist Party. All this greatly encourages the Chinese people.

The editorial believes that the revolutionary friendship and militant solidarity between the people of the two countries will surely last and develop. It wishes the Korean people ever greater success in their socialist construction and in their struggle to reunify the fatherland.

Pak Song-chol Report Cited

[Text] Pyongyang, September 8 (XINHUA) -- U.S. interference in the internal affairs of Korea is the key factor preventing its independent reunification, it was charged today.

This was affirmed by Pak Song-chol, member of the Political Bureau of the Central Committee of the Workers Party of Korea and vice-president of the Democratic People's Republic of Korea (DPRK), in a report at a meeting here today to mark the 34th DPRK founding anniversary.

Pak Song-chol said: "The U.S. imperialists occupation of South Korea and their policy of aggression is the principal obstacle in the way of the reunification of our country."

The most practical and reasonable way to the independent reunification of Korea is a founding of the Democratic Confederal Republic of Koryo as was expounded by President Kim Il-song, he said. So long as all the compatriots in the north and the south of the country and abroad make a vigorous movement for the fatherland's reunification, Pak Song-chol said, all machinations of the enemy can be frustrated and the reunification of the fatherland can be realized in an earlier date.

Pak Song-chol condemned those Japanese who are trying to glorify the war of aggression by the Japanese militarists in the past. He also pledged to strengthen the unity between the DPRK Government and people and the people of other countries.

Chinese Government Response

[Text] Beijing, September 9 (XINHUA) -- Vice-Minister of Foreign Affairs Wu Xueqian gave the response of the Chinese Government to the further measures proposed by the Japanese Government on September 6 to solve the textbook question. He did this in the course of a meeting with Japanese Ambassador to China Yasue Katori on September 8.

Evaluating the measures, Wu Xueqian said: Although there are still some ambiguous, unsatisfactory points about the concrete measures proposed by the Japanese side to correct the mistakes, it is a step forward compared with the explanations previously made.

"The Chinese Government has consistently maintained that whether the history of Japanese militarist aggression against China is recognized is a major question of principle in the relations between the two countries. The Japanese side tampered with this historical fact in the course of censoring the textbooks. The Chinese Government and people are justified in expressing their firm opposition."

"We take note of the fact that the Japanese Government reiterated its willingness to adhere to the spirit of the China-Japan joint statement and is keenly aware of Japan's responsibility for bringing enormous damage in the past to the Chinese people through war, and deeply reproaches itself. The Japanese Government will fully listen to the Chinese side's criticism of the expressions in the textbooks and hold itself responsible for correcting the mistakes. It will call a Textbook Authorization Research Council meeting in September this year and to decide by the end of November on the revision of the authorization criteria for compiling textbooks. It is expected that the new authorization criteria will call for revision of the expressions in the textbooks concerning "aggression" and "the Nanjing massacre" this year. Regarding those textbooks already authorised, the education minister will issue views to be carried in the Ministry's bulletins and transmitted to all primary and middle schools and educational committees at various levels, so that the demand of the Chinese side will be satisfied in practice."

Vice-Foreign Minister Wu said: "Though there are still some ambiguous, unsatisfactory points about the concrete measures proposed by the Japanese side this time to correct the mistakes, it is a step forward compared with previous explanations. That is why we give the above evaluation. We appreciate Prime Minister Zenko Suzuki's desire to defend the friendly relations between China and Japan and the determination of the Japanese Government to undertake responsibility to correct the matter.

"We will judge whether the Japanese side conscientiously corrects the mistakes in the textbooks by its concrete actions and their effects. We reserve our right to comment on this matter. We hope the Japanese Government will continue its efforts, respect historical facts and keep its word in the interests of the continued development of Sino-Japanese relations."

Publishers Make Pledge

[Text] Tokyo, September 8 (XINHUA) -- Eight Japanese textbook publishers promised to try their utmost to correct the distorted accounts in history textbooks, KYODO reported today. They expressed this in a meeting with representatives of the Japan Federation of Publishing Workers Unions which was held here Tuesday at the request of the trade union.

Editors of the eight companies including the Sanseido Publishing Co. said they will make their "utmost efforts for the correction" of the distorted accounts in the school textbooks "if requested by their writers."

According to KYODO, a group of textbook writers "have started a campaign to demand corrections, and have urged other writers to join them." It was reported that the group "plans to submit their demand for the corrections to publishers around September 20." The publishers also said that "the freedom of learning and studying must be protected."

The Japanese Government stated on August 26 that the Education Ministry plans to advance the schedule for the authorized review on the books at issue in fiscal 1985, one year earlier than originally planned. Before that, the Education Ministry would guide school teachers to ensure that "necessary amendments" should be made in actual teaching in classrooms.

NOVEL BASED ON WAR FILM SELLS WELL IN JAPAN

[Text] Tokyo, September 8 (XINHUA) -- The novel "The Game Yet To Finish" has been a best-seller in Japan since its publication on July 15 by Tokuma Bookstore. Seiten Nanri, the author, based his story on a Japan-China co-produced film of the same name.

Junya Sato, Japanese director of the film, said in his brief introduction to the novel that "the 15-year Japan-China war was an aggressive war waged by the Japanese imperialists. This is the opinion consistently shared by the participants of the film from both sides." He said the theme of both the film and the novel aims at recognizing the historical facts.

After that, efforts can be made towards forging genuinely friendly relations between Japan and China.

Author of the novel Nanri told XINHUA that "it is outrageously untenable for the Japanese Education Ministry to have distorted the history while screening textbooks, textbooks must give true-to-the-fact account. The genuine and lasting friendship between the two countries can only be founded on the basis of truthful account of history." He went on to say "although my book is a novel, its plot was based on historical facts."

Talking about his writing motive, he said: "I wasted no time to finish the book because I realized my work is of profound significance. I feel extremely happy to present the story to the readers in the form of a novel before the tenth anniversary of the founding of diplomatic relations between Japan and China and, in particular, at the time when the Japanese Government is attempting to prettify Japan's aggressive history."

KAMPUCHEAN, SRV FORCES SAID TO CONTINUE FIGHTING

[Text] Bangkok, September 8 (XINHUA) -- Sporadic fightings between the Kampuchean resistance forces and Vietnamese occupation troops were reported continuing in western Kampuchea for the past few days. An informed source in the Thai border district of Aranyaprathet said although there were no big military operations by both sides, fightings in some places intensified. He confirmed that the Democratic Kampuchean forces launched an attack last Monday at Sihanouk Ville near Highway 502. The fighting lasted about one hour, but casualties on both sides were not known, he added.

Fightings were also reported in other areas near the Kampuchean-Thai border. However, Thai military sources disclosed that both the Vietnamese and the Kampuchean resistance forces used heavy weapons because troop deployments were very difficult now due to heavy floods in the region.

Meanwhile, the BANGKOK POST reported yesterday that the Vietnamese were continuing their troop reinforcements in an attempt to suppress the resistance forces of the Kampuchean Coalition Government.

It quoted a Democratic Kampuchean source as saying that three Soviet ships fully loaded with heavy military equipment and other weapons were sighted at Kompong Som port at the end of last month. It was not known what these weapons were but some of these arms had been shipped to Kong Island, west of Kompong Som, the source said.

The Heng Samrin regime had reportedly called up men ranging from 16 to 61 and women from 18 to 45 years of age for training to fight the Kampuchean resistance forces. But many of them defected because they did not want to fight their own people. Checkpoints have been set up to prevent defectors joining the resistance forces in the border area.

Observers here believed that the recent frequent troop movements by the Vietnamese indicated that they were preparing for a big operation in the area rather than easing the tension as they had claimed.

FURTHER COVERAGE OF 12TH CPC NATIONAL CONGRESS

Text of Constitution

OW080130 Beijing XINHUA in English 0102 GMT 8 Sep 82

[Text] Beijing, September 8 (XINHUA) -- Following is the full text of the constitution of the Communist Party of China adopted by the 12th national congress of the party on September 6:

Constitution of the Communist Party of China

(Adopted by the Twelfth National Congress of the Communist Party of China on September 6, 1982)

General Programme

The Communist Party of China is the vanguard of the Chinese working class, the faithful representative of the interests of the people of all nationalities in China, and the force at the core leading China's cause of socialism. The party's ultimate goal is the creation of a communist social system.

The Communist Party of China takes Marxism-Leninism and Mao Zedong Thought as its guide to action.

Applying dialectical materialism and historical materialism, Marx and Engels analysed the laws of development of capitalist society and founded the theory of scientific socialism. According to this theory, with the victory of the proletariat in its revolutionary struggle, the dictatorship of the bourgeoisie is inevitably replaced by the dictatorship of the proletariat, and capitalist society in inevitably transformed into socialist society in which the means of production are publicly owned, exploitation is abolished and the principle "from each according to his ability and to each according to his work" is applied; with tremendous growth of the productive forces and tremendous progress in the ideological, political and cultural fields, socialist society ultimately and inevitably advances into communist society in which the principle "from each according to his ability and to each according to his needs" is applied. Early in the 20th century, Lenin pointed out that capitalism had developed to the stage of imperialism, that the liberation struggle of the proletariat was bound to unite with that of the oppressed nations of the world, and that it was possible for socialist revolution to win victory first in countries that were the weak links of imperialist rule. The course of world history during the past half century and more, especially the establishment and development of the socialist system in a number of countries, has borne out the correctness of the theory of scientific socialism.

The development and improvement of the socialist system is a long historical process. Fundamentally speaking, the socialist system is incomparably superior to the capitalist system, having eliminated the contradictions inherent in the capitalist system, which the latter itself is incapable of overcoming. Socialism enables the people truly to become masters of the country, gradually to shed the old ideas and ways formed under the system of exploitation and private ownership of the means of production, and steadily to raise their communist consciousness and foster common ideals, common ethics and a common discipline in their own ranks. Socialism can give full scope to the initiative and creativeness of the people, develop the productive forces rapidly, proportionately and in a planned way, and meet the growing material and cultural needs of the members of society. The cause of socialism is advancing and is bound gradually to triumph throughout the world along paths that are suited to the specific conditions of each country and are chosen by its people of their own free will.

The Chinese Communists, with Comrade Mao Zedong as their chief representative, created Mao Zedong Thought by integrating the universal principles of Marxism-Leninism with the concrete practice of the Chinese revolution. Mao Zedong Thought is Marxism-Leninism applied and developed in China; it consists of a body of theoretical principles concerning the revolution and construction in China and a summary of experience therein, both of which have been proved correct by practice; it represents the crystallized, collective wisdom of the Communist Party of China.

The Communist Party of China led the people of all nationalities in waging their prolonged revolutionary struggle against imperialism, feudalism and bureaucrat-capitalism, winning victory in the new-democratic revolution and establishing the People's Republic of China -- a people's democratic dictatorship. Afrer the founding of the People's Republic, it led them in smoothly carrying out socialist transformation, completing the transition from new democracy to socialism, establishing the socialist system, and developing socialism in its economic, political and cultural aspects.

After the elimination of the exploiting classes as such, most of the contradictions in Chinese society do not have the nature of class struggle, and class struggle is no longer the principal contradiction. However, owing to domestic circumstances and foreign influences, class struggle will continue to exist within certain limits for a long time, and may even sharpen under certain conditions. The principal contradiction in Chinese society is that between the people's growing material and cultural needs and the backward level of our social production. The other contradictions should be resolved in the course of resolving this principal one. It is essential to strictly distinguish and correctly handle the two different types of contradictions -- those contradictions between the enemy and ourselves and those among the people.

The general task of the Communist Party of China at the present stage is to unite the people of all nationalities in working hard and self-reliantly to achieve, step by step, the modernization of our industry, agriculture, national defence and science and technology and make China a culturally advanced and highly democratic socialist country.

The focus of the work of the Communist Party of China is to lead the people of all nationalities in accomplishing the socialist modernization of our economy. It is necessary vigorously to expand the productive forces and gradually perfect socialist relations of production, in keeping with the actual level of the productive forces and as required for their expansion. It is necessary to strive for the gradual improvement of the standards of material and cultural life of the urban and rural population, based on the growth of production and social wealth.

The Communist Party of China leads the people, as they work for a high level of material civilization, in building a high level of socialist spiritual civilization. Major efforts should be made to promote education, science and culture, imbue the party members and the masses of the people with communist ideology, combat and overcome decadent bourgeois ideas, remnant feudal ideas and other non-proletarian ideas, and encourage the Chinese people to have lofty ideals, moral integrity, education and a sense of discipline.

The Communist Party of China leads the people in promoting socialist democracy, perfecting the socialist legal system, and consolidating the people's democratic dictatorship. Effective measures should be taken to protect the people's right to run the affairs of the state and of society, and to manage economic and cultural undertakings; and to strike firmly at hostile elements who deliberately sabotage the socialist system, and those who seriously breach or jeopardize public security. Great efforts should be made to strengthen the People's Liberation Army and national defence so that the country is prepared at all times to resist and wipe out any invaders.

The Communist Party of China upholds and promotes relations of equality, unity and mutual assistance among all nationalities in the country, persists in the policy of regional autonomy of minority nationalities, aids the areas inhabited by minority nationalities, aids the areas inhabited by minority nationalities in their economic and cultural development, and actively trains and promotes cadres from among the minority nationalities.

The Communist Party of China unites with all workers, peasants and intellectuals, and with all the democratic parties, non-party democrats and the patriotic forces of all the nationalities in China in further expanding and fortifying the broadest possible patriotic united front embracing all socialist working people and all patriots who support socialism or who support the reunification of the motherland. We should work together with the people throughout the country, including our compatriots in Taiwan, Xianggang (Hong Kong) and Aomen (Macao) and Chinese nationals residing abroad, to accomplish the great task of reunifying the motherland.

In international affairs, the Communist Party takes the following basic stand: It adheres to proletarian internationalism and firmly unites with the workers of all lands, with the oppressed nations and oppressed peoples and with all peace-loving and justice-upholding organizations and personages in the common struggle against imperialism, hegemonism and colonialism and for the defence of world peace and promotion of human progress. It stands for the development of state relations between China and other countries on the basis of the five principles of mutual respect for sovereignty and territorial integrity, mutual non-aggression, non-interference in each other's internal affairs, equality and mutual benefit, and peaceful coexistence. It develops relations with communist parties and working-class parties in other countries on the basis of Marxism and the principles of independence, complete equality, mutual respect and non-interference in each other's internal affairs.

In order to lead China's people of all nationalities in attaining the great goal of socialist modernization, the Communist Party of China must strengthen itself, carry forward its fine traditions, enhance its fighting capacity and resolutely achieve the following three essential requirements:

First, a high degree of ideological and political unity. The Communist Party of China makes the realization of the communism its maximum programme, to which all its members must devote their entire lives. At the present stage, the political basis for the solidarity and unity of the whole party consists in adherence to the socialist road, to the people's democratic dictatorship, to the leadership of the party, and to Marxism-Leninism and Mao Zedong Thought and in the concentration of our efforts on socialist modernization. The party's ideological line is to proceed from reality in all things, to integrate theory with practice, to seek truth from facts, and to verify and develop the truth through practice. In accordance with this ideological line, the whole party must scientifically sum up historical experience, investigate and study actual conditions, solve new problems in domestic and international affairs, and oppose all erroneous deviations, whether "left" or right.

Second, whole-hearted service to the people. The party has no special interest of its own apart from the interests of the working class and the broadest masses of the people. The programme and policies of the party are precisely the scientific expressions of the fundamental interests of the working class and the broadest masses of the people. Throughout the process of leading the masses in struggle to realize the ideal of communism, the party always shares weal and woe with the people, keeps in closest contact with them, and does not allow any member to become divorced from the masses or place himself above them. The party persists in educating the masses in communist ideas and follows the mass line in its work, doing everything for the masses, relying on them in every task, and turning its correct views into conscious action by the masses.

Third, adherence to democratic centralism. Within the party, democracy is given full play, a high degree of centralism is practised on the basis of democracy and a sense of organizaton and discipline is strengthened, so as to ensure unity of action throughout its ranks and the prompt and effective implementation of its decisions. In its internal political life, the party conducts criticism and self-criticism in the correct way, waging ideological struggles over matters of principle, upholding truth and rectifying mistakes. Applying the principle that all members are equally subject to party discipline, the party duly criticizes or punishes those members who violate it and expels those who persist in opposing and harming the party.

Party leadership consists mainly in political, ideological and organizational leadership. The party must formulate and implement correct lines, principles and policies, do its organizational, propaganda and educational work well and make sure that all party members play their exemplary vanguard role in every sphere of work and every aspect of social life. The party must conduct its activities within the limits permitted by the constitution and the laws of the state. It must see to it that the legislative, judicial and administrative organs of the state and the economic, cultural and people's organizations work actively and with initiative, independently, responsibly and in harmony. The party must strengthen its leadership over the trade unions, the Communist Youth League, the women's federation and other mass organizations, and give full scope to their roles. The party members are a minority in the whole population, and they must work in close co-operation with the masses of non-party people in the common effort to make our socialist motherland ever stronger and more prosperous, until the ultimate realization of communism.

Party committees are responsible, and report their work, to the party congresses at their respective levels.

(4) Higher party organizations shall pay constant attention to the views of the lower organizations and the rank-and-file party members, and solve in good time the problems they raise. Lower party organizations shall report on their work to, and request instructions from, higher party organizations; at the same time, they shall handle, independently and in a responsible manner, matters within their jurisdiction. Higher and lower party organizations should exchange information and support and supervise each other.

(5) Party committees at all levels function on the principle of combining collective leadership with individual responsibility based on division of labour. All major issues shall be decided upon by the party committees after democratic discussion.

If still no decision can be made, the controversy should be reported to the next higher party organization for ruling.

When, on behalf of the party organization, an individual party member is to express views on major issues beyond the scope of existing party decisions, the content must be referred to the party organization for prior discussion and decision, or referred to the next higher party organization for instructions. The primary party organizations are militant bastions of the party in the basic units of society. Their main tasks are:

(1) To propagate and carry out the party's line, principles and policies, the decisions of the Central Committee of the party and other higher party organizations, and their own decisions; to give full play to the exemplary vanguard role of party members, and to unite and organize the cadres and the rank and file inside and outside the party in fulfilling the tasks of their own units.

(2) To organize party members to conscientiously study Marxism-Leninism and Mao Zedong Thought, study essential knowledge concerning the party, and the party's line, principles and policies, and acquire general, scientific and professional knowledge.

(3) To educate and supervise party members, ensure their regular participation in the activities of the party organization, see that party members truly fulfil their duties and observe discipline, and protect their rights for encroachment.

(4) To maintain close ties with the masses, constantly seek their criticisms and opinions regarding party members and the party's work, value the knowledge and rationalization proposals of the masses and experts, safeguard the legitimate rights and interests of the masses, show concern for their material and cultural life and help them improve it, do effective ideological and political work among them, and enhance their political consciousness. They must correct, by proper methods, the erroneous ideas and unhealthy ways and customs that may exist among the masses, and properly handle the contradictions in their midst.

(5) To give full scope to the initiative and creativeness of party members and the masses, discover advanced elements and talented people needed for the socialist cause, encourage them to improve their work and come up with innovations and inventions, and support them in these efforts.

(6) To admit new party members, collect membership dues, examine and appraise the work and behaviour of party members, commend exemplary deeds performed by them, and maintain and enforce party discipline.

(7) To promote criticism and self-criticism, and expose and overcome shortcomings and mistakes in work. To educate party and non-party cadres; see to it that they strictly observe the law and adminsitrative discipline and the financial and economic discipline and personnel regulations of the state; see to it that none of them infringe the interests of the state, the collective and the masses; and see to it that the financial workers including accountants and other professionals who are charged with enforcing laws and regulations in their own units do not themselves violate the laws and regulations, while at the same time ensuring and protecting their right to exercise their functions and powers independently in accordance with the law and guarding them against any reprisals for so doing.

(8) To educate party members and the masses to raise their revolutionary vigilance and wage resolute struggles against the criminal activities of counterrevolutionaries and other saboteurs.

Article 33

In an enterprise or institution, the primary party committee or the general branch committee or branch committee, where there is no primary party committee, gives leadership in the work of its own unit. Such a primary party organization discusses and decides on major questions of principle and at the same time ensures that the administrative leaders fully exercise their functions and powers, but refrains from substituting itself for, or trying to take over from, the administrative leaders. Except in special circumstances, the general branch committees and branch committees under the leadership of a primary party committee only play a guarantory and supervisory role to see that the production targets or operational tasks assigned to their own units are properly fulfilled.

In party or government offices at all levels, the primary party organizations shall not lead the work of these offices. Their task here is to exercise supervision over all party members, including the heads of these offices who are party members, with regard to their implementation of the party's line, principles and policies, their observance of discipline and the law, their contact with the masses, and their ideology, work style and moral character; and to assist the office heads to improve work, raise efficiency and overcome bureaucratic ways, keep them informed of the shortcomings and problems discovered in the work of these offices, or report such shortcomings and problems to the higher party organizations.

Chapter VI

Party Cadres

Article 34

Party cadres are the backbone of the party's cause and public servants of the people. The party selects its cadres according to the principle that they should possess both political integrity and professional competence, persists in the practice of appointing people on their merits and opposes favouritism; it calls for genuine efforts to make the ranks of the cadres more revolutionary, younger in average age, better educated and more professionally competent.

Party cadres are obliged to accept training by the party as well as examination and assessment of their work by the party.

The party should attach importance to the training and promotion of women cadres and cadres from among the minority nationalities.

Article 35

Leading party cadres at all levels must perform in an exemplary way their duties as party members prescribed in Article 3 of this constitution and must meet the following basic requirements:

(1) Have a fair grasp of the theories of Marxism-Leninism and Mao Zedong Thought and the policies based on them, and be able to adhere to the socialist road, fight against the hostile forces disrupting socialism and combat all erroneous tendencies inside and outside the party.

(2) In their work as leaders, conduct earnest investigations and study, persistently proceed from reality and properly carry out the line, principles and policies of the party.

(3) Be fervently dedicated to the revolutionary cause and imbued with a strong sense of political responsibility, and be qualified for their leading posts in organizational ability, general education and vocational knowledge.

(4) Have a democratic work style, maintain close ties with the masses, correctly implement the party's mass line, conscientiously accept criticism and supervision by the party and the masses, and combat bureaucratism.

(5) Exercise their functions and powers in the proper way, observe and uphold the rules and regulations of the party and the state, and combat all acts of abusing power and seeking personal gain.

(6) Be good at uniting and working with a large number of comrades, including those who hold differing opinions, while upholding the party's principles.

Article 36

Party cadres should be able to co-operate with non-party cadres, respect them and learn open-mindedly from their strong points.

Party organizations at all levels must be good at discovering and recommending talented and knowledgeable non-party cadres for leading posts, and ensure that the latter enjoy authority commensurate with their posts and can play their roles to the full.

Article 37

Leading party cadres at all levels, whether elected through democratic procedure or appointed by a leading body, are not entitled to lifelong tenure, and they can be transferred from or relieved of their posts.

Cadres no longer fit to continue working due to old age or poor health should retire according to the regulations of the state.

Chapter VII

Party Discipline

Article 38

A Communist Party member must consciously act within the bounds of party discipline. Party organizations shall criticize, educate or take disciplinary measures against members who violate party discipline, depending on the nature and seriousness of their mistakes and in the spirit of "learning from past mistakes to avoid future ones, and curing the sickness to save the patient".

Party members who violate the law and administrative discipline shall be subject to administrative disciplinary action or legal action instituted by administrative or judicial organs. Those who have seriously violated criminal law shall be expelled from the party.

There are five measures of party discipline: warning, serious warning, removal from party posts and proposals for their removal from non-party posts to the organizations concerned, placing on probation within the party, and expulsion from the party.

The period for which a party member is placed on probation shall not exceed two years. During this period, the party member concerned has no right to vote, elect or stand for election. A party member who during this time proves to have corrected his mistake shall have his rights as a party member restored. Party members who refuse to mend their ways shall be expelled from the party.

Expulsion is the ultimate party disciplinary measure. In deciding on or approving an expulsion, party organizations at all levels should study all the relevant facts and opinions and exercise extreme caution.

It is strictly forbidden, within the party, to take any measures against a member that contravene the party constitution or the laws of the state, or to retaliate against or frame up comrades. Any offending organization or individual must be dealt with according to party discipline or the laws of the state.

Article 40

Any disciplinary measures against a party member must be discussed and decided on at a general membership meeting of the party branch concerned, and reported to the primary party committee concerned for approval. If the case is relatively important or complicated, or involves the expulsion of a member, it shall be reported, on the merit of that case, to a party commission for discipline inspection at or above the county level for examination and approval. Under special circumstances, a party committee or a commission for discipline inspection at or above the county level has the authority to decide directly on disciplinary measures against a party member.

Any decision to remove a member or alternate member of the Central Committee or a local committee at any level from posts within the party, to place such a person on probation within the party or to expel him from the party must be taken by a two-thirds majority vote at a plenary meeting of the party committee to which he belongs. Such a disciplinary measure against a member or alternate member of a local party committee is subject to approval by the higher party committees.

Members and alternate members of the Central Committee who have seriously violated criminal law shall be expelled from the party on decision by the Political Bureau of the Central Committee; members and alternate members of local party committees who have seriously violated criminal law shall be expelled from the party on decision by the standing committees of the party committees at the corresponding levels.

Why a party organization decides on a disciplinary measure against a party member, it should investigate and verify the facts in an objective way. The party member in question must be informed of the decision to be made and of the facts on which it is based. He must be given a chance to account for himself and speak in his own defence. If the member does not accept the decision, he can appeal, and the party organization concerned must promptly deal with or forward his appeal, and must not withhold or suppress it. Those who cling to erroneous views and unjustifiable demands shall be educated by criticism.

Article 42

It is an important duty of every party organization to firmly uphold party discipline. Failure of a party organization to uphold party discipline must be investigated.

In case a party organization seriously violates party discipline and is unable to rectify the mistakes on its own, the next higher party committee should, after verifying the facts and considering the seriousness of the case, decide on the reorganization or dissolution of the organization, report the decision to the party committee further above for examination and approval, and then formally announce and carry out the decision.

Chapter VIII

Party Organs for Discipline Inspection

Article 43

The party's Central Commission for Discipline Inspection functions under the leadership of the Central Committee of the party. Local commissions for discipline inspection at all levels function under the dual leadership of the party committees at the corresponding levels and the next higher commissions for discipline inspection.

The party's central and local commissions for discipline inspection serve a term of the same duration as the party committees at the corresponding levels.

The Central Commission for Discipline Inspection elects, in plenary session, its Standing Committee and secretary and deputy secretaries and reports the results to the Central Committee for approval. Local commissions for discipline inspection at all levels elect, at their plenary sessions, their respective standing committees and secretaries and deputy secretaries. The results of the elections are subject to endorsement by the party committees at the corresponding levels and should be reported to the higher party committees for approval. The first secretary of the Central Commission for Discipline Inspection must be a member of the Standing Committee of the Political Bureau. The question of whether a primary party committee should set up a commission for discipline inspection or simply appoint a discipline inspection commissioner shall be determined by the next higher party organization in the light of the specific circumstances. The committees of general party branches and party branches shall have discipline inspection commissioners.

The party's Central Commission for Discipline Inspection shall, when its work so requires, accredit discipline inspection groups or commissioners to party or state organs at the central level. Leaders of the discipline inspection groups or discipline inspection commissioners may attend relevant meetings of the leading party organizations in the said organs as non-voting participants. The leading party organizations in the organs concerned must give support to their work.

The main tasks of the central and local commissions for discipline inspection are as follows: to uphold the constitution and the other important rules and regulations of the party, to assist the respective party committees in rectifying party style, and to check up on the implementation of the line, principles, policies and decisions of the party.

The central and local commissions for discipline inspection shall carry out constant education among party members on their duty to observe party discipline; they shall adopt decisions for the upholding of party discipline, examine and deal with relatively important or complicated cases of violation of the constitution and discipline of the party or the laws and decrees of the state by party organizations or party members; decide on or cancel disciplinary measures against party members involved in such cases; and deal with complaints and appeals made by party members.

The central and local commissions for discipline inspection should report to the party committees at the corresponding levels on the results of their handling of cases of special importance or complexity, as well as on the problems encountered. Local commissions for discipline inspection should also present such reports to the higher commissions.

If the Central Commission for Discipline Inspection discovers any violation of party discipline by any member of the Central Committee, it may report such an offence to the Central Committee, and the Central Committee must deal with the case promptly.

Article 45

Higher commissions for discipline inspection have the power to check up on the work of the lower commissions and to approve or modify their decisions on any case. If decisions so modified have already been ratified by the party committee at the corresponding level, the modification must be approved by the next higher party committee.

If a local commission for discipline inspection does not agree with a decision made by the party committee at the corresponding level in dealing with a case, it may request the commission at the next higher level to re-examine the case; if a local commission discovers cases of violation of party discipline or the laws and decrees of the state by the party committee at the corresponding level or by its members, and if that party committee fails to deal with them properly or at all, it has the right to appeal to the higher commissions for assistance in dealing with such cases.

Chapter IX

Leading Party Members Groups

Article 46

A leading party members group shall be formed in the leading body of a central or local state organ, people's organization, economic or cultural institution or other non-party unit. The main tasks of such a group are: to see to it that the party's principles and policies are implemented, to unite with the non-party cadres and masses in fulfilling the tasks assigned by the party and the state, and to guide the work of the party organization of the unit.

Article 47

The members of a leading party members group are appointed by the party committee that approves its establishment. The group shall have a secretary and deputy secretaries.

A leading party members group must accept the leadership of the party committee that approves its establishment.

Article 48

The Central Committee of the party shall determine specifically the functions, powers and tasks of the leading party members groups in those government departments which need to exercise highly centralized and unified leadership over subordinate units; it shall also determine whether such groups should be replaced by party committees.

Chapter X

Relationship Between the Party and the Communist Youth League

Article 49

The Communist Youth League of China is a mass organization of advanced young people under the leadership of the Communist Party of China; it is a school where large numbers of young people will learn about communism through practice; it is the party's assistant and reserve force. The Central Committee of the Communist Youth League functions under the leadership of the Central Committee of the party. The local organizations of the Communist Youth League are under the leadership of the party committees at the corresponding levels and of the higher organizations of the league itself.

Article 50

Party committees at all levels must strengthen their leadership over the Communist Youth League organizations and pay attention to the selection and training of league cadres. The party must firmly support the Communist Youth League in the lively and creative performance of its work to suit the characteristics and needs of young people, and give full play to the league's role as a shock force and as a bridge linking the party with the broad masses of young people.

Those secretaries of league committees, at or below the county level or in enterprises and institutions, who are party members may attend meetings of party committees at the corresponding levels and of their standing committees as non-voting participants.

RENMIN RIBAO ON HAVING 'FIRM FAITH IN COMMUNISM'

HK081336 Beijing RENMIN RIBAO in Chinese 8 Sep 82 p 6

[Article by De Min [1795 3046]: "Have Firm Faith in Communism"]

[Text] "It does not matter if I am beheaded so long as the doctrine is true." That was a solemn statement by Comrade Xia Minghan before his heroic death in 1928. When we review this heart-stirring line and cherish the memory of thousands of martyrs at a time when the 12th CPC National Congress is being held, our comrades will naturally ask themselves: Do I have firm faith in communism?

When communism was regarded as the great scourge in those years, belief in communism entailed tremendous risks and even the danger of being beheaded. However, there were dauntless, unyielding persons who clearly understood the possibility of being beheaded and yet insisted on embracing and practicing communism. Since the victory of revolution, party members still have to withstand all kinds of tests in relation to their belief. In the course of the tests, thousands upon thousands of staunch fighters have emerged, such as Lei Feng and Jiao Yulu in the 1960's, Zhang Zhixin in the 1970's and Luan Fu and Zhao Chune in the 1980's, whom the broad masses of people look up to. This is the main aspect or backbone of the communist ranks. Naturally, there are also some party members whose belief has gone wrong, whose behavior is really shocking and who have even degenerated and become criminals.

If, in past years, some party members took a vacillating attitude toward their belief as a result of the enemy's ruthless suppression and distorted propaganda, then, why do some party members have a problem of belief at a time when the communist banners are flying high and the Communist Party has become the party in power? There are various circumstances in this case.

Since our party has become the party in power, the communist banner and the Communist Party, while strongly appealing to many genuine revolutionaries, also "strongly appeals to" some political speculators. These political speculators have embraced communism and joined the party with the sole purpose of seeking some political advantages and more liberal benefits. Moreover, the practice of "quickly taking in new party members" during the "Great Cultural Revolution" also enabled some people who did not have the slightest faith in communism and even some people who were opposed to communism to sneak into the party. These two kinds of people do not believe in communism; they believe in individualism and pragmatism.

It is worth pointing out that some party members, including an extremely small number of party members who joined the party at an early date, believed in communism from the start and have done some useful work. However, when they see that the communist movement has suffered a lot of hardships and setbacks, that bad people have emerged in the Communist Party and that unhealthy tendencies have spread in the party, they neither set an example nor take an active part in struggle but blame everyone and everything else. They are full of grievances. In time they become disheartened and their faith is shaken. There are also some party members whose faith is shaken because they find it difficult to distinguish genuine from sham communism and are at a loss as to what to do. For example, the "persons who raised a hue and cry" in 1958 cracked themselves up as communism and the "poor transition" of the "Great Cultural Revolution" went under the name of communism. This kind of sham communism destroyed the reputation of the genuine communism. When genuine communism was presented after we succeeded in bringing order out of chaos, a few comrades still found it difficult to free themselves from doubts and misgivings. This is precisely the case that "when the sham is presented as genuine, the genuine is also regarded as a sham."

It is necessary for party members to have firm faith in communism. We must not be vague on this point. In order to have firm faith in communism, it is necessary to believe that the cause of communism will eventually triumph no matter how many hardships and setbacks it may suffer. This is the inevitable outcome of history. Some comrades attribute their wavering faith wholly to difficulties in distinguishing genuine from sham communism. This is an act of making allowances for themselves. Even if this is an "objective cause," then, at a time when the party has fulfilled the task of bringing order out of chaos in the guiding ideology and when major victories have been achieved in practical work on various fronts, it is purely due to their subjective cause if they still fail to have firm faith in communism.

In order to purify the party's ranks and strengthen the faith of party members, the CPC Central Committee is determined to strengthen the party ideologically and organizationally. While carrying out education among the numerous party members and enhancing their political consciousness, the party will take disciplinary actions against and even clear out those who do not truly believe in communism, who refuse to fulfill the obligations of a party member and who refuse to turn over a new leaf after education. All people inside and outside the party support this course of action. The Communist Party is one which fights for the cause of communism and a person who refuses to believe in communism has no right to remain in the party.

Communism is scientific truth and it is necessary to arm the revolutionaries with scientific truth. It can be confidently expected that, through the conscientious study of the documents of the 12th CPC National Congress, those who already have firm faith in communism will have an even firmer faith in communism, and those who do not have sufficient faith in communism will have increasingly firm faith in communism.

GUANGMING RIBAO ON COMMUNIST IDEOLOGY EDUCATION

[Article by Cao Yong [2580 3279]: "Persevere in Education on Communist Ideology"]

[Text] Communist ideology has been proved by the communist movement to be a scientific ideological system and a brilliant banner guiding the continuous development of the contemporary communist movement. Comrade Mao Zedong pointed out long ago that "without communism to guide it, China's democratic revolution cannot possibly succeed, let alone move on to the next stage." ("Selected Works of Mao Zedong," vol 2, p 679) Facts have proved that it is under the guidance of communist ideology that China's democratic revolution and socialist revolution have won great victory. In our new historical period of striving for the realization of the four modernizations, communist ideology is still our guiding ideology. It is the core of the socialist spiritual civilization. Only when we persevere in the education on communist ideology for the broad masses of party members and people can we keep our revolutionary ranks pure and full of vigor and vitality. Any idea or attempt to deny this is entirely wrong.

When the broad masses of party members and people are educated with communist ideology, they will be capable of correctly observing and handling the ideological, political and economic problems at the present stage. While working out its line, policies and principles, our party has always taken into consideration both the actual conditions in our socialist society at the present stage and the needs for the long-term development of the communist movement. Therefore, when we study and implement this line and these policies and principles, we must also be guided by communist ideas. We must not one-sidedly comprehend the present policies, or even distort them with the rotten ideology of the bourgeoisie. For example, the policy of enlivening the domestic economy and the open-door policy are Marxist-Leninist policies our party formulated in light of the four modernizations in accordance with objective economic laws. However, some people have, starting from the bourgeois profit-before-everything mentality, one-sidedly interpreted them as "liberalization of the economy," thinking that they can do whatever they want and reap some profit. For another example, in implementing the principle of "distributing according to one's work," only when we are guided by the communist ideology can we see both its advantages and disadvantages and correctly implement this socialist principle in distribution. However, starting from the money-is-everything mentality, some people have interpreted this principle into "work according to remuneration." Some people have even preached about driving a hard bargain over one's personal gains and losses, opposing the communist spirit of selflessness. All this fully shows that without the guidance of communist ideology, we shall not be able to correctly understand the party's line, policies and principles, and shall certainly deviate from the road of the communist movement.

Only by persevering in the education on communist ideology for the broad masses of party members and people can we make them conscientiously relate their immediate interests to their long-term interests and correctly handle the relations between the state, the collective and individuals. When a communist is fighting for the cause of communism, he is fighting for the happiness of the majority of the people rather than for remuneration. It was for the lofty goal of communism that countless martyrs in our party have heroically laid down their lives. Today, both veteran communist fighters who have luckily survived and the comrades who have newly joined the party must learn from their spirit of utter devotion and must not hesitate to sacrifice their all for the cause of communism. If some party members are merely working for remuneration, then they have lost the very least expected by the people of a party member.

At present, both in the countryside and in factories, various responsibility systems are being practiced in light of the actual conditions of our country. Practice shows that this has greatly raised efficiency in productive labor. However, some units and individuals have only paid attention to the interests of their small groups and individuals, giving no consideration to the interests of the state and the collective. Such phenomena have occurred often. Sometimes, in order to seek their immediate interests, they did not even consider the interests of our posterity. To correctly solve these contradictions, we must also rely on communist ideology. In their "Communist Manifesto," Marx and Engels said: "The communists are fighting for the most immediate purpose and interests of the working class, but in the present movement, they also represent the future of this movement." ("Selected Works of Marx and Engels," vol 1, p 284) Provided the broad masses of party members, cadres and people are armed with this communist ideology and really implement it in their practice, they will surely better relate their immediate interests to their long-term interests. Such phenomena as seeking the immediate interests at the cost of long-term interests will surely be fundamentally prevented. Comrade Mao Zedong always advocated educating the party members with communist ideology so that individualism and factionalism could be overcome. If we continue to do this, the contradictions between the state, the collective and individuals will be easier to handle well.

Only by educating the party members and cadres with communist ideology can a good job be done in the present organizational reform. The problems in some units, such as being overstaffed and the aging of the cadres' ranks, have seriously obstructed the smooth development of the construction of the socialist four modernizations, which earnestly requires us to streamline administration and build up a contingent of revolutionary, well-educated, professionally competent and younger cadres. We must gradually reform our organizations and the cadre system. If our party members and cadres always keep close to their heart the lofty goal of communism and give no thought to personal gains and losses, the reform will surely be smoothly carried out.

Only by educating the broad masses of party members, cadres and people with communist ideology can some erroneous ideas be corrected and some confused interpretations be clarified. Both the international communist movement and the practice of socialism in our country have really suffered a number of setbacks. Some people, including some veteran cadres who have been a part of the revolution for many years, have thus doubted the lofty communist ideals, thinking that communism is "as vague as mist." In order to eliminate this doubt and firmly establish faith in communism, it is necessary to carry out ideological education on communism. Marx proved long ago the objective law of the development of human history and pointed out that capitalism is doomed and socialism and communism are bound to win. This is a law independent of man's subjective will. Although the realization of communism will take a very long time, during which we may come across various difficulties and setbacks, we are certain that the communist society will be realized in our country as well as in the whole world.

During the democratic revolutionary period, Comrade Mao Zedong pointed out: "Beyond all doubt, now is the time to spread communist ideas more widely and put more energy into the study of Marxism-Leninism, or otherwise we shall not only be unable to lead the Chinese revolution forward to the future stage of socialism, but shall also be unable to guide the present democratic revolution to victory. However, we must continue the spreading of communist ideas and propaganda about the communist social system distinct from the practical application of the new democratic program of action; we must also maintain the communist theory and method of investigating problems, undertaking research, handling work and training cadres separate from the new democratic line for the national culture as a whole. It is undoubtedly inappropriate to mix the two up." ("Selected Works of Mao Zedong," vol 2, p 699) In this passage, although what Comrade Mao Zedong referred to was the relationship between the propaganda of communist ideas and the practice of the program for the democratic revolution, the main spirit is still of great guiding significance today.

The purpose of strengthening the study and propaganda of communist ideas at present is to guide the construction of the socialist modernizations so that it can be completed smoothly and quickly. This does not at all mean that we are going to practice the communist system and policies right away. The purpose of guiding the "distribution according to one's work" with communist ideas is to prevent the rotten capitalist ideas from distorting this principle so that the advantage of this principle can be better displayed. It does not at all mean that we are going to abrogate this principle soon and replace it with the communist principle of "distribution according to one's needs." The purpose of advocating the communist theory and method of investigating problems, undertaking research, handling work and educating the party members, cadres and masses of people is to adhere to the great orientation of communism and to resist the corrosive influence of bourgeois ideology so that the correct implementation of the socialist policies at the present stage can be guaranteed. It does not at all mean that the present policies and principles for building socialism will soon be changed. While propagating communist ideas, we must correctly implement the present policies and principles and must not mix the two up. The "leftist" mistake of stirring up the "communist wind," which appeared in the past, must not be repeated. However, if communist ideology is not propagated with a clear-cut stand for fear that past mistakes may be repeated, it is also a big mistake.

RENMIN RIBAO ON PROPAGATING FAITH IN COMMUNISM

[Article by Wu Min [0702 2404]: "Communist Faith and Theoretical Cultivation"]

[Text] The 12th CPC National Congress has ushered in a new situation in the building of socialist modernizationin China. The building of socialist modernization is a foundation laid for the building of the glorious future of communism. In the objective situation every communist and cadre are expected to have a firm communist faith and accept new tasks with a new mental outlook.

Communist faith is not spontaneously formed and fixed. Only by constantly strengthening Marxist theoretical cultivation through practice, can we have a firm communist faith. Because as a scientific ideological system, communism was established by Marx and Engels in accordance with the practical needs of proletarian emancipation and social development, through undertaking scientific research with extreme hardships and difficulties, and critically assimilating the theoretical achievements from German classical philosophy, English classical political economics and French utopian socialism, no individual can, with his parochial practical experience, truly understand that communism is the inevitable objective development of human history. Without a basic Marxist theoretical cultivation, it would be impossible to have a firm communist faith. People might be deceived by political swindlers like Lin Biao and the "gang of four," or, on discovering they have been swindled, fall into the deep abyss of collapse of faith, just as some people experienced during the "Great Cultural Revolution," and after the downfall of the "gang of four." Only communist faith based on the theoretical cultivation of Marxism can stand up to any king of rigorous test. During the war years, thousands upon thousands of martyrs stepped on the enemy's execution ground singing "The Internationale Will Surely Be Attained," carrying on their final struggle; during the "Great Cultural Revolution," Liu Shaoqi, Peng Dehuai and the veteran proletarian revolutionaries were subjected to humiliation and injustice, but although they were in a very difficult situation, their faith in the sacred cause of communism was never shaken. The main reason was that was they had a firm theoretical foundation in their communist faith and they constantly strengthened Marxist theoretical cultivation. To his last minute, Comrade Peng Dehuai still kept "Anti-Duehring" and other Marxist works at his side. This is a conspicuous example.

Marxism comprises a variety of meanings. They are necessary for establishing and fixing communist faith. At their core is the theory of scientific socialism. Marxist philosophy and political economics laid the foundation for scientific socialism with the viewpoint of materialism and the theory of surplus value. Some comrades consider that scientific socialism regards socialist society as its research object, and it mainly studies how to practice socialism. This kind of viewpoint is not comprehensive. Socialism, in the concept of scientific socialism, is not completely the same thing as the socialism that is the initial stage of communism. The former is a synonym for communism, the latter is only the initial stage of communism. Scientific socialism can also be called scientific communism. It was in the midst of the second decade of the 20th century that socialism was regarded as the initial stage of communism. Prior to that, socialism and communism were synonyms. When Marx and Engels were alive, they clearly defined their theory as "scientific socialism." Back in 1913, Lenin described scientific socialism as one of the three component parts of Marxism. At that time, scientific socialism was the ideological system and theory regarding the realization of communism as its ultimate aim. In order to establish communist faith, we must stress scientific socialism as a key point in theoretical cultivation, that is to say, communist faith is the comprehension of and faith in scientific socialism.

For a considerable period of time, communist faith has been gradually getting faint in the minds of a substantial number of people. They have slim hopes of communism, regarding it like the stars and moon in the sky, within sight but beyond reach. There are many reasons for this. One of the most important is that the theory of scientific socialism was not given its due importance for a long time, and lacked systematic study, propagation and research. During the initial period of the founding of the state, we regarded the "Abridged History of the Party (Bolshevik)" as a Marxism-Leninism basic course for cadres, and carried out theoretical education on scientific socialism for the masses of cadres. Later on, this course ceased. For more than 20 years we did not clearly define the establishment of the course of scientific socialism. Not until Comrade Hu Yaobang took charge of the work of the Central Party School and at his proposal did we formally establish the course of scientific socialism. It is quite obvious that ignoring for a long time and giving up the systematic study, propagation and research of scientific socialism is bound to influence people's correct comprehension of communism. In order to establish and have a firm communist faith, we must start from the basics, strengthen Marxist theorectical education and enhance the study and research of scientific socialism. Communist faith cannot be truly established and fixed by merely relying on one's narrow and practical experience or relying on general calls and the influential role of progressive figures.

The great course of history since the third plenary session has laid down favorable conditions for us to strengthen the theoretical cultivation in scientific socialism and have a firm communist faith. Our party has not only accomplished the significant task of bringing order out of chaos ideologically and theoretically, thus enabling the truth of scientific socialism to blossom once again, but also through scientific summing up of historical experience since the founding of our country and through a variety of principles and policies laid down under the new historical condition, it has combined the universal truth of scientific socialism with the concrete practice of socialism in our country, and demonstrated the vigor and vitality of the theory of scientific socialism. In this situation, the theory of scientific socialism is increasingly attracting people's serious attention. The study of scientific socialism is now developing in breadth and depth. This is a favorable condition for strengthening theoretical cultivation of scientific socialism. Moreover, the CPC Central Committee has demanded that the whole party systematically study Marxism-Leninism-Mao Zedong Thought and that it establish and perfect the system of cadre training and study in the course of reforming the organizational structure, and also do well in education for workers. This has organizationally offered a reliable guarantee for us to strengthen theoretical cultivation and have a firm communist faith.

But no matter how favorable the objective conditions are, without one's subjective efforts, it is also impossible to have a firm communist faith. To carry on Marxist theoretical cultivation is an arduous process, and a process of establishing and having firm communist faith. Only by making unremitting efforts and closely integrating theoretical study with the tempering of proletarian ideology can we have a firm communist faith. Scientific socialism is a brilliant crystallization of civilized human development. While carrying on theoretical cultivation in scientific socialism, we must also make great efforts to comprehend and study new conditions and new problems that appear in the contemporary communist movement. "If you are aware that you know very little, you must try to make yourself understand more. He who regards himself as a communist, and considers it unnecessary to know anything else, is in fact not a communist at all." ("Collected Works of Lenin," vol 31, p 255)

COMMENTATOR HAILS MINORITY SPORTS MEET

[Commentator's article: "An Impressive Meeting of Grand Unity of All Nationalities -- Greeting the Opening of the National Sports Meet of Minority Nationalities"]

[Text] The traditional sports meet of minority nationalities has opened with flying colors in Hohhot, capital of Nei Monggol Autonomous Region, on a clear, fresh golden autumn day. Here gathered more than 800 outstanding athletes of over 50 minority nationalities from all over the country. This is a meeting of grand unity, a splendid meeting in our sporting history. This demonstrates that the party and the state pay great attention to the physical culture of minority nationalities. It also shows the warmth of the big socialist family of all nationalities.

China is a multinationality country. In the long historical development, all nationalities have jointly opened up the territory of the motherland, and developed the economy, and culture, forming the great Chinese people. For thousands of years, amid labor, living and practice, the industrious, ingenious and brave minority nationalities have created various sports such as: martial arts, horse racing, wrestling, archery, crossbow shooting, yak racing, camel racing, dragon boat racing, springboards, swings, staffball, ball games with baskets on players' backs and hundreds of other traditional sports, full of national characteristics and well received by the masses. These rich and colorful activities are a part of our country's cultural heritage; they serve to liven up culture and promote people's physique. Characterized by a long history, most of these activities have important reference value for studying the history of economic and cultural development.

Being a component of cultural life, sports are directly governed and affected by society, politics and economics. In the old society, traditional nationality sports activities were destroyed by the reactionary ruling class and many of them became extinct. Since the country's liberation, the party and government have attached great importance and shown solicitude for developing traditional nationality sports and have opened up a broad way for carrying on and developing traditional nationality sports. In particular, under the guiding ideology of the 3d Plenary Session of the 11th CPC Central Committee, with the implementation of the party's nationality policy, the economic development in the areas of the minority nationalities and the improvement of people's standard of living, traditional nationality sports have been resumed and developed, presenting a vast scene of prosperity.

The traditional sports of minority nationalities are closely related to their national life, customs and habits. To develop the sports of minority nationalities is an important component part of the socialist sports cause as well as an important content of implementing the party's nationality policy. Minority nationalities have shown a high level of wisdom and creativity in sports.

In the past, a great number of athletes from minority nationalities joined the ranks in breaking world records or winning championships in national sport events. They have won honor for the motherland and made important contributions to socialist sports. More and more outstanding athletes will emerge from the minority nationalities amid economic and cultural development.

The opening of this sports meet has marked a new development in nationality sports. It will exert a positive influence in further implementing the party's nationality policy, strengthening nationality unity, promoting nationality cultural prosperity and developing the traditional sports of all nationalities. We sincerely express our congratulations to the complete success of this sports meet.

CORRECTION TO TEXT OF HU YAOBANG'S REPORT

The following paragraph should be inserted on page K 17 of the 8 Sep DAILY REPORT between the first and second paragraphs:

Our struggle against grave criminal offences in the economic sphere is now being intensified. Among those guilty of such crimes, apart from law-breakers in society at large, are a tiny number of degenerates in party and government organizations and in the armed forces who have been corrupted by capitalist ideology. They cause tremendous damage to economic construction, upset social stability, debase the standards of social conduct and corrupt people's minds and life. They are termites undermining the edifice of socialism. Similar destructive activities occur in the political and cultural spheres as well. We must on no account rank all these things with the common run of offences or anti-social acts, because they are important manifestations of class struggle under the new historical conditions in which we are pursuing a policy of opening to the outside and taking flexible measures to invigorate our economy domestically. Such destructive elements must be severely punished by law. We have won some initial successes in this struggle. The whole party must enhance its understanding of this struggle, take a firm stand in it and unswervingly carry it through to the end. This will be an important guarantee for our adherence to the socialist road.

EXPERTS SURVEY HARBORS ALONG FUJIAN COAST

[Text] Fuzhou, September 8 (XINHUA) -- A team of 70 experts in all fields of study has recently completed a field survey of deep water harbors along the coast of Fujian Province, according to the local people's government.

The survey was organized by the provincial Science and Technology Association and the provincial people's government, and included experts from the State Planning Commission, the State Economic Commission, the Ministry of Communications and various well-known universities and colleges.

Considered a prelude to large-scale harbor construction along the Fujian coast, the survey covered four harbor areas, including the Minjiang River estuary, Meizhou Bay, Quanzhou Bay and the Xiamen Harbor. Experts toured the land and inspected the navigation channels and coastal berths.

Construction of these deep-water harbors is expected to be of considerable significance in carrying out external economic activities, developing ocean-going shipping and accelerating the economic development in areas south of the Yangtze River.

The experts had high praise for the prospects of Meizhou Bay, which, they said, is a rare harbor site with a promising future. They urged an immediate feasibility study for construction on this natural harbor.

In addition, the experts emphasized the protection of natural deep-water harbors. They said they found some harbors cut up by dams and dykes for reclamation and some silted up. They proposed a unified plan be worked out to make a better use of these harbor resources so as to benefit the modernization of the country.

The survey team submitted a report to Fujian Province and the relevant department under the central authority.

GUANGDONG PREFECTURE RELEASES TAIWAN BOAT

HK081312 Guangzhou Guangdong Provincial Service in Mandarin 1000 GMT 8 Sep 82

[Text] With the approval of its upper level, the Shantou prefectural public security organ recently released a Taiwan fishing boat which was controlled and used by the KMT espionage agency. (Yan Chengben) and (Yan Yisheng), secret agents on board the boat, were also leniently dealt with and returned to Taiwan along with the other crew members.

When this spy boat and the two secret agents on board the boat sneaked into the sea along our Chaoyang County and carried out sabotage activities on 25 July this year, they were quickly discovered, seized and arrested. Over recent years, the Taiwan KMT espionage agency has disregarded the strong desires of the people of all nationalities throughout the country, which is to strive to fulfill the peaceful reunification of the motherland. It has continued to persist in carrying out the activities of overthrowing and sabotaging the mainland of the motherland. It has used mean tricks and utilized and threatened a small number of Taiwan fishermen to carry out all sabotage activities in the sea along our coasts under the pretext of fishing and other activities.

The (Shengfacheng) No 2 fishing boat, which we seized, was controlled and used by the Penghu work group of the Taiwan KMT Intelligence Bureau. (Yan Chengben) and (Yan Yisheng), father and son on board the boat, are Taiwan fishermen. Since 1980 they have been trained as secret agents by the KMT Intelligence Bureau. After training to become secret agents, they took up the tasks of collecting information and developing organizations. They came to the sea along our coast many times to carry out sabotage activities.

The secret service activities of (Yan Chengben) and (Yan Yisheng) jeopardized the state security and violated criminal law. They should have been punished in accordance with the law. However, as their activities were carried out under the Taiwan KMT espionage agency's threat and lure by promise of gain and their attitude toward confession of the crimes was relatively good, it was decided that the two persons, (Yan Chengben) and (Yan Yisheng), were to be leniently dealt with and released after education. The (Shengfacheng) No 2 boat and the five other crew members on board the boat were released at the same time so that they could return to Taiwan. This action has once again embodied our sincere will to fulfill the peaceful reunification of our motherland.

XIZANG PARTY MEETING DISCUSSES 12TH CONGRESS

HK090412 Lhasa Xizang Regional Service in Mandarin 0000 GMT 9 Sep 82

[Excerpts] The Xizang Regional CPC Committee held an enlarged standing committee meeting on the afternoon of 7 September to seriously study and discuss the spirit of the 12th party congress. The meeting expressed resolve to work hard to accomplish the tasks put forward by the congress and speed up the pace of building a united, rich and civilized new socialist Xizang.

In their study and discussion, in close connection with Xizang reality, the participants talked about the excellent situation and the major achievements recorded on all fronts since the 3d plenary session of the 11th Central Committee and especially since implementing the important central instructions on work in Xizang. They were thus filled with confidence in building a united, rich and civilized new Xizang. They said: Comrade Hu Yaobang pointed out in his report that the party should be built into a strong core leading the cause of socialist modernization. After this congress, the regional CPC committee and the party organizations at all levels must further promote party building, strengthen unity within the party and between nationalities, uphold the notion that Hans and Tibetans cannot do without each other, have everyone working closely in concert, and lead the people of all nationalities in the region to accomplish the great goal of building a new socialist Xizang.

On the question of handing over and taking over in the cadre ranks, the participants said: Comrades Ye Jianying and Chen Yun are circumspect and far-sighted. Their speeches were extremely sincere and profound. We must seriously study and resolutely implement what they said. The participants also said: Comrade Hu Yaobang pointed out in his report that to ensure that the ranks of our cadres become more revolutionary, younger in average age, better educated and more professionally competent is a major issue in party building. A cadre force with Tibetans as the main body has now taken basic shape in Xizang. They have become the backbone leadership force on all fronts. However, most of these nationality cadres grew up after 1959 and are relatively young. It is therefore particularly important to strengthen the unity and close cooperation between new and old cadres. Owing to the actual needs of Xizang, a number of old comrades, especially old Han leading cadres, cannot withdraw from the leadership groups all at once. The majority of these old comrades have been working in Xizang for 20 or 30 years. They love Xizang, are familiar with it and understand it. It is therefore essential that they do a good job of handing over, with a high sense of responsibility to the revolution, and make a success of passing on their experience, giving help and setting examples. In handling important issues, they should put forward more ideas for the middle-aged and young cadres, especially the nationality cadres, and help them to wield power soundly. At the same time we must adopt various means to promote the training of in-service cadres, so that they can improve their professional and cultural level and work ability as quickly as possible.

The particpants also said in their study and discussion: The key to accomplishing the four modernizations lies in the modernization of science and technology. In light of the actual conditions of backward culture and low scientific level in Xizang, we must from now on be resolved to vigorously develop education. We must first do a good job in secondary and primary education.

At the same time we must further promote adult, sparetime and anti-illiteracy education. We must actively conduct propaganda and education in materialism and natural science knowledge. We must invest in brains in various ways. At the same time, we must boldly make use of the existing intellectuals, tangibly improve their working and living conditions, bring their wisdom and talent into full play, and let them make still greater contributions in working with the people of all nationalities to bring about a small change in Xizang in 3 years, a medium change in 5 and a major change in 12.

MINISTER SPEAKS ON ECONOMIC DEVELOPMENT

OW081039 Taipei CNA in English 0952 GMT 8 Sep 82

[Text] Taipei, Sept. 8 (CNA) -- K.T. Li, minister without portfolio, said Monday in Berlin, West Germany, that the economic success of the Republic of China on Taiwan should be attributed to the carrying out of the principles for the improvement of people's livelihood laid down by Dr. Sun Yat-sen, the founding father of republic.

Speaking at the 24th general meeting of the Mont Pelerin Society in Berlin, he made a comparison between the economic development of the ROC on Taiwan and that of mainland China, saying that they represent two entirely different systems.

Speaking on "The State of the Economic Contest," the ROC's eloquent futurist said that the Taiwan economy is basically a market economy where private enterprises is supplemented by government enterprise and economic planning.

"This is in effect not much different from the prevailing mixed economies. The essence of the system is to combine individual initiative and public effort in such a way as to achieve the three goals of economic development: freedom, growth and equity," he said.

Talking about the factors responsible for the remarkable economic performance in the ROC he particularly mentioned three. Li said the performance stems from a government policy that has increasingly called for more liberalization and greater dependence on market forces; the emphasis on education; and an unusually high rate of savings.

The basic attitude of the government has always been to provide a favorable environment for private initiative and enterprise, he said.

After three decades of rapid growth, Taiwan's per capita GNP reached US dollars 2,570 in 1981. Moreover, this has not been achieved at the expense of equitable distribution of income he said.

The per capita GNP of Communist China in 1981, however, was only US dollars 281. In 1978, Hua Kuo-feng announced an ambitious program to modernize industry, agriculture, science and the mainland's military establishment. This is the so-called four modernizations program, which would push per capita GNP in mainland China up to US dollars 1,000 by the year 2000. This figure was reached in the ROC on Taiwan 16 years ago in 1965. For the Chinese Communists to attain their target in the year 2000 it would require an average growth rate of six or seven percent, which seems far beyond the capability of Communist China as has been demonstrated by its past performance, he said.

The minister said it is the system that makes such a huge difference. In other words, the Chinese Communists have paid the cost of economic freedom but have failed to receive the benefit of economic efficiency, he added.

PRESIDENT CHIANG RECEIVES LEADING BUSINESSMEN

OW040427 Taipei CNA in English 0308 GMT 4 Sep 82

[Text] Sept. 4 (CNA) -- President Chiang Ching-kuo Friday received the nation's leading enterpreneurs at the presidential office.

President Chiang entertained them at tea and held talks to exchange opinions on the nation's commercial and industrial development.

Premier Sun Yun-suan, Ma Chi-Chuang, secretary-general to the president, and K. H. Yu, chairman of the Council for Economic Planning and Development, were also present.

President Chiang, after hearing reports, highly lauded the contributions that the industrial and trade circles have made through joint efforts to national development. On the prospects for future economic growth, President Chiang gave several directives:

-- For the economic achievements during the past more than 30 years, privately owned enterprises have played a leading role and made the most contributions. The proportion their manufactures hold in the gross national product has grown by double, amounting to 83 percent of the total GNP now from only about 43 percent 30 years ago. Civic business leaders will especially have their place in gaining the future advancement of national economy, the president stressed.

-- In meeting the changing world situation, we should study to take steps for the improvement of economic structure and upgrade local industry. The ROC will then be put upon a new footing as an industrialized economy.

President Chiang foresees more complicated problems the nation will encounter in pushing ahead the new programs. He called for more firm support from the civic industrial and commercial leaders in helping the government to work out a breakthrough.

-- As the nation's economy is an export-oriented one, the ROC must keep up its struggle in maintaining a stable increase in foreign trade. To survive the keen competition in the international markets the ROC should redouble its efforts to produce quality goods and create a new image of good trade order. The idea is to attract greater numbers of foreign traders.

To attain that target, President Chiang said all enterpreneurs should take up the responsibility.

-- An enterprising spirit is the moving force behind development in industry and trade. This spirit will support efforts toward attaining full national economic development, creation of new investments, innovation in administration, research in science and technology, and harmonious relations between capitalists and employees.

The president discussed these topics with Wu San-lian, Wang Yung-ching, Lin Ting-sheng, Ms. Wu Hsuin-wen, Wu Huo-shih, and Chang Kuo-an.

UN CALLS FOR AFGHAN, KAMPUCHEAN WITHDRAWALS

OW090211 Beijing XINHUA in English 0150 GMT 9 Sep 82

[Text] Geneva, September 8 (XINHUA) -- The sub-commission on prevention of discrimination and protection of minorities under the U.N. Commission on Human Rights today urged foreign forces to withdraw from Afghanistan and Kampuchea.

The sub-commission, which opened its 35th session on August 16, adopted two resolutions on the two countries.

The resolution on Afghanistan states: "Withdrawal of foreign forces from Afghanistan is essential for restoring human rights." It expresses grave concern over "the continued, prolonged and arbitrary violation of basic human rights" of the Afghan people and reaffirms the right of the Afghan people to determine their own form of government and to choose their own economic, political and social system free from outside interference, subversion, coercion or constraint of any kind. It expresses deep concern over the continuing flight of Afghan people to neighbouring countries to seek refuge.

The resolution on Kampuchea calls for an immediate withdrawal of all foreign forces from Kampuchea. It reaffirms the need for a political solution based on self-determination of the Kampuchean people and on the respect for all other human rights.

It urges all concerned "to take steps to ensure, following the withdrawal of foreign forces from Kampuchea, that the Kampuchean people, without foreign interference, in an atmosphere of freedom and under United Nations supervision, choose their own representatives to a constitutional assembly."

UN SEMINAR ON WORKERS TRAINING CONCLUDES

OW091947 Beijing XINHUA in English 1909 GMT 9 Sep 82

[Text] Shanghai, September 9 (XINHUA) -- A two-week seminar on youth workers' training co-sponsored by the U.N. Economic and Social Commission for Asia and the Pacific (ESCAP) and the All-China Youth Federation closed here today.

Addressing the closing ceremony, Fan Hongxi, vice-president of the Shanghai Youth Federation, said that the 25 participants from 12 Asian and the Pacific countries had exchanged experiences in training youth workers, which would help China improve its youth work.

ESCAP consultant C.I. Itty told the closing ceremony that the seminar had realized its main objective which was to seek the most effective ways of training youth workers and youth leaders. Itty said the participants had been impressed by the significant role played by the Chinese youth in the country's development.

Speaking on behalf of all participants to the seminar, Charles Semwakesa from Papua New Guinea said they had learned through the seminar many new ideas regarding the curriculums and methodology in youth training. He said they would bring the new ideas back to their countries to improve youth work there.

After the seminar opened in Beijing August 27, participants visited Hangzhou, Changzhou, Suzhou and Shanghai. They discussed youth workers' training, employment rural youth activities, juvenile delinquency, and the role of youth in family planning with Chinese youth workers in factories, a rural people's commune and schools.

The Shanghai Municipal People's Government held a banquet this evening in honor of the seminar participants. Deputy Mayor Yang Kai of Shanghai, Larry C.Y. Cheah, youth section director of the ESCAP Social Development Department, and Mongolian participant Dagviin Batmoukh proposed toasts at the banquet.

FOREIGN SEISMOLOGISTS ATTEND EARTHQUAKE CONFAB

[Text] Beijing, September 8 (XINHUA) -- An international symposium on continental seismicity and earthquake prediction opened here this morning. The symposium is the first of its kind in China, where continental earthquakes occur quite frequently. Among the world's earthquakes, 15 percent are continental ones and 85 percent, oceanic. However, losses caused by continental earthquakes account for more than 85 percent of the world's total earthquake losses.

Participating in the symposium are 108 seismologists. They come from 26 countries and regions, Austrialia, Austria, Brazil, Britain, Canada, the Democratic People's Republic of Korea, France, the German Democratic Republic, Greece, India, Iraq, Italy, Japan, Mexico, New Zealand, the Netherlands, the Philippines, Romania, the Soviet Union, Thailand, Turkey, the United States, Yugoslavia, China and the region of Hong Kong.

The symposium is convened by the Chinese Society of Seismology and supported by UNESCO (U.N. Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization), UNDRO (U.N. Disaster Relief office, IASPEI (International Association of Seismology and Physics of the Earth's Interior) and U.N. Environment Program. Gu Gongxu, president of the Chinese Society of Seismology, delivered a welcoming speech at the opening ceremony.

Addressing the opening ceremony, Professor Ma Xingyuan, vice-president of the council of the Chinese Society of Seismology and deputy director of the state Seismological Bureau, said that the symposium would provide a good opportunity to the Chinese and foreign seismologists and geophysicists to exchange views and experiences, which will promote the development of seismological science and greatly reduce the losses caused by earthquakes.

Ma Xingyuan said that this symposium will for the first time focus on continental seismicity and earthquake prediction and seismic hazard assessment and methods for earthquake prediction will also be studied and discussed. He said that the Chinese and foreign scientists will read 75 papers at the symposium, mainly covering continental seismicity, continental seismotectonics, precursors of continental earthquake, fundamental studies related to earthquake prediction and seismic hazard assessment in continental areas.

Representatives from UNESCO and UNDRO also spoke at the opening ceremony, wishing the symposium a success. A small exhibition at the symposium displays books on several major earthquakes in China, recent scientific research results related to seismology and earthquake prediction and data including a seismotectonic map of China, catalogs and albums on quakes. Also on display are 23 pieces of seismic instruments and equipment developed recently by Chinese scientists.

During the symposium, the participants will visit the earthquake sites of Tangshan in Hebei Province, Haicheng in Liaoning Province, Tonghai in Yunnan Province, and Diexi in Sichuan Province, which were all sites of strong shocks. The first three occurred in the 1970's while the Diexi quake was in the 1930's. The symposium will last 12 days.

BAN YUE TAN ON U.S. DIPLOMACY CONTRADICTIONS

HK090753 Beijing BAN YUE TAN in Chinese No 16, 25 Aug 82 pp 56-58

[Article by Dai Zenghi [2071 1073 5030]: "The Contradiction-Ridden U.S. Diplomacy"]

[Text] After the Reagan administration had been in power for nearly 1 and 1/2 years, Secretary of State Haig suddenly resigned, greatly shocking the United States and the world. This showed that the serious differences over foreign policy and the power struggle inside the Reagan administration had become more acute and that U.S. foreign policy was bogged down. According to U.S. public opinion, the new secretary of state, Mr Shultz, is now facing more challenges and problems than any of his predecessors since World War II. The guiding principles of U.S. foreign affairs have never been in such confusion, with U.S. foreign policy full of contraditions.

1. In relations with the Soviet Union, on the one hand, the U.S. Government wants to take a tough stand; on the other hand, it cannot but hold negotiations with the Soviet Union.

Scrambling for world hegemony with the Soviet Union was the focus of the Reagan administration's foreign policy when [illegible]me to power. In its early days, this administration emphasized that its strategy ag[illegible]t the Soviet Union was to first build up its military power, then hold talks with the Soviet Union. It did not plan to resume talks on arms control before regaining its arms superiority. At the same time, it directly linked improvement in U.S.-Soviet relations and the holding of a U.S.-Soviet summit and negotiations on nuclear arms control to whether the Soviet Union exercised restraint in international affairs. It called this the "principle of linkage." However, last fall, after the Soviet Union did not restrain its world expansionist activities, the U.S. Government, under pressure from various quarters, could not but begin negotiations with the Soviet Union on controlling medium-range nuclear weapons in Europe. Last spring, U.S. strategy toward the Soviet Union changed remarkably. In a speech on 9 May, Reagan formally suggested opening talks on reducing strategic nuclear weapons with the Soviet Union and declared he was willing to attend a U.S.-Soviet summit.

The strategic arms talks opened on 29 June; and continuation of the talks on disarmament in central Europe shows that the door to dialogue between these two countries has been further opened. Now the U.S. Government does not mention its "principle of linkage" any more. More surprising, less than 6 months after it came to power, the Reagan administration lifted the embargo on grain exports to the Soviet Union imposed by the Carter administration as sanctions against the invasion of Afghanistan by the Soviet Union. Furthermore, grain exports to the Soviet Union have increased since then.

2. In relations with the Western allies, the U.S. Government wants, on the one hand, to strengthen its political unity; on the other, it is involved in economic conflicts with its allies. They have policy differences over dealing with the Soviet Union and over security.

The Reagan administration believes that good relations with its North Atlantic allies are the foundation and the mainstay of U.S. foreign policy and strategy. In early June when visiting West Europe, Reagan reaffirmed the U.S. commitment to European defense and expressed his determination to maintain U.S. armed forces and their strategic power in Europe and to deal with the Soviet Union jointly with the European allies. But in the last year or more, conflicts over economic interests between the United States and West Europe have become increasingly acute. High U.S. interest rates have aggravated the economic difficulties of West Europe and aroused cries of discontent. The U.S. Government recently imposed a ban on supplying over $10 billion worth of U.S.-licensed equipment from European companies for the building of the Soviet gas pipeline. This has further aroused strong discontent in France, Britain, West Germany and Italy. They condemned the United States for disregarding the trade interests of West Europe while the United States lifted its grain embargo on the Soviet Union. At the same time, the West European allies, based on their own security interests, though willing to stand "firm" with the United States in dealing with the Soviet Union, refuse to be "tough" as the United States would like. They worry that they will become victim of a U.S.-Soviet confrontation if tension rises in Europe.

3. In its China policy, the U.S. Government has declared it wants Sino-U.S. relations to develop, but then it set obstacles in the way of progress.

Many officials in the Reagan administration have repeatedly said that the development of good relations between the two peoples and the two countries in various fields is not only in the interests of China and the United States; it is also in the interest of peace and stability in the Asian-Pacific region and elsewhere in the world. They have said they are willing to make work jointly with China to overcome differences of opinion and to strengthen the Sino-U.S. ties. At the same time, however, some people in the U.S. Government treat Taiwan as an American "unsinkable aircraft carrier" in the Far East. They maintain that U.S.-Taiwan relations should be strengthened. They create obstacles to solving the problem of U.S. arms sales to Taiwan and interfere in the internal affairs of China.

4. In its relations with Latin America, the U.S. Government wants to stop Soviet and Cuban expansion in this area and protect its "backyard"; but it then irritated Latin America by taking a pro-British stance in the dispute between Britain and Argentina.

In order to maintain U.S. economic interests and political influence in this "backyard," as soon as it came to power the Reagan administration took a series of measures to stop infiltration and expansion by the Soviet Union and Cuba in many Latin American countries. Last spring, the U.S. Government also put forth a package of economic programs involving trade, aid and investment in the Caribbean area. Funds to assist the Central American and Caribbean countries amounted to $970 million.

However, before U.S. assistance became fact, the U.S. authorities showed they were anxious to maintain the interests of the West in the conflict between Britain and Argentina for sovereignty over the Malvinas Islands. The United States openly sided with Britain and imposed sanctions against Argentina. Many Latin American countries angrily condemned this perfidy of the United States. Some of them called off the scheduled military exercises to be jointly conducted with the United States; others demanded that OAS headquarters be moved from Washington. U.S. officials complained that it had become very difficult to restore the good relations with many of the Latin American countries; moreover, it has become more difficult to stop the influence of the Soviet Union and Cuba in Latin America.

5. In the Middle East, the United States wants to win over the Arab countries but it continues to conspire with Israel in its aggression and expansion.

In order to maintain its oil interests in the Middle East and its strategic interests, the Reagan administration has been trying to win over the Arab countries and deal with Soviet expansion in this area. But its actions are contradictory -- it consistently connives with Israel and disregards the national rights of the Arab and Palestinian peoples. Curing the recent aggression by Israel against Lebanon, the United States vetoed a Security Council resolution calling for a cease-fire and a military withdrawal by Israel. It refused to take sanctions against Israel and continued to deliver arms to it. These U.S. actions naturally aroused strong condemnation from the Arab countries and the Third World.

The Reagan administration has for many reasons fallen into a new wretched plight in its foreign affairs. This shows that the U.S. position of strength is declining. Its long-standing economic recession is not easy to reverse, and it feels its ability to realize its ambitious political objectives falling short. Finding it difficult to restrain Soviet expansion by merely relying on its own strength, the U.S. Government wants the support of its allies, but it lacks effective measures to narrow the differences between them. Due to its nature as a superpower, it also lacks understanding of the complicated situation in the Third World. The foreign policy of the Reagan administration is divorced from objective reality. It attempts to restore the previous U.S. dominant position and requires others to follow its will. This will inevitably lead to failure everywhere. Various interest groups inside the United States are competing and exerting pressure on the ruler in the White House. All these factors have made it very difficult for the ruling group from California to change the situation in U.S. foreign affairs.

ROLLBACK OF CHILD LABOR REGULATIONS CRITICIZED

HK030704 Beijing ZHONGGUO QINGNIAN BAO in Chinese 28 Aug 82 p 3

[Article by Ai Bixi [5337 3880 3305]: "Dickens and U.S. Labor Department"]

[Text] "The U.S. Labor Department should appoint Dickens as its adviser." This is a suggestion put forth by a U.S. newspaper not long ago.

Dickens was a famous 19th century British writer. Why is it that at present some people have suggested that he should be an adviser to the U.S. Labor Department?

The U.S. Labor Department made public a decision that restrictions will be eased on employing children from 14 to 15 years old. U.S. public opinion universally holds that this decision will actually openly revive the child labor system in the United States. However, Dickens mercilessly castigated the child labor system during his lifetime.

The child labor system once prevailed in the United States in the past. In 1938, when the struggle waged by America workers was in an upsurge, President Roosevelt promulgated the "Fair Labor Standards Act" stipulating that only people above 16 years old could be employed by enterprises as full-time workers and that children from 10 to 15 years old could be employed in their spare time. Types and hours of work were also stipulated.

This bill, of course, has not completely prevented children from being exploited in the United States. In some sweat shops and on many farms, children are still often regarded as cheap labor. However, on the whole, the child labor system is no longer legal in the United States.

But at present, the U.S. Labor Department suddenly wants to revise the bill on child labor which was passed more than 40 years ago. This bill stipulates that if schoolchildren from 14 to 15 years old are employed, they cannot work more than 3 hours a day and must stop work before 1900. But according to the Labor Department's new decision, work hours per day can be extended to 4 hours and time to stop work is put off until 2100. Work hours per week can also be extended from 18 to 24 hours. The Labor Department has also decided to ease restrictions forbidding children to do heavy or dangerous work.

The U.S. Labor Department explained that the aim of this decision is to give children more chances to earn some pocket money through labor. U.S. public opinion has pointed out that this position of "showing concern for children" is extremely hypocritical. At present, 1 out of every 10 American workers is unemployed. Unemployment is even worse among youths 16-21 years old. One out of every four persons cannot get a job. If it is really so kind, why doesn't the Labor Department first help those youths who are over 16 years old?

What then is the U.S. Labor Department's intention in revising the regulations concerning child laborers? The labor unions have pointed out that this is to build up an enormous contingent of cheap child laborers in order to force down wages for workers. There is one article in the Labor Department's decision which says: In employing students to work, enterprises are not restricted by the lower wage limit. It was only through protracted struggle that the American workers succeeded in compelling the government to fix a lower wage limit. The capitalists have never found this stipulation agreeable. Will adult workers whose wages must be fixed above the lower wage limit be replaced by children whose wages may be fixed below the lower wage limit, thus making the aforesaid stipulation ineffective?

According to reports by U.S. newspapers, easing restrictions on employment of child laborers has long been the demand of restaurants, hotels, retail shops and some other enterprises. It is precisely because of their demand that the Labor Department has made the new decision. Therefore, the suggestion made by the U.S. newspaper is obviously useless. What effect will Dickens' works have on a U.S. Government that serves the interests of large enterprises?

DPRK Ambassador's Reception

[Text] Beijing, September 9 (XINHUA) -- Chon Myong-su, ambassador of the Democratic People's Republic of Korea to China, gave a reception at the embassy here this afternoon to mark the 34th anniversary of the founding of the Democratic People's Republic of Korea.

Wan Li, member of the Secretariat of the Central Committee of the Communist Party of China and vice-premier of the State Council; Yang Shangkun, vice-chairman of the Standing Committee of the National People's Congress; Huang Hua, state councillor and minister of foreign affairs; and Qiao Shi, head of the International Liaison Department of the C.P.C. Central Committee; attended the reception.

In his toast, the Korean ambassador said under the leadership of President Kim Il-song, "the Korean people have put an end to the backwardness of their country and turned it into a socialist country with a solid national economy, prosperous national culture and powerful national defense in the 34 years since the founding of the D.P.R.K."

He said that at present, the Korean people are setting off a new upsurge in every sphere of the socialist construction in accordance with the program put forward by President Kim Il-song at the Sixth Congress of the Korean Workers Party. He said that the Korean people are also working for the realization of the independence and peaceful reunification of their fatherland.

The ambassador extended his warm congratulations to the convening of the 12th National Congress of the Chinese Communist Party. He said that this congress is a historic event that inspires the Chinese Communist Party members and the Chinese people to strive for new achievements.

In his toast, Chinese Minister of Foreign Affairs Huang Hua paid tribute to the "brilliant achievements scored by the Korean people in the past 34 years in all fields of socialist construction under the leadership of the Korean Workers Party and President Kim Il-song." He wished the fraternal Korean people greater successes.

Huang Hua reiterated that "the Chinese people will as always support the just struggle of the Korean people for independence and the peaceful reunification of their fatherland and resolutely oppose the plot of creating two Koreas by the United States and the Chon Tu-hwan clique.

"U.S. troops should be withdrawn from South Korea and interference in the internal affairs of Korea should be stopped. The reunification of Korea should be solved by the Korean people themselves in accordance with the proposal put forward by President Kim Il-song on the establishment of a Democratic Confederate Republic of Koryo without any interference from outside.

"We firmly believe that the cause of the Korean people for the reunification of their fatherland will win final victory," he said.

Referring to the good relations existing between the two parties and the two countries, Huang Hua said in recent years, the meetings and exchanges of views in various ways between leaders of the two nations have brought the traditional relations to a new stage. He said he hoped that such friendly relations would continue to develop with each passing day.

Among the guests were leaders from the headquarters of the General Staff and the General Political Department of the Chinese Peoples Liberation Army, other government departments, the Beijing Municipal People's Government, and the Chinese People's Association for Friendship With Foreign Countries. Diplomatic envoys of various countries to China were also present.

Commentator's Article

[Text] Beijing, September 9 (XINHUA -- The Chinese people appreciate the efforts made by Japanese Prime Minister Zenko Suzuki to solve the textbook question and urges the Japanese Government to be true in word and resolute in deed, notes an article by the PEOPLE'S DAILY commentator on September 10. The article, entitled "The Japanese Government is Expected To Be True in Word and Resolute in Deed," reads as follows:

The Japanese Government has proposed comparatively concrete measures to correct the mistakes committed by the Japanese Education Ministry for tampering with Japan's history of aggression in the course of screening the textbooks. Although there are still some ambiguous, unsatisfactory points in the measures, it is a step forward as compared with the explanations previously made by the Japanese Government. In evaluating the measures, the Chinese people express their appreciation of the efforts made by Japanese Prime Minister Zenko Suzuki and other people concerned. The textbook question has till now been brought to a temporary close.

It has taken over two months to reach such an initial settlement after the textbook issue was raised. This is utterly because certain persons within the Japanese Government failed to see the seriousness of the issue.

We have always held that whether to admit the history of aggression against China by the Japanese militarists is a principled issue of major importance in the relations between China and Japan. The reason the Chinese people and Government raise the issue of textbooks is only to maintain the friendly cooperation of the two countries and the friendship between the two peoples.

As to Japan's school textbook authorization system, it is Japan's internal affair in which China does not intend to interfere.

However, the Japanese Education Ministry has tampered with such historical facts as Japan's aggression against China and the Nanjing massacre through its textbook screening in an attempt to glorify militarism. This has hurt the national feelings of the Chinese people and has also deviated from the basic principles expressed by the Japanese Government in the China-Japan joint statement and the China-Japan peace and friendship treaty. The Japanese Government is well aware of Japan's responsibility for bringing enormous damage in the past to the Chinese people through war, and deeply reproaches itself. The issue has thus become one involving international relations, and the Chinese people cannot remain indifferent to it. The Chinese people cannot allow the powerful friendship built by the two peoples through long years of hardship to be damaged by a handful of elements hostile to the Sino-Japanese friendship.

The Chinese people have always held that in the history of friendly contacts between the two countries over the past 2,000 years, the unhappy history is but a short span which was caused solely by the Japanese militarists. Like the Chinese people, the Japanese people are also victims of Japanese militarism. Only if the Japanese people do not forget such a period of history and always take it as a lesson to educate the younger generation with the real historical facts can they prevent the revival of Japanese militarism which would once again cause damage to the Japanese people and other neighboring Asian countries. This will be conducive to the maintenance of the traditional friendship between the two peoples and to the development of friendly cooperative relations of peace and friendship, equality and mutual benefit and long-term stability between the two countries.

To the contrary, the Japanese Education Ministry has distorted the historical facts previously contained in the textbooks. Its aim is to obliterate from the memory of Japanese younger generations the history of Japan's aggression against China and other Asian and Pacific countries so as to revive militarism in Japan. Such vicious actions to poison younger generations in Japan and to undermine Sino-Japanese friendship cannot but only greatly enrage the Chinese people to such a point that they demand the Japanese Government correct as soon as possible the mistakes committed by the Japanese Education Ministry as regards textbooks. We are justified to do so because it is in the fundamental interests of both the Chinese and Japanese peoples and it is also justified for maintaining peace in Asia and the world. It is absolutely untenable for some Japanese politicians to attack China as "intervening in Japan's internal affairs" and "pressing too harshly."

Now, with the coordination of the concerned organizations, the Japanese Government has proposed concrete measures to solve the problem. This is a proof of the Japanese Government's intention to maintain and promote friendly cooperation between China and Japan. However, it is not enough only to propose measures, for what is more significant lies in its future actions. As an old Chinese saying put it: "Promises must be kept and action must be resolute," so we hope the Japanese Government will not stop short but will set to implementing the concrete measures so as to win faith of the peoples of China, Japan and other Asian and Pacific countries. Whether Japan will implement these measures is a matter of fundamental importance for Japan to gain faith from the peoples in the Asian and Pacific region in the future.

One can reason from the textbook issue that amid the mainstream of the torrential Sino-Japanese friendship there exists an adverse undercurrent which will obstruct the development of the friendly relations between the two countries whenever conditions are ripe.

The Chinese and Japanese peoples cannot but seriously observe this undercurrent, be highly on guard and be always ready to expose and attack it. This question also indicates that China and Japan should be candid and forthright friends who will not be vague on matters detrimental to the friendship between the two countries and world peace, and will not conceal one's fault for fear of criticism. Only by doing so can the friendship between the two countries develop healthily despite various obstructions.

This year marks the 10th anniversary of the normalization of the Sino-Japanese relations. Upon the invitation of Chinese Premier Zhao Ziyang, Japanese Prime Minister Zenko Suzuki will pay a friendly visit to China. We believe that having been washed by the storm of the textbook issue, the friendship between the Chinese and Japanese peoples will be more genuine and the two peoples will understand each other better. We are looking forward to a successful visit by Prime Minister Zenko Suzuki and the further development of the friendly relations and cooperation between the two countries.

Suzuki Pledges Solution

[Text] Tokyo, September 9 (XINHUA) -- Japanese Prime Minister Zenko Suzuki this afternoon pledged that his government would sincerely seek a solution to the controversial textbook issue. Speaking at a meeting held to consider domestic and foreign developments, Suzuki said that on that issue the government has expressed the intention of "listening to criticisms from other countries and sincerely seeking a solution". He said that his government is making "an abundant explanation of Japan's intention" to China and expecting China's understanding.

Suzuki said the Japanese Government should not only consider the issue of textbooks but the "strengthening, improvement and development of the friendly and cooperative ties" with other Asian countries. Suzuki stressed that both he and Premier Zhao Ziyang confirmed they would continue a long-term and stable exchange between China and Japan during Zhao's recent visit to Japan.

PRC-JAPAN NORMALIZATION CELEBRATED IN TOKYO

OW091843 Beijing XINHUA in English 1831 GMT 9 Sep 82

[Text] Tokyo, September 9 (XINHUA) -- About 300 people of various circles celebrated the 10th anniversary of the normalization of Sino-Japanese relations at the Hotel New Otani here this evening. The celebration was sponsored by "The National Assembly for the Celebration of the 10th Anniversary of the Normalization of Sino-Japanese Relations" comprising 23 well-known Japanese figures including Foreign Ministry advisor Shinsaku Hogen and representative of the Japan-China Exchange Forum Chikuzan Otani. Wen Chi and Cai Zimin, counselors of the Chinese Embassy here, attended the celebration.

Famous Japanese singers and overseas Chinese in Japan presented well-known songs of both countries.

Chikuzan Otani spoke on behalf of the sponsors. He reviewed the arduous efforts made by the Japanese and Chinese people in promoting friendship between the two countries. Since the normalization of relations between the two countries, friendly contacts and cultural exchanges have made unprecedented development, he said. But at the same time, an adverse current of denying and obscuring Japan's past aggression has also emerged. This was caused by a handful of people whose actions ran counter to the trend of history. Japan-China friendship could be further enhanced only if self-examination is made in earnest over Japan's past aggression, he added.

Susumu Kobayashi, vice-chairman of the Dietmen's League for Japan-China Friendship, also reviewed the efforts of Japanese political figures in bringing about the normalization of the two countries' relations. He said if the Japanese Government had explicitly admitted and reproached itself for its past aggression at the time of the normalization of relations, the textbook issue would not have occurred.

Toshio Kurihara, director general of the Japan-China Friendship Association, said a solution of the textbook issue has been made by the two governments. "But we must not be content with this. We must tell our future generations to maintain this friendship forever," he said. The celebration was wound up with a reception.

ZHAO ZIYANG MEETS JAPANESE FILM DELEGATION

[Text] Beijing, September 4 (XINHUA) -- Zhao Ziyang, premier of the State Council, met at Zhongnanhai this afternoon with the Japanese film delegation which attended yesterday's opening of the Sino-Japanese coproduction "The Game Yet To Finish". Zhao Ziyang met with the delegation leader Yasuyoshi Tokuma and honorary adviser to the delegation Tokuma Utsunomiya.

The premier praised the film for its instructive significance. He said that after its public showing, the film would be given a universal welcome by both the Chinese and Japanese people. "This film is very good, because it truly reflects the profound friendship between our two peoples and depicts their destruction and suffering by the Japanese militarists invasion of China," he said.

"There have been close contacts and a profound friendship between our peoples since early days. We still strongly hope for friendship from generation to generation," he said. "But," he said, "there was an unhappy period in the history of relations between the two countries. As the Chinese saying goes past experience, if not forgotten, is a guide for the future. We should not forget this period of history, and should not distort it. We must remember this lesson forever, and educate our younger generations that this period of history should never be repeated.

"This is an important guarantee of friendship between the two peoples from generation to generation," he said. "I visited Japan not long ago when we both agreed to develop a long-term and stable friendship and cooperation. This conforms to the fundamental interests and aspirations of our peoples, and is welcomed by them," he said.

Referring to the recent issue of Japanese textbooks, Tokuma Utsunomiya said: "The Japanese Ministry of Education has revised the Japanese textbooks, covering up the facts of the Japanese invasion of China. For this issue, the Japanese Government should assume responsibility. The Japanese people's real opinion is that Japan was wrong in invading China in the past."

Zhao Ziyang said "the distortion of history in the textbooks and concealment of the Japanese invasion of China cannot but arouse the strong opposition of the Chinese people. "The Chinese side feels this problem should not be put off any longer. The Japanese Government must take positive action for an early satisfactory settlement of the problem, thus benefitting the continuous development of the relations between our countries," he said.

Present were Ding Qiao, vice-minister of culture, Chen Huangmei, adviser to the Ministry of Culture, and Yasue Katori, Japanese ambassador to China, and the Chinese film workers who shot the film.

ARMS BUILDUP SEEN CAUSING SRV ECONOMIC PROBLEMS

HK081254 Beijing RENMIN RIBAO in Chinese 1 Sep 82 p 6

[Article by Chen Xiong [7115 7106]: "An Analysis of Vietnam's Economic Difficulties"]

[Text] Vietnam's economic difficulties have been known to all for a long time. Although the Vietnamese authorities have put up a struggle this year, the economic situation remains bleak and many economic indexes have actually worsened. According to AFP, Vietnam's hope of rebuilding its economy has been "quickly shattered."

Vietnam originally had a poor economic foundation. Since 1979 the Vietnamese economy has been sinking deeper and deeper into a whirlpool of difficulties. During the Fifth National Congress of the Vietnamese Communist Party held in March this year, Le Duan publicly acknowledged that the Vietnamese economic front "is faced with many serious problems." He also claimed to adopt measures to solve the problems as quickly as possible. However, with the passing of more than 6 months, old problems have not yet been solved, new problems have emerged and the intensification of economic difficulties has not slowed.

First, there has been a continued increase in financial deficits as well as the development of runaway inflation. Vietnam has accumulated huge financial deficits over the past few years. According to a report, Vietnam's financial deficits from the postwar period to last year reached 13.8 billion dong. It is expected that Vietnam's total financial deficits this year will exceed 15 billion dong. In order to compensate for such huge financial deficits, the Vietnamese authorities have recklessly issued banknotes, thus aggravating the country's inflation problems. The Vietnamese dong was already devalued by 300 percent in July last year; it has been further devalued this year. According to a recent AFP report, Vietnam's average wage, including allowances, is about 200 dong. Last year the Vietnamese authorities changed the official exchange rate between the U.S. dollar and the Vietnamese dong from 1:2.8 to 1:9. They now have changed the official rate to 1:9.5. The black-market rate between the U.S. dollar and the Vietnamese dong is 1:120.

Second, the supply of goods and materials has been short and prices have been continuously skyrocketing. Vietnamese authorities said that the country "reaped a great bumper harvest" of rice during the first half of this year. The fact is that in addition to supplying grain to the army and storing grain for wars, grain rations for staff, workers and residents are still in great demand. A monthly grain ration for each staff member or worker in factories, mines and enterprises and for every resident of big cities is still fixed at 14 kilograms of rice. Staff members and workers in cities directly under the jurisdiction of provincial governments who live in rural areas and staff members and workers of county-level units are still not given any grain rations. At the same time, prices have increased 100 percent. According to some Westerners' estimates, from April last year to January this year, food prices have increased by about 327 percent. Pork, eggs, vegetables and other foodstuffs are hard to find in state-run shops. The price for 1 kilogram of pork in the free markets has increased to 100 dong. The price for 1 kilogram of chicken has increased from 60 dong to 100 dong and the price of an egg has increased from 1.5 dong to 4 dong. The price of tea has increased by 1,000 percent when compared with prices from last year. The consumer goods for daily use are very expensive in Vietnam: a shirt of very poor quality costs 190 dong; and a pullover which is made of artificial wool costs 300 dong, which is equivalent to 1 and 1/2 months' wages of an ordinary staff member or worker.

Third, there has been a serious imbalance in the national economy and production plans have repeatedly failed.

The very limited supply of commodity grain and raw materials provided by agriculture production has directly produced adverse effects on light industrial production. The country's light industrial production plans for the first half of this year, including plans for the production of cloth, sugar, paper and ciagrettes, have not been fulfilled. Due to raw material shortages, many factories have been operating under capacity and some factories were forced to close down and liquidate. The country's heavy capital construction, communications and transportation industries have also been thrown into chaos. Work in many heavy enterprises has been halted over a long period of time because of a lack of raw materials, spare parts, fittings and energy. Machinery, cement, phosphate fertilizer, electric power and transportation departments have all failed to fulfill their production plans for the first half of this year. Although Vietnam is very short of funds, raw materials, technology and equipment, it not only has failed to decrease the number of capital construction projects but has actually continued to begin more and more capital construction projects.

Vietnam's Nhan Dan disclosed: The total number of above-average projects this year is 599, an increase of 79 when compared with last year. They include many duplicate projects, which have been blindly and indiscriminately carried out. As a result, projects that should be promoted cannot be promoted and projects that should be withdrawn cannot be withdrawn. Moreover, the parties concerned vied with one another for funds, equipment and raw materials, and thus created holdups and waste in the work through poor organization, and projects were thrown into confusion, thus causing an imbalance in many aspects of the national economy.

Fourth, the country is saddled with heavy foreign debts and its foreign exchange reserve has been depleted. It is reported that Vietnam's total foreign debts have reached 3.5 billion dollars, excluding the sum of money it must repay for Soviet military aid. Due to its limited export capacity, Vietnam has continuously accumulated international payments deficits and its foreign exchange reserve has dropped drastically. According to a report, Vietnam's total foreign exchange income from exports last year reached 369 million dollars, and 284 million dollars were used for paying debts. The country's foreign exchange reserve fell to zero in February this year. Vietnam failed several times last year to repay on time loans from Japan and some Western countries. This year Hanoi has pleaded with loan-granting countries under the "Paris club" to extend repayment dates. Vietnamese authorities said at the beginning of this year that Vietnam's exports to the Soviet Union and other member states of the Council for Economic Mutual Assistance will be increased by 45 percent this year. However, the prices of imported oil and other imported commodities from the Soviet Union and other member states have increased by 200-300 percent. Vietnam's foreign exchange income from such imports is unknown. At the same time, Vietnam has exported large numbers of agricultural, forestry, sideline and fishery products. This practice of slicing off one's own flesh to remedy one's own skin ulcer has further aggravated the tight domestic market, caused strong resentment among people of all social strata and greatly sharpened the existing serious social contradictions and social unrest.

In the face of the incurable economy, Vietnamese authorities cannot find any panacea to bring the economy out of danger. Their current measures are just stopgap measures which cannot effect a permanent cure. Since this year, Vietnamese authorities have emphasized "relaxing policy restrictions," thus producing some results. However, the country's runaway free market economy has initiated disastrous lashes on the state sectors of the economy. Through the influence of officials, batches of commodities under the state monopoly system for purchase and marketing have been given to speculators and profiteers, who are reselling them at a profit.

The free market has "every" expensive commodity that "one expects to find" but the state-owned shops' shelves are empty. Factories, mines and enterprises, including local factories and enterprises, have carried out the independent contract system, thus producing increasingly clear negative effects on the central planned economy. Many departments and units have gone beyond their original plans to blindly develop some products for private gain, thus weakening the implementation of central plans and aggravating the already chaotic economic situation. At the same time, Vietnamese authorities have put their stakes on borrowing money from foreign countries and have attempted to use foreign funds to stimulate the economy which is not running well. Vietnamese authorities have repeatedly asked the Soviet Union to increase its economic aid and offer more funds, technology and equipment to Vietnam. However, according to a report from Hanoi, because the Soviet Union is itself facing economic difficulties, it has not satisfied Vietnam's huge needs. As a result, Vietnam was forced to defer formulating its third 5-year plan (1981-85) and even "has to abandon midway this construction plan which has already started." Following the Fifth National Congress of the Vietnamese Communist Party, Hanoi sent its foreign minister to Western Europe to beg for loans. However, as this foreign minister did not have much hard currency in his basket, he came back disappointed.

The basic reason for the collapse of the Vietnamese economy is that the Vietnamese ruling group has done its utmost to carry out a policy of arms expansion and expansionism. It has devoted half of the country's financial budget to military expenditures and to supporting 1.2 million soldiers. It has also launched a war of aggression against Kampuchea on a large scale. All this is draining the country of its limited financial and material resources and manpower. How can these practices fail to bring the country's national economy into a blind alley?

AFGHAN GUERRILLAS SAID TO ATTACK SOVIET CONVOY

[Text] Islamabad, September 9 (XINHUA) -- Afghan freedom fighters have destroyed eleven Soviet tanks and killed about 50 Soviet troops in attacks on a convoy moving from Kabul to Paktia Province, a spokesman of the guerrillas told XINHUA in Peshawar today.

The convoy, consisted of 95 tanks and other military vehicles, came under attack on September 3 at Mohmad Agha, Surchab, Beni Sharaughan and Kohlanghar in Logar Province, 15 to 62 kilometers from the Afghan capital.

According to another report of the AGENCY AFGHAN PRESS today, the freedom fighters have once again intensified their activities around Kabul in the last week of August. They killed five officials of Afghanistan's secret police "Khad" on August 22 on the Qarah Bagh Highway about 40 kilometers from Kabul. The guerrillas also ambushed the 10th engineering battalion and destroyed all its equipment. The same group of guerrillas set on fire a petrol and ammunition depot in Hussainkot area with rockets.

On August 25, the freedom fighters seized three trailers loaded with 520 bags of wheat and 360 bags of sugar after a short encounter near Qarah Bagh area.

RENMIN RIBAO DISCUSSES PIPELINE 'QUARREL'

HK091330 Beijing RENMIN RIBAO in Chinese 7 Sep 82 p 7

[Article by Ma Weimin [7456 3634 3046]: "Predicament in a Crack"]

[Text] There is a very heated quarrel going on between the United States and Western Europe on the sale of natural gas pipeline equipment to the Soviet Union. Each party sticks to its own version or argument. The United States said that since these companies have violated the U.S. ban, sanctions must be applied against them. The West European countries said, however, that U.S. legal measures, which can only be applied in U.S. territory, should not be indiscriminately applied in foreign countries, for this constitutes a practice of extra-territoriality and is unacceptable. France has also indicated that, according to a 1959 French law, companies which fail to implement contracts may be commandeered. According to a 1980 law, Britain has the right to order the companies within its territories to honor contracts. Since neither party is willing to give ground, the companies concerned, being sandwiched between the two, are in an extremely awkward predicament.

For example, take Dresser France, the first company to defy the U.S. ban. According to the contract already signed, it should supply the Soviet Union with 21 compressors. But it is a subsidiary of America's Dresser Industries, Inc., which owns 100 percent of its shares. Normally, it must obey its parent company and abide by the decision of the Reagan administration. Therefore, 4 days after the United States imposed the ban, it stopped the production of the compressors. The difficult problem is that it is located after all on French soil, and therefore, when the French Government instructed it to implement the contract and the French industry minister sent a special dispatch on this matter, it was caught in a dilemma. Failure to deliver the goods would subject it to punishments by France; delivering the goods would subject it to sanctions by the United States. When the French Government decided to commandeer it 1 day before the delivery date, it could do nothing but honor the order.

At present, in France and other West European countries, the companies which are in an awkward predicament are not limited to this company alone. Alsthom Atlantique is one example. In the sales of natural gas pipeline equipment to the Soviet Union, this company has an order for 40 turbine rotors worth 400 million French francs. The reconstruction of the factory has just been started for producing the rotors under a manufacturing agreement with the United States, and France will not supply the goods until October next year. But its present uneasiness is no less than other factories confronted with similar fates. This is because the parent electric company to which it is subordinate has just been "nationalized" by the French Government, and being a "state enterprise," it naturally has to carry out the government order. However, in its contract for technological transfer, this company has explicitly assumed its responsibility to the U.S. General Electric Co: In selling the relevant equipment to the Soviet Union and other countries, it must get the approval of the U.S. administration authorities; otherwise the company will be subjected to a fine and its leaders will also be prosecuted. U.S. Ambassador to France Evan G. Galbraith holds that the company is unlikely to disregard the U.S. ban because disobedience will constitute a "nightmare." Galbraith's remark has "enraged" France and "impelled Paris to more speedily" make a decision to implement the contract.

The complexity of the matter also lies in the fact that the company plans to sell high-speed trains to the United States and undertake the construction of underground railways in a few U.S. cities. Its parent company was one of France's earliest investors in the United States and it currently has as many as 20 subsidiary firms in the United States. If it should defy the U.S. ban, it would not only be subjected to sanctions but would probably be "blacklisted" by the United States, and its ambitious plans in the United States may fizzle out. But if it should abide by the ban, it would lose a Soviet order worth 400 million French francs and this would also be prohibited by the French Government.

Since the United States announced the expansion of the sanctions, a few companies, in their anxiety, poured out their woes to the government on many occasions. A responsible person of Creusot-Loire unreservedly said: "We are in an intricate situation, not knowing what to do. The problem at issue is politics and not trade."

XINHUA REPORTS U.S. EASES FRENCH FIRM SANCTIONS

OW092122 Beijing XINHUA in English 1638 GMT 9 Sep 82

[Text] Washington, September 8 (XINHUA) -- The U.S. Commerce Department issued an order Tuesday night to reduce the sanctions on Dresser, a French company which has shipped natural gas compressors to the Soviet Union in defiance of a U.S. embargo.

In announcing the order, Commerce Department spokesman Jay Cooper said that now the U.S. Government bans only the shipment of oil- and gas-related equipment and technology to Dresser, while the sanctions imposed on another French firm remains in force.

Dresser, a French subsidiary of a U.S.-based firm, in ignoring a U.S. embargo on the Soviet Union, originally had sanctions which deprived it of any further supply from the United States of all products, technology and maintenance equipment.

Western news agencies view the latest U.S. move to reduce the sanctions as a fresh bid to seek a graceful way to end the rift with its European allies.

YUGOSLAV VICE ADMIRAL STRESSES DEFENSIVE ABILITY

OW090808 Beijing XINHUA in English 0752 GMT 9 Sep 82

[Text] Belgrade, September 8 (XINHUA) -- Yugoslav Vice-Admiral Tihomir Vilovic has stressed that independent countries should learn a lesson from recent Mid-East developments and know that their future depends on their resolve and capability to defend their sovereignty and territorial integrity.

A country lacking this resolve to resist "hot war" or "special war" pressures from either outside or inside is easy to fall prey to brute force, he declared.

In a press interview on Yugoslavias 40th Navy Day, the vice-admiral, who is now a regional commander, pointed out that Israel's example in Lebanon showed that an aggressive country could profit from the lack of firm resolve and international solidarity in support of a small country's right to safeguard its independence and free and peaceful development.

The developments in Latin America, South Africa and South, Southeast Asia showed that in face of contention between power blocs and arms race, small and underdeveloped countries were worrying about their own destinies.

[Text] Warsaw, September 7 (XINHUA) -- The Polish Government decided today to send a special group headed by Deputy Foreign Minister Jozef Wiejacz to Switzerland to help rescue Polish Embassy personnel in Bern held by terrorists as hostages, reported the Polish press agency, PAP.

U.S. MARINES READY TO PULL OUT OF LEBANON

[Text] Beijing, September 9 (XINHUA) -- U.S. President Ronald Reagan said yesterday that the U.S. Marines and other members of the multinational force that oversaw the Palestinian evacuation from west Beirut would begin to leave Lebanon tomorrow, according to AP.

"With the evacuation complete, and the (Lebanese) authorities asserting their control throughout Beirut, I am pleased to announce that the multinational force will commence its withdrawal from Beirut Friday, September 10, the day after tomorrow, and the United States Marines contingent should be among the first to leave," the President said.

Reagan made his announcement after meeting for about 30 minutes with Philip Habib, his special envoy to the Middle East. Earlier, the chief White House spokesman voiced the administration's concern about a renewed Israeli air attack in Lebanon.

Reagan also announced that the United States was dispatching a deputy assistant secretary of state to the Middle East to continue peace-keeping efforts there.

ISRAELI KNESSET REJECTS U.S. PEACE PLAN

OW092034 Beijing XINHUA in English 1510 GMT 9 Sep 82

[Text] Beirut, September 8 (XINHUA) -- The Israeli Knesset voted tonight to endorse the Cabinet rejection of U.S. President Reagan's new proposals on Middle East, radio Israel reports.

In a speech before the 120-member Parliament, Israeli Prime Minister Menahem Begin rejected the Reagan proposals point by point, saying it was a blueprint for a "redivision" of the land of Israel and of Jerusalem, for "handing over" the West Bank and Gaza Strip to Jordan.

He declared the proposals were "dead even upon birth" and the Israeli Cabinet "will never accept" it. The Knesset voted 50-36 to endorse Begin's statement, which directly opposed Reagan's call for an end to Jewish settlements on occupied Arab land.

Earlier, Israeli Foreign Minister Yitzhaq Shamir described Reagan's proposals as threatening to destroy the progress made in the five years of the Middle East peace talks. He said the plan for a Palestinian administration linked to Jordan not only betrays the Camp David accords, but "hurts Israel and its security and chances for peace with other Arab neighbors."

Defense Minister Ari'el Sharon, who directed the June 6 invasion of Lebanon, has said Israel intends to establish a 28-mile "security belt" in southern Lebanon. Reports say Israeli warplanes bombed a Syrian SAM-9 missile site in eastern Lebanon today.

Editorial on CPC Constitution

[Text] Beijing, 9 Sep (XINHUA) -- RENMIN RIBAO 10 September editorial: "Build the Party Into a Strong Core for Leading the Cause of Socialist Modernization;" the text follows:

The 12th CPC Congress has discussed and approved the new "constitution of the Communist Party of China." The new CPC constitution is a precious crystallization of the party's historical experience and collective wisdom. It is an important guarantee for building our party into a stronger organ in the new historical period. Just as many delegates have said: The new party constitution extensively absorbs the ideas of all comrades of the party, sums up both positive and negative experience of our party accumulated over the past years, in particular the negative experience of the "Cultural Revolution," and inherits and develops the strong points of the party constitution approved at the Seventh CPC Congress and the party constitution approved at the Eighth CPC Congress. The new party constitution is the best party constitution since the founding of our party.

Since the 3d Plenary Session of the 11th CPC Central Committee, more and more comrades have come to realize that the party constitution approved by the 11th CPC Congress had serious shortcomings. It failed to eliminate the influence of the errors of "left" deviation and for a long time could not meet the situation and needs of the new period. It had to be greatly and fundamentally revised. The general principle of the revision of the party constitution is to meet the characteristics and needs of socialist modernization in the new period, set stricter demands on party members, increase the fighting power of party organs and keep to and improve party leadership.

In the first place, the new party constitution has a general program with a relatively perfect content which succinctly summarizes the party's program. Lenin pointed out: "A program is of great significance in terms of a political party's unity and its consistent activities." In the new party constitution, the general program summarily and vividly makes a Marxist statement on the nature and guiding ideology of the party, the theory and practice of scientific socialism, the principal contradictions in China's society and the party's general task at the present stage, the basic requirements for strengthening party construction and how the party correctly plays the leading role in state affairs. Compared with the party constitution approved at the 11th CPC Congress, changes in the new party constitution are greatest in its general program. It unquestionably shows that our party has thoroughly broken with the so-called "theory of continuing the revolution under the dictatorship of the proletariat" and has built its program on the scientific foundation of Marxism-Leninism-Mao Zedong Thought. This is of decisive significance in terms of our party's healthy development.

One important characteristic of the new party constitution lies in its provisions on requirements of party members, party cadres and primary party organizations respectively which are stricter than those stipulated in any of the past party constitutions. The reason for this is that our party, quite unlike what is was before its seizure of political power of the whole country, has become the major party that leads in exercising political power thoughout the country. Not only this, it is also because our party is charged with the important responsibility of leading the drive for socialist modernization.

This makes it mandatory to improve the quality of our party members and cadres so that they will be able to shoulder their heavy historical burden. The requirements of party members set in the new party constitution are, in a nutshell, that they must serve the people heart and soul and fight throughout their lives for the realization of communism without hesitating to sacrifice all that they have. In the light of the new situation, it emphasises that a member of the Communist Party of China will always be a part of the ordinary laboring people and that no Communist Party member shall seek any personal profits and special privileges except for the individual benefits and work functions and powers that fall within what has been defined by the system and policies. The new party constitution guarantees the proper rights of party members. At the same time, it also stipulates eight duties that party members must fulfill. These include: Execute the party's decisions perseveringly, do any job and fulfill actively any task assigned them by the party; play an exemplary vanguard role in production and other work, study and social activities; absolutely never use public office for personal gain or to benefit oneself at the expense of the public; firmly oppose facionalism; be bold in backing good people and good deeds and fighting against bad people and bad deeds. The new party constitution has laid down even stricter requirements on party cadres. In addition to the call that they must play an exemplary role in fulfilling their duties as party members, leading party cadres at all levels should also meet six basic requirements. These include: Be able to adhere to the socialist road, fight against the hostile forces disrupting socialism and combat all erroneous tendencies inside and outside the party; persistently proceed from reality and properly carry out the line, principles and policies of the party; be fervently dedicated to the revolutionary cause, be imbued with a strong sense of political responsibility and be qualified in knowledge and ability for their leading posts; have a democratic work style and consciously accept criticism and supervision by the party and the masses; observe and uphold the rules and regulations of the party and the state and combat all acts of abusing power and seeking personal gain. The new party constitution is more detailed and thorough than the past ones in defining the tasks of the primary party organizations. The major tasks of the primary organizations are to educate and supervise party members and party cadres in truly fulfilling their duties as defined in the party constitution and to carry out the role they are expected to play. The new party constitution clearly stipulates that primary organizations should educate party members, cadres and all other functionaries and ensure that they strictly observe the law and administrative discipline and that none of them infringe upon the interests of the state, the collective and the masses.

All these provisions are there because there is no mistaking what they are aimed at. They prove that our party expects its members to be qualified members and its cadres qualified cadres and that it expects the party organizations to play an important role in this regard. Whether or not party members and party cadres are qualified has a bearing on whether or not the party has the fighting capability, enjoys prestige among the masses and can exercise correct leadership. It is of particular importance today to adhere to the criteria set for party members and the requirements set for party cadres. To be a qualified party member or a qualified cadre, one must meet the provisions in the party constitution. He must practice communism, have a firm communist ideal and belief, display the communist spirit of total dedication, possess communist morality and quality and be able to maintain communist purity under all circumstances. It is true that the new party constitution has laid down stricter requirements of party members and party cadres than any of the past party constitutions. However, as long as we are truly faithful to the cause of communism, it is completely necessary and completely possible for us to meet these requirements.

The new party constitution has made some relatively important changes in the party's organizational system. There is no chairmanship but only the post of general secretary in the party Central Committee. The party congresses at the central level and the provincial, municipal and autonomous region level respectively elect their party committees, advisory commissions and commissions for inspecting discipline at the corresponding levels.

The advisory commissions at the above-mentioned two levels serve respectively as political assistants and consultants to the party committees at the corresponding levels. This arrangement not only facilitates cooperations between new and old cadres and the new replacing the old, but it also helps strengthen party unity. The central and all local commissions for inspecting discipline supervise the party committees and their members at the corresponding levels below the party Central Committee within the limits stipulated by the party constitution and may report to the Central Committee any violation of party discipline by members of the Central Committee. In addition to being led by party committees at the corresponding levels, the lower commissions for inspecting discipline are also led by the higher commissions for inspecting discipline. Thus, the commissions for inspecting discipline as an organization are a complete system from the top level to the grassroots level, and their competence is also greatly strengthened compared with the past.

With regard to the party's democratic centralism and party discipline, the new party constitution has set more generous and specific stipulations. It elucidates more systematically and completely than before the basic principle of democratic centralism. Stipulations such as "the party forbids all forms of personality cult" have been added. The new party constitution has also set many corresponding stipulations on the duties, limits of authority and the mutual relations between the central and local authorities and between the higher and lower levels and on the relationship between party members and organizations so that the party's democratic centralism can be more strictly guaranteed. The new party constitution has laid great emphasis on strengthening party discipline. It clearly stipulates that the principle of all party members being equal before party discipline be carried out. It stresses that the party does not allow for any special party member not to participate in the party's organizational life or not to accept supervision by the masses within and without the party. It stipulates that party members violating party discipline shall be duly criticized or punished. It also stipulates that those who violate administrative discipline or state law shall be handled according to administrative discipline and state laws. It also stipulates that the party constitution shall be observed and party members' rights shall be respected when discipline is imposed. The many new stipulations in the new party constitution concerning democratic centralism and party discipline are the summation of historical experience and lessons and are essential to strengthening inner-party democracy, guaranteeing the normalization of inner-party political life, consolidating party solidarity and unity and improving the party's fighting power.

History proves that without CPC leadership there could be no victory for the Chinese revolution. Likewise, without party leadership there can never be victory for the cause of socialism in China. The very key to our adherence to the four basic principles lies in our upholding party leadership. When speaking about upholding party leadership, some party members always say that this is a call addressed to the masses outside the party. This is not a comprehensive view. The call to uphold party leadership is addressed first to our party. How can we uphold party leadership if the party's line, principles and policies are not correct, if the party itself is not in a high state of political and ideoligical harmony, if party organizations are lax and loose and soft and powerless, if the party does not have a good work style and does not observe strict and impartial discipline and if party members are not able to give play to their role as exemplary vanguards? The party has been able to exercise its leadership not by issuing commands and orders but by being correct and strong. In order to uphold party leadership, it is necessary to improve party leadership. Therefore, for the purpose of creating a new situation in all fields of socialist modernization in the period of great historical change, we must exert our utmost to raise party building to a new level and make the party really become the strong core of leadership in the drive for the four modernizations.

The new party constitution has been formulated precisely for the purpose of meeting the characteristics and requirements of the new historical period. Holding high the banner of communism, it applies the ideological system of communism in solving the new problems and new tasks the party finds in the ideological, political and organizational areas and sets forth correct provisions concerning a series of major questions in party life. It is the brilliant guide that will ensure that our party will advance victoriously. This set of the most fundamental party rules and regulations has now been approved by the party's national congress. All Communist Party members, party cadres in particular, must conscientiously and thoroughly study and implement the new party constitution together with their study of Comrade Hu Yaobang's report to the 12th CPC National Congress. We are convinced that when everyone in the party resolutely acts in accordance with the new party constitution, our party style will undergo a fundamental change for the better, the fighting capacity of the party will be considerably enhanced, our party will take on a completely new look and a new situation of vigor and vitality never before seen in the course of socialist modernization under the party's leadership will emerge.

JIEFANGJUN BAO on Constitution

[Text] Beijing, 9 Sep (XINHUA) -- Today's JIEFANGJUN BAO and ZHONGGUO QINGNIAN BAO publish editorials on studying the new party constitution.

The JIEFANGJUN BAO editorial, under the title "Conscientiously Carry Out Education on the New Party Constitution," states: A new party constitution conforming to the characteristics and needs of socialist modernization during the new period has now been officially published after deliberation and adoption by the 12th CPC National Congress. This is the fundamental law for the construction of our party. It is of extreme importance to upholding and improving party leadership, raising the quality of our party members and cadres ideologically, politically and organizationally, boosting the fighting capacity of party organizations and ensuring the realization of the great goal of building a modern socialist powerful country. Party organizations at all levels in the whole army must conduct extensive and serious education on the new party constitution with a view toward unifying and guiding the thinking and actions of the broad masses of party members.

The editorial continues: Experience since the founding of our country has fully borne out the fact that the party, because of its leading position in the state and in social activities, must place strict demands on all party organizations and on party members. The new party constitution adopted by the 12th CPC National Congress stresses the strict demands on party members and clearly stipulates what kind of person a Communist Party member should be and who is qualified for party membership. It demands that Communist Party members must understand the nature, position and role of the party, the criteria for party members and their duties and must work unwaveringly all their life for the realization of communism. As for leading party cadres at all levels, the new party constitution not only requires them to perform in an exemplary way their duties as party members but also sets higher demands on them than on ordinary party members. In particular, it stipulates that leading party cadres at all levels must be able to adhere to the socialist road, fight against the hostile forces disrupting socialism and combat all erroneous tendencies inside and outside the party. They must be able to conduct earnest investigations and studies, persistently proceed from reality and properly carry out the line, principles and policies of the party. They must be fervently dedicated to the revolutionary cause and imbued with a strong sense of political responsibility and be qualified for their leading posts in organizational ability, general education and vocational knowledge. They must have a democratic work style and maintain close ties with the masses. They must exercise their functions and powers in a proper manner and combat all acts of abusing power and seeking personal gain. In addition, they must be good at uniting with a large number of comrades while upholding the party's principles.

We hope that leading party cadres at all levels in the army will have a serious grasp of these stipulations in the party constitution and resolutely comply with them. Especially those leading cadres with long party standing and at high positions who must put strict demands on themselves to meet the criteria for party members and the requirements for cadres as stipulated in the party constitution and must play an exemplary role in every aspect.

The editorial stresses: Lofty ideals and firm confidence are spiritual pillars which we cannot do without and sources which provide us with strength for action. Any Communist Party member must take communism as his lofty ideal and persistently use communist ideology to guide his thinking and action if he is to become a true vanguard fighter of the working class, fulfill the historical duty at his fighting post and contribute as much as he can to creating a new situation in all fields of socialist modernization. As long as we comply with the demands in the new party constitution, arm our minds with Marxism-Leninism-Mao Zedong Thought, firmly uphold the communist ideal and display a high degree of political consciousness in all aspects, we will surely be able to stand all tests and make due contributions in the struggle to fulfill our historical tasks for the new period.

The editorial sets the following demands: First, party organizations at all levels in the army should pay attention to studying the party constitution. It is necessary to study it in conjunction with Comrade Deng Xiaoping's opening speech, Comrade Hu Yaobang's report, Comrade Ye Jianying's speech, Comrade Chen Yun's speech and other documents of the congress. It is necessary to grasp the contents of the party constitution in light of the reality and historical experience in building the party. Party committees at all levels should be the first ones to study the party constitution conscientiously, pay attention to its key points and understand and grasp them. Second, it is essential to implement the party constitution. Once it is adopted, the party constitution is the general law for the whole party, and every Communist Party member must take action to implement it earnestly.

Entitled "Be the Party's Able Assistant and Reliable Reserve Force -- Study Chapter X of the New Party Constitution: 'Relationship Between the Party and the Communist Youth League,'" The ZHONGGUO QINGNIAN BAO editorial states: The new party constitution restores the tradition of the Eighth CPC National Congress by including a chapter on the "Relationship Between the Party and the Communist Youth League." This fully reflects the great importance that the party attaches to the CYL organization and vividly manifests its deep concern about the young generation. The 48 million CYL members and the large number of CYL cadres are thus greatly inspired and profoundly educated. We believe that the study and implementation of the new party constitution are bound to further arouse the feeling of pride among CYL members and cadres, make all comrades in the CYL more clearly aware of their historical tasks and enable them to firmly follow the party to create a new situation of socialist modernization. The editorial adds: The 12th CPC National Congress has set forth the fighting task of creating a new situation in all fields of socialist modernization before the whole party and all people in the country. The CYL must hold high the banner of communism, must use communist ideals, faith and ethics as well as revolutionary discipline and modern knowledge of science and culture to educate the young generation and must lead young peoples to take an active part in the great practice of the communist movement.

Praise from Democratic Leaders

[Excerpts] Beijing, 8 Sep (XINHUA) -- More than 70 responsible persons of various democratic parties, non-CPC democrats and well-known figures from various circles, attending the 12th CPC National Congress as observers, continued group meetings on the mornings of 4, 7 and 8 September to discuss Comrade Deng Xiaoping's opening speech at the 12th CPC National Congress and Comrade Hu Yaobang's report.

Shi Liang, chairman of the Central Committee of the China Democratic League, said: The responsible persons of democratic parties deem it a great honor to attend the 12th CPC National Congress as observers. History has proven that the great, glorious and correct CPC is the force at the core leading the people of various nationalities to triumphantly march forward. Without the CPC, there could have been neither New China nor socialism.

Banqen Erdini Qoigyi Gyancan, honorary president of the Buddhist Association of China, talked with excitement about the changes in Xizang, which he saw during his recent inspection tour there. Considerably great improvement [xiang dang da di gai shan 4161 3981 1129 4104 2395 0810] has been made in the relations among various nationalities and great developments have been made in the relations between the party and the masses and between the armymen and the civilians, he said.

He said: All these are the results of the implementation of the policies concerning the nationalities since the 3d Plenary Session of the 11th CPC Central Committee. Facts have educated me that the CPC is great. I think that I have taken a correct road by following the CPC in the past 30 years. I am still comparatively young. I want to work more for the socialist motherland and contribute to strengthening the unity among nationalities.

Ji Fang, chairman of the Central Committee of the Chinese Peasants and Workers Democratic Party, said: Both the speech and the report delivered at the 12th CPC National Congress point out the necessity to establish socialist spiritual civilization with communist thinking as its core while creating a high degree of material development. This is a very important point and a project of vital and lasting importance.

Burhan, honorary president of the Chinese Islamic Association, expressed his belief that the correct guiding principles formulated by the 12th CPC National Congress will surely create a new situation for undertaking the socialist modernization program in an all-round way, further prosper the CPC and the socialist cause, make our country still more powerful and cause our 1 billion people of various nationalities to gradually become well-off.

Liang Shumin, a well-known figure, said: In the past 3 decades and more, our country, under the CPC leadership, has made great achievements. It has also taken some tortuous roads. The present period is the best in our country. The current party congress emphasizes collective leadership, democracy and legal system. This is very important.

Huang Zhicheng, who flew an airplane back to the motherland's mainland from Taiwan 1 year ago, said with emotion at the meeting: During visits and on-the-spot investigations in past year, I have seen the profound changes in the motherland's mainland and the very high prestige enjoyed by the CPC among the people. The speakers at the meeting also included Hu Yuzhi, Yan Jici, Qu Wu, Zheng Dongguo, Gan Cisen, Hou Jingru, Chu Tunan, Sa Kongliao, Li Wenyi, Fei Xiaotong, Pu Jiexiu, Wang Guangying, Xu Boxin, Jin Shanbao, Sun Chengpei, Rong Yiren, Wu Xuezhi, Luo Shuzhang, Hu Ziying, Liu Nianzhi, Zhang Jingli, Wang Li, Peng Huanwu, and Tang Peisong.

[Article by Ma Heqing [97456 7729 7230]: "Being Utterly Sincere Toward One Another, Sharing Weal and Woe -- Interviewing Representatives of Various Democratic Parties Attending the 12th Party Congress as Observers"]

[Text] When the 12th CPC National Congress was opened, Comrade Deng Xiaoping said in his opening address: "China's democratic parties fought with our party in the period of the democratic revolution and have advanced and undergone tests together with us in the period of socialism. In the construction work ahead, our party will continue its long-term cooperation with all patriotic democratic parties and all patriotic democrats. Here, on behalf of our party, I wish to express our sincere gratitude to all democratic parties and all our friends without party affiliation."

At that time, we found out that in the conference hall there were a score of representatives from eight democratic parties, including the Revolutionary Committee of the Chinese Kuomintang, China Democratic League, China Democratic National Construction Association, China Association for Promoting Democracy, Chinese Peasants and Workers Democratic Party, China Zhi Gong Dang, Jiu San Society and Taiwan Democratic Self-Government League, and other well-known personages from various circles in society. All the delegates warmly applauded to pay warmhearted tribute to our party's friends.

On the eve of the convocation of the party congress, this reporter interviewed several leaders of the democratic parties. They warmly congratulated the convening of the 12th CPC National Congress. Mao Hisheng, vice chairman of Jiu San Society, said: "To me, the 3d Plenary Session of the 11th CPC Central Committee was a great turning point, whereas the 12tht party congress will mark the beginning of the great development of the socialist cause." Leaders of various democratic parties also mentioned that newspapers had recently published one piece of good news after another, such as the increase in industrial production, the bumper harvest in agriculture and the development of all trades and services. They added that there was further good news: various democratic parties are also developing, their work has been enlivened and the number of their members has also rapidly increased. Huang Dingchen, chairman of China Zhi Gong Dang, believed that in the past 3 years the most solid and vivid work had been carried out by various democratic parties since their founding. The number of the members of Zhi Gong Dang had increased by more than 200 percent. Realizing that all members of the China Democratic League are making contributions to the four modernizations, their 82-year-old chairman, Shi Liang, said happily: This year, eight members of our democratic league have been elected national model workers!

Leaders of various democratic parties greatly appreciated the new situation created by the 3d Plenary Session of the 11th CPC Central Committee. They said: The new successes scored by various democratic parties cannot be separated from this new situation. Last January, Comrade Hu Yaobang said: "We should clearly tell the whole party and friends outside the party that we should truly establish sincere relations with friends outside the party and share weal and woe with them." Talking about this, leaders of various democratic parties were full of enthusiasm. Wang Kunlun, chairman of the Revolutionary Committee of the Chinese Kuomintang, said: "The CPC Central Committee intends to establish sincere relations and share weal and woe with nonparty personages. Comrades of the revolutionary committee of the Chinese Kuomingtang are deeply touched by this. Under the leadership of the CPC, our organizations and members in various localities are working with one heart and one mind to exert their efforts in order to make China powerful and rich."

The CPC and various democratic parties have a long history of establishing sincere relations and sharing weal and woe. Scores of years ago, when the KMT reactionaries were brutally killing the Communists, the KMT leftists held high Dr Sun Yat-sen's banner of "entering into alliance with Russia and the Communists and supporting peasants and workers" to resolutely side with the Communists. In the winter of 1936, Shen Junru, Zhou Taofen, Sha Qianli, Shi Liang, Li Gongpu, Wang Zhaoshi, Zhang Naiqi and others took the lead in answering the call of the "1 August declaration" issued by the CPC Central Committee and urged that the civil war be stopped and a united resistance be formed against the Japanese aggressors. They were put into prison by the KMT reactionaries because of this. At that time, people called them the "seven gentlemen." Recalling this, Shi Liang said: "Among those seven persons, I am the only one who is still alive. I want to continue to make progress under the leadership of the CPC." Veteran members of the democratic league Wen Yiduo, Li Gongpu and Du Bingcheng, and leader of the peasants and workers democratic party Deng Yanda shed their blood in their struggle against the KMT reactionaries. In January 1949, when leading members of various democratic parties were entering the liberated area, Mao Zedong, chairman of the CPC Central Committee, and Zhu De, commander in chief of the PLA, sent a telegram to convey their solicitude. The telegram said ebulliently: "Over a long period in the past, all of your have exerted great efforts to promote the democratic cause. After arriving in the liberated area, you will certainly speed up the progress of New China's construction."

Since the founding of New China, under the leadership of the CPC, friends from various democratic parties have been enthusiastically working for the socialist cause. The China Democratic League, Jiu San Society and China Association for Promoting Democracy, together with tens of thousands of intellectuals, are taking part in economic and cultural construction. The China Zhi Gong Dang has done a lot of work to encourage returned overseas Chinese and their relatives to support the construction of the motherland. Under very difficult conditions, the Taiwan Democratic Self-Government League is striving for the reunification of the motherland. The China Democratic National Construction Association works hand-in-hand with the All-China Federation of Industry and Commerce to suggest ways and means for speeding up economic construction. Their suggestions have been directly sent to the CPC Central Committee and the State Council. They have played a good role in promoting national construction.

When the party and government has made mistakes or shortcomings in their work, our friends from various democratic parties pertinently have criticized us. Premier Zhou Enlai and Vice Premier Chen Yi, who had frequently contacted various democratic parties, called friends from democratic parties "friends who can give forthright admonition." What are "friends who can give forthright admonition?" They are friends who show utter devotion and can point out shortcomings in our work without mincing words. During the war years, they were our comrades in arms, and during the period of construction, they are our friends who can give forthright admonition. The brotherly relations between the CPC and various democratic parties are a reliable basis for the implementation of the policy of "long-term coexistence and mutual supervision."

In their speeches, leaders of various democratic parties also have talked about "sharing weal and woe." People have brought them honor. However, there has also been "disgrace." For instance, during the "Great Cultural Revolution," various democratic parties suffered a lot. When talking about this, some leaders of democratic parties shook their heads and said: No fuss about this matter any more now! Our present top priority task is to look forward and create a new socialist situation with one heart and one mind. Hu Juewen and Hu Ziang, members of the Central Committee of the China Democratic National Construction Association, went down to the grassroots units to carry out study and investigation, even though they were old and feeble. They wrote letters to the State Council, presenting suggestions for economic readjustment. Leading members of the China Democratic League, China Association for Promoting Democracy and Jiu San Society are improving their educational work and concentrating their efforts to speed up the work of training talented persons. While dwelling on the present work of various democratic parties, Ye Shengtao, 88-year-old vice chairman of the China Association for Promoting Democracy, said: "The CPC and various democratic parties share weal and woe, because they believe that their goal and orientation of struggle are the same. They are concentrating their efforts to promote the interests of the state and people. They share honor if the state becomes rich and prosperous and the spiritual and material life of the people has been continuously enhanced. If they fail to attain this objective, this means their disgrace. Since they share weal and woe, they should exert concerted efforts in order to attain their common goal. Naturally, they show utter devotion and treat each other with absolute sincerity. They supervise and encourage each other." The above-quoted sincere and honest remarks of our revered Mr Ye express the desires of various democratic parties: Looking forward and working with one heart and one mind to make China rich and strong!

The Great Hall of the People echoed with prolonged applause. The CPC delegates and their comrades in arms and sincere friends from various democratic parties happily got together. As an old Chinese saying goes: "If brothers are of one heart and one mind, they can change clay into gold." We are now ushering in a new situation of changing clay into gold!

Writer Lauds Congress

HK100737 Beijing RENMIN RIBAO in Chinese 9 Sep 82 p 5

[Article by Wu Youheng [0702 2589 1854]: "Our Party Has Never Ceased Growing From Strength to Strength"]

[Text] My heart is filled with great excitement for I am attending the national party congress for the third time.

The plane is flying at a speed of 850 kilometers an hour. Looking out from the plane window, I see an unlimited expanse of clear sky and an endless sea of clouds. I am on my way to attend the 12th national party congress in Beijing. My thoughts wander back to events of the past. In 1939 I set off from Guangdong to attend the 7th national party congress in Yanan and traveled on foot all the way through various anti-Japanese guerrilla areas and base areas. It was a long and difficult journey, and I had to make detours and fight my way over several thousand li. It took me 1 year and 1 month to reach Yanan. The 7th party congress was held 4 years later. After the congress, it took me almost the same time to travel on foot back to Guangdong again. At present, it takes only 2 1/2 hours to travel from Guangzhou to Beijing. Therefore I think that the cause of our party has again become prosperous and flourishing. It is again advancing at a new high speed from the new starting point.

When the 7th party congress was held, the party was barely 24 years old. The party made many mistakes in its infancy and youth and did not know how to carry out work based on reality. After I arrived in Yanan and heard many lectures given by Comrade Mao Zedong on opposing subjectivism and dogmatism, I began to understand that work should be carried out based on reality. In the hall of the Central Party School hung an inscription with four large characters: "Seek truth from facts." It was written by Comrade Mao Zedong. In 1942 we began the study of rectifying the party's work style with opposing subjectivism as the main theme, and later on, summed up the history of the party since its founding and passed a resolution on certain historical questions. All this was for the sake of making proper preparations for the seventh national party congress. The seventh party congress was extremely practical and realistic and the result of it was that we very quickly scored victories in the war of resistance against Japan and in the liberation war.

I also attended the eighth national party congress. This congress which carried on the ideological line of seeking truth from facts as stipulated by the seventh party congress, was a correct one.

Unfortunately, some abnormal conditions began to appear in the party afterwards, particularly in the appearance of the personality cult. This was an obscurant disease. The appearance of the Lin Biao and "gang of four" counterrevolutionary cliques brought about 10 years of internal disorder. At that time, like many other comrades, I was at a loss and did not know what to do.

Everything is all right at present. Having survived the disaster, I am again able to see that our party has finally brought order out of chaos and returned to the line of seeking truth from facts as stipulated by the 8th party congress. With the convening of the 12th party congress, I am once more involved in a period of great historical change and have become a deputy to the national party congress. I see that our party has been completely restored to health and is even stronger and wiser than before. Is this not correct? We have resolutely smashed the long-standing ideological fetters of dogmatism and personality cult. This is something we have never done or even dared to contemplate before.

Our party is not likely to grow senile. It is a strong collective which constantly replenishes its ranks with outstanding new elements and never ceases growing from strength to strength.

I am a reporter, and if you ask what I see in the congress this is what I will say. If you ask for my impression, this is also what I will say. I am also a writer, and should report this good news. I pledge in my future work to strive for the creation of a new situation in all fields of socialist modernization and to contribute my effort to the building of socialist spiritual civilization.

Zhou Zijian on Work in Anhui

OW090845 Hefei Anhui Provincial Service in Mandarin 1100 GMT 6 Sep 82

[Article by Zhou Zijian, acting first secretary of the Anhui Provincial CPC Committee: "The Spirit of the 3d Plenary Session of the 11th CPC Central Committee Leads Us To Make a Historic Change"]

[Text] The 12th CPC National Congress has opened ceremoniously. This congress is of great significance and has far-reaching effects in our party's history. It is a most important meeting since the Seventh CPC National Congress. Comrade Deng Xiaoping's opening speech carefully sums up our party's historical experience and clearly sets forth the tasks of this congress and the work orientation for the whole party in the future. The report delivered by Comrade Hu Yaobang on behalf of the party Central Committee makes a summing up of the historic change during the past 6 years following the downfall of the gang of four, especially since the 3d Plenary Session of the 11th CPC Central Committee, and sets forth the great objectives of the party for the new historical period. It is a programmatic document for us to strive to create a new situation in all fields of socialist modernization.

Comrade Hu Yaobang's report states that a historic change has been brought about in our country. This historic change fully indicates that the line, principles and policies formulated since the 3d Plenary Session of the 11th CPC Central Committee are absolutely correct and are a fundamental guarantee for our great success in eliminating chaos and restoring order. This change can be seen from the situation of the whole country and also from what has happened in Anhui.

Anhui has undergone a radical change since the latter half of 1977 when the party Central Committee solved the questions of leaders of the provincial CPC committee by sending Comrades Wan Li and Gu Zhuoxin to take charge of the committee. Especially since the 3d Plenary Session of the 11th CPC Central Committee, the provincial CPC committee has firmly implemented the party's line, principles and policies, taken a series of resolute measures to eradicate the serious effects caused by the 10 years of internal disorder and achieved considerable results in this regard under the correct leadership of the party Central Committee. After Comrade Wan Li transferred to work at the central level, Comrade Zhang Jingfu succeeded him to be in charge of the work of the provincial CPC committee. Following the achievements already made, the provincial CPC committee continued to implement the instructions of the party Central Committee. In particular, it did much work in the fields of economic construction and political and ideological education. The initiative of people on all fronts was aroused, and an excellent situation has been developed.

A review of the past shows that the work done by the provincial CPC committee over the previous years can be summed up as follows: It resolutely and decisively eliminated chaos and restored order, broke the longtime shackles of leftist mistakes in all fields, and insisted on the ideological line of seeking truth from facts. As concrete steps, it firmly grasped two basic questions concerning the overall situation while eliminating chaos and restoring order. This resulted in the development of the overall situation in the province. One basic question was the necessity to resolutely comply politically with the party Central Committee's plan, that is, to carry out unremitting struggle to heal the severe wounds resulting from the 10 years of internal disorder. In this regard, efforts were concentrated on four tasks during the past years:

1. In-depth struggle was waged to expose and criticize the two counterrevolutionary cliques of Lin Biao and Jiang Qing, and the masses were mobilized to boldly carry out the exposure-criticism-investigation struggle by expelling all interference. A great victory was scored in this struggle.

2. A great number of frameups, false charges and wrong sentences were corrected in a timely manner, and the party's policies on cadres and intellecturals were put into practice. Up to now, 99.86 percent of the cases in the province during the Great Cultrual Revolution have been reexamined and resettled. This has stirred up our comrades' enthusiasm to work hard.

3. The leading groups at all levels were readjusted, consolidated and strengthened. Our examination over the past several years has shown that the majority of the leading groups have fighting power. In the face of the natural disasters of floods in 1980, particularly in the face of the very large floods of this year, which exceeded the floods of August 1975 in scope, the leading cadres at all levels stepped out bravely and stood resolutely at the forefront of the struggle. They led the broad masses in struggling with the floods and thus ensured the safety of the Huai He dikes and various reservoir dams during the floods and protected the people's lives and property.

4. We upheld the four basic principles and the guiding principles for inner-party political life and waged constant and resolute struggles against various erroneous and unhealthy tendencies. At the same time, we achieved fairly good results in carrying out party work style and discipline education among the broad masses of party members and cadres by citing typical cases of some cadres' serious violations of the law and discipline and those who abused power to seek special privileges. It is precisely because we eliminated chaos and restored order in these fields that the political situation in Anhui over the last few years has been farily stable (bi jiao wen ding] and we have been able to implement the party's various principles and policies in a fairly good way. This is an important aspect in which we have won great victories in eliminating chaos and restoring order and achieved the great historic change.

Another basic question we solved was that we paid great attention to agriculture and firmly corrected longstanding leftist mistakes in economic work. In his opening speech, Comrade Xiaoping has pointed out that in our modernization program, we must proceed from China's realities, integrate the universal truth of Marxism with the concrete realities of China, blaze a path of our own and build socialism with Chinese characteristics -- this is the basic conclusion we have reached in summing up long, historical experience. We committed leftist mistakes in the past basically because we lost contact with China's realities. What the 3d Plenary Session of the 11th CPC Central Committee did was basically correct because it adhered to the ideological line of seeking truth from facts and closely integrated Marxism-Leninism with the realities of China's socialist construction.

Let us take a look at the situation in Anhui. In order to overcome leftist mistakes in economic work, Anhui first made a breakthrough in agriculture. This played an important role in making the overall economic situation and political situation take a favorable turn. In the last 4 years the rural economic policies in Anhui have undergone a historic change. The change was essentially caused by great readjustment of the relations of production and by great reform of the agricultural management system. The readjustment and reform were carried out by eliminating chaos and restoring order politically, ideologically and theoretically; by making persistent and thorough criticism of erroneous. leftist rural policies; and by proceeding from realities and constantly summing up the masses' practical experience to gradually implement the system of responsibility for agricultural production throughout the province. To date, 97 percent of the production teams in the province have implemented the system of fixing output quotas on the household basis or the system in which each household retains everything produced on the land assigned to it after paying taxes and contributing its share to the accumulation and public welfare funds as a member of the collective. In recent years we have carried out a series of tasks to perfect the responsibility system. We have systematically summed up our experience in signing economic contracts, helping poor families, easing the peasants' burden and implementing the system of personal responsibility among the cadres.

We have also strengthened ideological and political work in rural areas. Many cultural centers have been set up in various localities and they play a great role in educating the peasants in collectivism and patriotism.

Since 1981 we have begun to implement in the province the responsibility system for production in forestry, animal husbandry, sideline undertakings and fishery. At present, the system of responsibility implemented throughout the rural areas has entered a stage of stability and perfection.

In the course of perfecting the responsibility system, specialized households, specialized workers and various kinds of new economic associations have emerged in many localities. Although they have only recently emerged, they have shown powerful vitality and scored marked economic results. What was especially valuable was the fact that when serious floods and waterlogging took place this year, the broad masses of peasants -- numbering over 1 million -- gathered at the embankments to combat the floods and carry out rescue work, fighting day and night at the river banks and reservoirs in spite of the danger and losses to production. Considering the entire situation, the masses in the flood-control areas opened the sluicegates and broke the embankments in time to let the floods pass through, thus ensuring the safety of the big Huai He dike. Facts have shown that the view that water conservation problems cannot be solved under the system of fixing output quotas on a household basis is groundless. The establishment of the responsibility system in agricultural production has promoted its development and economic prosperity in the rural areas. Since the 3d Plenary Session of the 11th CPC Central Committee, our province's total agricultural output value has increased by an average of 10.8 percent per year and total grain output has increased by an average of 6.5 percent per year. In 1981, the total grain output reached 36.3 billion jin, an all-time high for Anhui. In 1981 the province delivered and sold 9.4 billion jin of grain, an increase of 3.3 billion jin over 1978. The rate of commodities marketed rose from 20.4 percent in 1978 to 26 percent in 1981. In the past 3 years the province has turned over to the state 3.777 billion net jin of grain, averaging 1.26 billion jin per year, or an increase of 104.4 percent over the average yearly turnover of 616 million jin in the 16 years from 1963 to 1978. This year, despite the extraordinarily big floods, there was no reduction in the plan to deliver 1.6 billion jin of grain to the state. From the time of liberation to the 3d Plenary Session of the 11th CPC Central Committee, Fengyang County's total grain output remained in the vicinity of 170 million jin. In the few years since the major production responsibility system [da bao gan] was implemented, very great changes have taken place; the county's total grain output in 1981 was 640 million jin, the amount of grain it delivered and sold was 235 million jin and the rate of commodities marketed reached 36 percent, averaging 2,500 jin delivered and sold by each household. It was a miracle for Fengyang.

In the past few years, the province has also made relatively great developments in industrial crops and in diversifying its economy. Its agricultural structure has undergone some changes and has begun to develop in a favorable direction. Following the developments in production, peasant incomes have increased and the life of peasants has been greatly improved. In 1981, the province's per capita income -- including income from sideline production -- was 199.69 yuan, or a net increase of 71.26 yuan over 1980; per capita income in 24 countries and municipalities exceeded 300 yuan with five counties recording per capita income of over 400 yuan. With such rapid development, it is possible to prefulfill Comrade Hu Yaobang's demand for our province to increase per capita income to 200, 300, 400 and 500 yuan, each accounting for one-fourth of the province's localities, by 1985. Following developments in agricultural production, a new situation has taken place in which agriculture promotes industry, commodities and other undertakings. In the past, the foundation of Anhui's light industry was very weak, but in the past few years, a new situation has begun to emerge. Since 1979 light industrial output value has increased by an average of 11.1 percent per year.

In 1980, the proportion of light industrial output value exceeded that of heavy industry for the first time, and its proportion rose to 56.6 percent in 1981. In the first half of this year, light industrial output value increased by 18.3 percent over that for the same period of 1981. The problems in distribution, especially the difficulty in purchasing grain and oil, as well as the problems in delivering industrial products to the rural areas, are gradually being solved.

After eliminating chaos and restoring order and conscientiously implementing the line, principles and policies since the 3d Plenary Session of the 11th CPC Central Committee, the political and economic situation in Anhui at present is fine. It has laid a good foundation for creating a new situation in all fields of socialist construction. However, we still have many problems and difficulties, but we have the confidence and determination to do still better work in Anhui. Under the correct leadership of the party Central Committee, we will certainly and conscientiously propagate and implement the guidelines of the 12th CPC National Congress and implement the party's principles and tasks for the new period as put forward by Comrade Hu Yaobang; we will practically and firmly grasp well the four very important tasks put forward by Comrade Deng Xiaoping; we will realize a fundamental change for the better in the financial and economic situation, in social practices and in the party's work style within the next 5 years; and we will strive to fulfill the lofty aims put forward at the 12th CPC National Congress.

Television Coverage 9 Sep

HK100554 [Editorial Report] Beijing Domestic Television Service in Mandarin at 1100 GMT on 19 September carries various filmed reports in its newscast on the 12th CPC National Congress presidium meeting, Ye Jiangying's attendance at a PLA congress delegation's meeting, and the activities of other congress delegates on 9 September.

The station's newscast begins with a 1-minute filmed report on the presidium meeting held earlier in the morning. The camera shows Hu Yaobang addressing the meeting and then an announcer explains that the meeting finalized the formal namelists of the candidates for the Central Committee, the Central Advisory Commission and the Central Commission for Discipline Inspection, that the meeting adopted a resolution on the report on the work of the Central Commission for Discipline Inspection and submitted it to the congress for approval, and that the meeting also adopted the namelist of examiners and the chief examiner and will submit it for consideration by the delegations.

Next, the station shows a 4-minute filmed report on Ye Jianying and Nie Rongzhen attending a meeting of the PLA delegation to the congress. The film opens with a shot showing Ye, in uniform and assisted by an officer, and Nie, in a blue tunic, arriving at the room where the meeting is held. Then, Yang Shangkun gives a short speech welcoming them and asks them to say a few words. Ye speaks haltingly into a microphone, saying that he is glad to see everyone and wishes them well. He speaks very slowly and his words are slurred. Then, Nie, who is much more agile, takes over and talks about fostering young officers as the veterans' successors.

The newscast then continues with a 4-minute filmed report, in which a station reporter interviews a group of congress delegates from athletic circles. They talk about their determination to study the documents of the congress and strive to fight for the glory of the motherland in the field of international athletic competitions.

The last film in the newscast, which lasts 2 minutes, shows a meeting of delegates from Guangdong, in which red scarves from Guangdong Young Pioneers are presented to the oldest and youngest delegates.

In its special program on the congress at 1330 GMT, the station reruns all of the above films after the announcer reads the presidium's message hailing the successful launching of the scientific satellite.

WESTERN PRESS REPORTS OF 'PURGE' SAID FALSE

HK100132 Beijing CHINA DAILY in English 10 Sep 82 p 4

["It Seems To Me" column by "G.Z.": "Sometimes Foreign Press Can Be Wrong"]

[Text] We are all journalists, we Chinese and our Western colleagues, and there shouldn't be much difference between us, and in truth there isn't -- not between the real professionals.

All of us need certain restrictions placed upon us by our respective laws and the limits of taste and good sense. We all conform, more or less willingly, to the editorial policies determined by our respective superiors. We also bind ourselves, almost by instinct; to codes of professional ethics.

And we are none the less happy, for we are realists. We agree that "freedom of the press" is a good and proper slogan. But we realize, if only unconsciously, that there will be an effort to repress it wherever the press and the establishment are antagonistic to each other.

On the other hand, we know that it will be zealously encouraged when the press shares responsibility with the establishment by printing only what is "fit to print."

An outstanding illustration of the latter case that immediately comes to mind is how the White House corps of correspondents helped to keep secret the physical condition of Franklin D. Roosevelt during the last two terms of his presidency. It was wartime, of course, which was incentive enough to protect the secret, but there was no lack of political animosity and other pressures to make them want to reveal it.

The majority of Western correspondents working in China are professionals: they report what they honestly believe and interpret it from their own viewpoints. Though we often don't agree with them, yet we can always agree to disagree, and on that basis we do have common goals and mutual respect.

There are a few, however, who are both over-zealous and sadly unprepared. Their wish to please their editors only magnifies their inadequacy. Young and ambitious, they want to see their bylines on the front page and to find favour with their bosses. If they succeed; is the fault entirely their own?

Creating 'Sensation'

To create some sort of sensation, they are not always above exaggeration or fabrication. They hope to score a scoop by uncovering some sort of chaos that has escaped their more experienced confreres.

A couple of years ago, some newcomers to China were telling their readers that there was a strong wave of political dissidence in China -- all because there appeared on a stretch of wall in Beijing (which they nicknamed "Democracy Wall") a few dozen "big character" posters. These were merely the last vestigates of the "Cultural Revolution."

Rejecting friendly advice to show a little professional prudence, they refused to make the most elementary analysis of the situation. Ninety per cent of the posters aired only personal grievances that by no stretch of imagination could be considered political. The crowds in front of the wall may have looked large in photos printed in the West, but at no time did they exceed a fraction of one per cent of Beijing's population. Mostly, they were just curious passersby.

The only reason to recall that unpleasant period -- an example of sensational reporting that has not stood the test of time-- is the hope that experience, if not forgotten, can be a guide for the future. Unfortunately, not everyone learned the lesson. Now some are reporting that China is "launching headlong into a thorough purge" and "more political trials are in the offing."

They seized upon a story printed in a Shanghai newspaper about the trial of eight notorious cohorts of the gang of four for crimes committed during the "Cultural Revolution" and interpreted it as having taken place recently. Anyone acquainted with the Chinese language and China's history could see through the reporters' false conclusion that here was a case heralding a new "thorough purge" and "more political trials."

With no way to read minds, it is impossible to say whether the error was intentional or not. But at the least, it was poor journalism.

ZHOU ZIJIAN REPORTS ON ANHUI'S SITUATION

[Article by Zhou Zijiang [0719 1311 0256]: "The Spirit of the Third Plenary Session Has Guided Us To Realize the Great Historical Change"]

[Text] The 12th CPC National Congress has solemnly opened. The congress, with its extremely great significance and far-reaching influence in our party's history, is the most important meeting since the seventh plenary session. In his opening speech to the congress, Comrade Deng Xiaoping precisely summed up the historical experience of our party and explicitly put forth the tasks of the congress and the direction for the whole party to march forward. The report delivered by Comrade Hu Yaobang on behalf of the party Central Committee triumphantly points out the historic changes over the past 6 years since the smashing of the gang of four and, in particular, since the 3d Plenary Session of the 11th CPC Central Committee, and puts a magnificent goal before the party in the new historical period. The report is a program for us to strive for opening up a new situation in building socialist modernization in all all-round way.

In his report, Comrade Hu Yaobang declared: Our country has undergone a historic change. This historic change fully shows that the line, principles and policies adopted by our party since the 3d plenary session of its 11th central committee are completely correct. They are the fundamental guarantee for our achieving great victories in eliminating chaos and restoring order. The judgment of the historic change conforms to the actual situation of China as well as the situation of Anhui Province. In the second half of 1977, in order to solve the leadership problem of the Anhui Provincial CPC Committee, the central authorities dispatched Wan Li, Gu Zhuoxin and other comrades to take charge of the work of the provincial CPC committee. Since then, radical changes have taken place in Anhui. In particular, since the third plenary session, under the correct leadership of the party Central Committee, the provincial CPC committee has firmly implemented the line, principles and policies of the party, and achieved great successes in adopting a series of resolute measures to wipe out the serious consequences of 10 years' internal strife. After Comrade Wan Li was transferred to the central government, Comrade Zhang Jingfu took charge of the work of the provincial CPC committee. On the basis of successes scored, the provincial CPC committee, continuing to follow a series of instructions of the central authorities, particularly carried out immense work in economic construction and political and ideological education. This aroused the enthusiasm of all fields and brought about a good situation.

In sum, over the past few years, the provincial CPC committee has resolutely eliminated chaos and restored order, broken away from the long and serious trammels of "leftist" mistakes in various fields and adhered to the ideological line of seeking truth from facts. In order to eliminate chaos, restore order and improve the situation as a whole, we have specifically dealt with two fundamental problems which concern the overall situation.

One of the fundamental problems concerns the political sphere. To deal with it, we have resolutely acted according to the instructions of the central authorities on waging an unremitting struggle to repair the damages done by 10 years' internal strife. We have concentrated our efforts in the last few years on the following four tasks: 1) Penetratingly waging a struggle to expose and criticize the Lin Biao and Jiang Qing counterrevolutionary cliques. By fully arousing the masses and overcoming all obstructions, we launched the struggle to expose, criticize and investigate the crimes of the two cliques from a strategically advantageous position. We have scored great successes in the struggle. 2) Redressing a large number of unjust verdicts, false charges and mishandled cases and implementing the party's policies concerning cadres and intellectuals. Up to now, 99.86 percent of those cases occurring during the "Cultural Revolution" in the province have been reexamined and reversed. This has aroused the enthusiasm of all people concerned. 3) Readjusting, consolidating and strengthening the leading groups at all levels. Through experience gained over the past few years, the majority of the leading groups are combat-worthy. In the 1980 flood disaster, particularly in this year's floods which were more serious than those of August 1975, leading cadres at all levels bolstered themselves and made a firm stand on the forefront to lead the masses in the struggle against the floods, ensuring the safety of all dykes and reservoirs on the banks of the Huai He during the high water season and protecting the people's life and property. 4) Upholding the four basic principles and "guiding principles for inner-party political life" and waging resolute and constant struggle against various erroneous and unhealthy tendencies. At the same time, we have achieved fairly good results in carrying out party work style and discipline education among party members and cadres by citing the typical cases of some cadres' serious violations of the law and discipline and those who have abused power to seek special priviledges. It is precisely because we have eliminated chaos and restored order in these aspects that the political situation in Anhui over the last few years has been fairly stable and the party's various principles and policies could be implemented in a fairly good way. This is a great victory in eliminating chaos and restoring order and an important aspect of realizing the great historical change.

Another fundamental problem is in the economic sphere. To deal with it, we have paid close attention to agriculture as the central link and unswervingly corrected the longstanding "leftist" mistakes in economic work. In his opening speech to the congress, Comrade Xiaoping pointed out: "In our modernization program, we must proceed from China's realities," "To integrate the universal truth of Marxism with the concrete realities of China, blaze a path of our own and build socialism with Chinese characteristics; this is the basic conclusion we have reached in summing up long, historical experience." The root cause of committing "leftist" mistakes in the past was divorcement from China's realities. The basic reason for the correctness of the third plenary session lies in adhering to the ideological line of seeking truth from facts and closely integrating Marxism-Leninism with the practical conditions of socialist construction in China. In viewing Anhui Province, we see that in order to overcome the "leftist" mistakes in economic work, we first had to make a breakthrough in agriculture. This plays an important role in making the overall economic situation and political situation take a favorable turn. Over the past 4 years, a historical change has taken place in our province's rural economic policy. The essence of the change has been to greatly readjust the production relationship in the rural areas and adopt a great reform in agricultural management. The purpose of the readjustment and reform is to eliminate chaos and restore order politically, ideologically and theoretically, to continuously and penetratingly criticize the "leftist" mistakes in rural policies, and to unceasingly sum up the practical experience of the masses so as to gradually develop the production responsibility system to all the rural areas of our province according to local conditions. So far, 97 percent of the production teams in the province's rural areas have accepted the system of assigning land to each household in exchange for fixed levies and the system of fixing output quotas for individual households. In recent years, a lot of work has been done in perfecting the responsibility system and experiences have been summed up in establishing the contract labor system, assisting poor households, reducing the peasants' burdens and establishing the personal responsibility system for cadres. Political and ideological work has been intensified in the rural areas. A number of cultural centers have been set up in various localities. This has played a big role in educating peasants in collectivism and patriotism. Since last year, the production responsibility system has begun to develop in our province's forestry, animal husbandry, sideline production and fishery undertakings. The responsibility system has now stabilized and is more perfect in our province's rural areas.

In the course of perfecting the system, there has emerged in many localities households for specified jobs, specialized workers and various new types of economic united groups. Though fairly new, their great vitality has already been transformed into marked economic results. More commendably, when heavy flooding and waterlogging hit our province this year, millions of peasants, in disregard of their families safety and production losses, rushed to the river dikes and reservoirs to struggle against the flooding day and night. The masses of the people in the flood-threatened areas, taking the whole situation into consideration, punctually opened sluice gates and broke dykes in order to mitigate the flooding. Their action protected the main embankments of the Huai He from destruction. Facts have showed that it is groundless to say that the system of fixing output quotas for individual households is not applicable in water conservancy and irrigation work.

The adoption of the production responsibility system in agriculture has boosted development in farm production and bolstered the rural economy. Since the 3d Plenary Session of the 11th CPC Central Committee, Anhui's total agricultural output value has been increasing at an average rate of 10.8 percent per year, and total grain output has been increasing at an average rate of 6.5 percent per year. Total grain output in 1981 was 36.3 billion jin, reaching the province's previous all-time record. Peasants sold 9.4 billion jin of grain to the provincial government in 1981, an increase of 3.3 billion jin as compared with 1978. The rate of marketable grain rose to 26 percent in 1981 from 20.4 percent in 1978. In last 3 years, Anhui Province has supplied the state with 3.777 billion jin of grain, an average rate of 1.26 billion jin each year. This is an increase of 104.4 percent as compared with a yearly supply of 616 million jin to the state in the 16 years from 1963 to 1978. In spite of the most serious flooding this year in Anhui, we are still striving to supply 1.6 billion jin of grain to the state this year as planned. From liberation to the third plenary session, Fengyang County continuously had a total grain output of about 170 million jin. But great changes took place after implementing the contract system in an overall way. Last year, the country reaped 640 million jin of grain and supplied the government with 235 million jin, making the rate of marketable grain 36 percent. On the average, every household sold 2,500 jin of grain to the government. This is a real miracle in the history of Fengyang County. Over the past few years, our province has also made great progress in industrial crops and diversified undertakings. The agricultural structure has changed and begun to develop toward a favorable cycle. With the development of production, the peasants' income has increased and their standard of living has greatly improved. Per-capita income in 1981 (including household sideline production) was 199.69 yuan, an increase of 71.26 yuan over 1980. There are now 24 counties (municipalities) in our province where per-capita income has exceeded 300 yuan; of these, 5 counties have a per-capita income of more than 400 yuan. On the basis of such a rate of development, it might be possible to accomplish in advance the demand which Comrade Hu Yaobang has set for our province that, by the end of 1985, the per-capita income in the countryside reach the levels of "two, three, four and five" hundred yuan, with each level representing 25 percent of the total income.

With development of agricultural production, a new situation has appeared in which agriculture is promoting the development of industry, commerce and other undertakings. The foundation of light and textile industries was very poor in Anhui Province in the past, but some progress have been made in these fields in recent years. Since 1979, the output value of light industry has increased at an average rate of 11.1 percent each year. In 1980, the proportion of light industry's output value in industry as a whole exceeded that of heavy industry for the first time. In 1981, the proportion of light industry's output value rose to 56.6 percent. In the first half of this year, the output value of light industry increased by 18.3 percent over the same period last year. Meanwhile, efforts are being made to solve the problem of commodity circulation, in particular, to overcome difficulties in supplying more daily necessities and industrial goods to the rural areas.

Through eliminating chaos and restoring order, the present political and economic situation in Anhui is good as a result of sternly implementing the line, principles and policies formulated since the third plenary session. This has laid a sound foundation for creating a new situation of building socialism in an all-round way. Although we still have many problems and difficulties, we are confident and resolved to do the work in Anhui well. Under the correct leadership of the party Central Committee, we will resolutely and seriously publicize and implement the spirit of "the 12 party congress" and carry out the principles and tasks that Comrade Hu Yaobang has put forward for the party in the new historical period. We will grasp firmly and well the four most important tasks put forth by Comrade Xiaoping, and strive to bring about a fundamental turn for the better in our province's financial and economic situation, in social mood and in party style, so as to work hard for the realization of the magnificent strategic targets set by "the 12th party congress."

OW100400 Shanghai City Service in Mandarin 1130 GMT 5 Sep 82

[Excerpts] The Shanghai Municipal CPC Committee issued a circular on studying documents of the 12th CPC National Congress on 3 September. Standing committee members of the municipal CPC committee and responsible comrades of some municipal departments, commissions and offices studied Comrade Deng Xiaoping's opening speech on the afternoon of 4 September.

In its circular, the Shanghai Municipal CPC committee called on party and CYL members of the entire city to seriously read and study Comrade Deng Xiaoping's opening speech at the 12th CPC National Congress and Comrade Hu Yaobang' report on behalf of the CPC Central Committee and to propagate these documents among the masses.

Han Zheyi, secretary of the municipal CPC committee, presided over the study and discussion meeting of 4 September. He said, now that the municipal CPC committee has issued a circular on seriously studying documents of the 12th CPC National Congress, we should take the lead to study them beginning with Comrade Deng Xiaoping's opening speech and excerpts of Comrade Hu Yaobang's report.

Speaking at yesterday's study and discussion meeting were also Comrade Yang Kai, Zhang Chengzong, Yang Shifa, Zhao Xingzhi, Ye Shangzhi and Li Peilan. They unanimously maintained that Comrade Deng Xiaoping's opening speech was concise and comprehensive and put forward many fundamental questions. Everyone was enlightened by Comrade Deng Xiaoping's elucidation of the historical position and great significance of the 12th CPC Congress in light of the 7th and 8th CPC Congress. After reviewing the party's history, everyone came to realize the importance of summing up historical experiences, both positive and negative.

The comrades said: The unhealthy tendencies and practices inside the party and in society are by no means the result of the open-door policy but the result of the failure of our ideological and practical work in catching up with the times. We must unswervingly implement the policy of opening our gates to foreign countries as pointed out by Comrade Deng Xiaoping. At the same time, we will maintain a clear head to resolutely resist the corruption caused by decadent foreign ideas.

After reviewing historical facts, the comrades said: Facts have fully borne out that our party has become more mature, and that our party is fully capable of leading the people of various nationalities of the whole country to open up new vistas in socialist modernization in all fields.

The study and discussion meeting will continue tomorrow afternoon.

GUANGXI URGES STUDY OF CONGRESS DOCUMENTS

HK100215 Nanning Guangxi Regional Service in Mandarin 1130 GMT 9 Sep 82

[Text] The Guangxi Regional CPC Committee today issued a circular calling for conscientiously studying the documents of the 12th CPC Congress.

The circular said: The 12th CPC Congress is the most important congress since the 7th CPC Congress. The documents adopted at the congress, including Comrade Hu Yaobang's report "Create a New Situation in All Fields of Socialist Modernization," the CPC constitution, Comrade Deng Xiaoping's opening speech, and the speeches by Comrades Ye Jianying and Chen Yun, have scientifically summed up the experience obtained in the course of achieving the magnificent historical triumph following the smashing of the gang of four, especially since the 3d Plenary Session of the 11th CPC Central Committee. These documents have correctly laid down the great tasks for the party in the new historical era. All these documents, which embody the brilliant Mao Zedong Thought, have provided the guidelines for the socialist modernization construction in our country.

All party members and cadres must conscientiously study and understand the spirit of these documents and take the lead in implementing the guidelines laid down in them. We must make full use of all propaganda media, including newspapers, periodicals, radio and television stations and so on, and various propaganda forms to carry out propaganda work penetratingly, meticulously, step by step and in a planned way, so these documents will be widely known in every household.

On the basis of widely studying, organs, enterprises and public organizations may organize rotational training classes for cadres to study the political report of the 12th CPC Congress and for party members to study the CPC constitution. They may further organize studies to solve the actual problems of their own units.

The party and government cadres at various levels must take the lead in studying. They must be more earnest in studying than others and must give necessary study guidance to ordinary cadres and the masses. In studying, they must pay attention to understanding the spiritual substance of the documents as well as to integrate the studies with the actual situation, so as to advance the work in their own regions and units. Through studying and propaganda, we must help the vast number of party members, cadres and the people of all nationalities throughout the region to reach unanimity of ideological understanding under the banner of the 12th CPC Congress; further strengthen our consciousness and steadfastness in building socialism with a distinctive Chinese feature; brace ourselves and strive with one heart and one mind to create a new situation in all fields of socialist modernization and accomplish the party's magnificent goals.

HUBEI CONFERENCE HAILS HU YAOBANG REPORT

HK090955 Wuhan Hubei Provincial Service in Mandarin 1100 GMT 8 Sep 82

[Excerpts] After the comrades attending the Hubei provincial conference on rural work had studied Comrade Hu Yaobang's report on the agricultural production responsibility system delivered at the 12th CPC Congress, they said that summing up experiences, gradually reaching perfection and tapping potential are important work to further do a good job concerning the agricultural production responsibility system. While analyzing the rural situation, the comrades said that since the 3d Plenary Session of 11th CPC Central Committee, through implementing the party's rural policies, particularly the responsibility system of linking remuneration with output, rural areas in our province have achieved a gratifying situation in which agricultural development has been speeded up, the total value of agricultural output has increased relatively greatly, the quantity of agricultural and sideline products supplied to the state has increased and peasants' livelihood has remarkably improved.

However, many peasants are worried about changes in policy. Therefore, they have not devoted their energies to the fulfillment of their contracts, particularly regarding long-term agricultural construction. Comrade Hu Yaobang clearly announced in his report at the 12th CPC Congress that it is necessary to adhere for a long time to the many forms of the production responsibility system which rural areas have established over the past few years. We can gradually perfect it only on the basis of summing up the masses' practical experiences, and we cannot go against the masses' will and rashly change it; we must not take the road back. This passage has fully affirmed the achievements in implementing the agricultural production responsibility system in rural areas over the past few years and has pointed out the orientation for our work. This will have a profound and active influence on reassuring the public and speeding up agricultural development.

While studying Comrade Hu Yaobang's statement on the agricultural production responsibility system, the comrades attending the provincial conference on rural work also pointed out: Although the might of the agricultural production responsibility system is obvious to all, the results produced by the system are preliminary and its potential is still very great. Due to the fact that it has been implemented for only a short time, leaders have had insufficient practical experience and their work style does not suit the situation; they have not studied the new situation and new problems sufficiently and have not been able to solve the problems promptly. Peasants have lacked practical experience in correctly exercising their decision making rights in management and distribution under party leadership. Departments which are related to agriculture, have also lacked experience in conforming to the new situation and doing well in supporting agriculture. This has affected the might of the responsibility system that has been brought into play.

They all said: If we want to solve these problems well and bring the potential of the production responsibility system into play, we must do well in summing up experiences and gradually perfect the system. In summing up, we must sum up the masses' practical experiences. In prefecting, we must respect the masses' will. Over the past 2 years, a large number of professional households and key-point households have emerged in all places. They have supplied a large quantity of agricultural and sideline products to the state, thus increasing the incomes of the collectives and individuals.

We must encourage and support these professional households and key-point households and sum up and popularize their experiences.

LIAONING RESENTENCES 'ARCHCRIMINAL' TO 20 YEARS

HK091434 Shenyang LIAONING RIBAO in Chinese 30 Aug 82 p 1

[Report by staff reporters Liu Weiye [0491 4850 2841] and Liu Ziyang (0491 1311 7122]: "Smash-and-Grab Archcriminal Jin Dechun Jailed for 20 Years"]

[Text] Jinzhou Municipality has remedied the case of the light sentence meted out on the serious crimes committed by smash-and-grab archcriminal Jin Dechun. At a public trial held on 28 August, the intermediate municipal people's court announced it was rescinding the original verdict and resentencing the criminal Jin to a fixed term of 20 years in prison.

The political and law department of Jinzhou Municipality has conscientiously summed up the experiences and lessons of this case and decided to conduct a full-scale reexamination of smash-and-grab cases already disposed of and to deal anew with those cases which have not been handled properly.

Jin Dechun was originally a worker of the Liaoning transistor plant (now the Jinzhou transistor plant). He got his start by causing rebellion during the "Great Cultural Revolution," and became deputy secretary of the Jinzhou Municipal CPC Committee and vice chairman of the municipal revolutionary committee. On 18 August 1976 he organized and directed more than 1,000 people to a certain PLA unit, grabbed more than 3,000 firearms and provoked an armed struggle, a serious bloody incident which resulted in the death of 21 people and the injury of 76 people. He then led an armed team to dynamite a building, resulting in several tens of thousand yuan in damages to the state and permanently disabling a worker. He also used his position and authority to rape and seduce 12 women, including the dependents of servicemen, unmarried women and female students. One of the women was so ashamed that she threw herself in the path of a passing train and committed suicide. A certain person who expressed resentment over the debauchery of his wife was actually thrown into prison for 47 days by Jin on falsified facts. Jin Dechun also took advantage of his position and authority to practice graft and appropriated more than 1,200 yuan in public property.

Based on his aforementioned crimes, the Jinzhou Municipal Political and Law Department arrested him in December 1978. During his detention, Jin Dechun refused to acknowledge his crimes, persuaded individual personnel in the prison to smuggle out letters for him and clamored for 2 reversals of the verdict. At the same time, he continued to commit crimes and went so far as to brazenly engage in indecent activities with a female inmate. When he was tried in an open court on 14 September last year, he actually hurled insults at the public prosecutor, ridiculed the court trial as "playing a joke on history," boasted "I will bring actions against you when I get out" and behaved in a most arrogant manner. According to the stipulations of the "criminal law," this crime of planning and directing the grabbing of firearms, which caused 97 casualties, should receive a sentence of not less than 10 years' imprisonment, but the Jinzhou Municipal Intermediate People's Court sentenced Jin to only 5 years' imprisonment and also entered the defense he made on his own behalf in the written judgment. On 6 April this year, when Jin was released after completing his sentence, his wife and friends sent out three jeeps and a motor car to greet his release. The sight of them swaggering through the streets caused great resentment among the masses.

The broad masses of people vigorously demanded a retrial of this case. The president of the Jinzhou Municipal Intermediate People's Court exercised his supervisory power, corrected the mistake of imposing too light a sentence on Jin Dechun's serious crimes, rescinded the original verdict and ordered Jin back to prison on 29 May. On 26 August, the municipal intermediate people's court organized a collegiate bench of judges to hold another public hearing on this case. They found Jin Dechun guilty of the crimes of causing injuries resulting in the deaths of people, indecency and graft and sentenced him on all counts in accordance with the principle of punishment for multiple crimes.

LIAONING RIBAO ON STRUGGLE AGAINST 'GANG OF FOUR'

[Commentator's article: "We Must Pay Attention to the Struggle Against the Remnant Forces of Lin Biao and the 'Gang of Four'"]

[Text] The smash-and-grab archcriminal Jin Dechun has finally received his just desserts according to law. The entire process of this case tells us that we must pay attention to the struggle against the remnant forces of Lin Biao and the "gang of four."

Liaoning was a disaster area deeply affected by the interference and sabotage of the Lin Biao-Jiang Qing counterrevolutionary cliques and their factionalist forces. Since the smashing of the "gang of four," we have already wrested back the partial power usurped by them. Some of the factionalist elements are accepting education and reform and some of the people guilty of serious mistakes are gradually changing their stand and correcting their mistakes. However, even now there are still some factionalist remnant forces who are not very sincere and they continue to engage in contests of strength with us in various forms. They harbor resentment against investigation and examination and refuse to acknowledge their guilt or admit mistakes. They also complain and voice grievances and carry out all manner of activities to reverse the verdict everywhere they go. Some hold clandestine meetings, spread rumors and gossip, maliciously attack the line, principles and policies of the party and slander the leading comrades of the Central Committee. Some threaten and intimidate the people in charge of screening and the mass activists, looking for an opportunity to make reprisals and try to stir up trouble. Some clamor such nonsense as "economic compensation for political losses" to engage in such activities as graft and embezzlement, giving and receiving bribes, speculation and manipulation, and also smuggling and swindling. Some spread slanderous rumors to stir up "earthquakes," and even rig elections to overthrow the correct leadership of party organizations. Some disguise themselves as activities to reworm themselves into the leading body, and are even chosen as "successors" about to be entrusted with heavy responsibility. All this clearly shows that our struggle against the remnant forces of Lin Biao and the "gang of four" is by no means over.

However, faced with the actual facts of the class struggle, some of the comrades have nevertheless turned a blind eye and a deaf ear to them. They perhaps think that with the abolishing of the slogan "take class struggle as the key link" the class struggle also no longer exists, and they can lie back and relax and concentrate on construction. Or perhaps they think that as the game is over for Lin Biao and the "gang of four," their remnant forces are only "small fry that cannot make waves," and consequently they have mentally not taken proper precautions against them. Or perhaps they are tangled up in factionalism and cannot forget their "brothers in rebellion" of former years or their "gratitude for past protection," so they pay no attention to revolutionary principles and stands and forget party discipline and state law. This kind of mentality has left a gap open to the offensive of the remnant forces of Lin Biao and the "gang of four." The trees may prefer calm but the wind will not subside. Under the new situation, class struggle objectively exists independent of man's will. Although the remnant forces of Lin Biao and the "gang of four" are small in number, they are however, very powerful. When the climate is right, they will rise up to make trouble. If we allow them to have their way, they will bring about unpredictable damage to our cause. Regarding this situation, our comrades must keep a sober head.

In struggling against them, we must carry out work in accordance with the policy of the party, seek truth from facts and deal with them in different ways. We must strictly distinguish and correctly deal with the two different characters of the contradiction. We must make a distinction between the comrades who made serious mistakes and the renmant forces of Lin Biao and the "gang of four." We must also make a distinction between the different conditions and adopt different methods to deal with them. We must resolutely attack those who should be attacked and must make a success of the work of transforming those who should be divided and won over. As for those willing to correct their mistakes, we must teach them to change their stand, cast off their mental burden and exert themselves in work. As for those who do not admit their mistakes and try to reverse the verdict, we must clearly criticize and warn them and teach them to recognize and correct their mistakes. As for those who stubbornly stick to their reactionary stand, refuse to repent and even carry out counterattacks, we must take resolute measures and firmly attack them, for to tolerate evil is to abet it.

GANSU'S FENG JIXIN ON SOCIALIST MODERNIZATION

SK090943 Lanzhou Gansu Provincial Service in Mandarin 1125 GMT 7 Sep 82

[Text] According to a XINHUA report, Feng Jixin, delegate to the 12th CPC Congress and first secretary of the Gansu Provincial CPC Committee, said at a panel discussion: Comrade Deng Xiaoping's opening speech and Comrade Hu Yaobang's report fully embody the idea of combining Marxist theory of continued revolution and the theory of the stages of the development of revolution. They are documents of historic importance guiding the people throughout the country to fight for opening up a new situation for socialist modernization. They will certainly lead us from one victory to another greater one and enrich our party, our socialist undertakings, our country and our people.

Comrade Feng Jixin analyzed favorable conditions in six fields for creating a new situation for socialist modernization:

1. The line has been corrected. Over the past few years, particularly since the party's third plenary session, efforts have been made to bring an end to chaos and straighten things out and correct political, ideological and organizational lines have been set forth again. Correct policies have been restored in economic, political and cultural fields. In addition, a series of new correct policies have been formulated in line with the new situation.

2. The situation has been stabilized. The present leading core of the CPC Central Committee is united and strong, which has won the trust and support of the whole party, the whole army and the people throughout the country. This is where the key to ensuring the steady development of socialist modernization lies.

3. The contingent has been strengthened. Following a few years of readjustment and consolidation, leading bodies at all levels have been replenished and strengthened. Take our province, for example. Since the third plenary session, the structure of the cadres contingent has been greatly improved to meet the requirements of building revolutionary, younger, better educated and more professional competent leading bodies. This has provided a reliable organizational guarantee for correct implementation of the party's line and for opening up an all-round new situation.

4. The people's complaints have been resolved. Through conscientious summing up of historical experiences and lessons, the masses of party members, cadres and people have deepened their understanding of the correctness of the party's line, principles and policies adopted since the third plenary session and enhanced their awareness in implementing them. The implementation of various economic policies has greatly aroused the enthusiasm of the masses for building socialism. The people in and outside the party have increased their confidence in the accomplishment of the four modernizations. This has laid a reliable mass foundation for fulfilling the new, great tasks.

5. The economy has been enlivened. The economy as a whole has been brought to a sound path of steady development. In our province, agriculture has been restored and developed. Despite serious disasters 2 years in succession, a fairly good harvest was reaped in this year's summer grain, which was 10 percent more (?than last year). Through readjustment, our province's industry is being restored and its economic results has been improved. From January to July this year, our industrial output value was 8.7 percent higher than in the corresponding 1981 period. This has laid a fairly good material foundation for the future sound and steady development of the national economy.

6. Our work has been done more effectively. Thanks to the continuous restoration and development of the party's find traditions, the work style of cadres at various levels has improved. They have attached importance to reality in conducting investigations and studying and, proceeding from the reality, do their work in a down-to-earth manner. Such a good work style will certainly improve our work efficiency and have a positive influence on accelerating the progress of the four modernizations.

Comrade Feng Jixin said: While noticing the favorable conditions, we should also see the existing problems and difficulties. Due to our poor foundation and conditions, our province faces more arduous tasks and should exert greater efforts if we are to catch up with the country.

QINGHAI'S: LIANG BUTING ON AGRICULTURE TASKS

SK100850 Xining Qinghai Provincial Service in Mandarin 2330 GMT 8 Sep 82

[Text] According to a XINHUA report, Liang Buting, delegate to the 12th CPC Congress and first secretary of the Qinghai Provincial CPC Committee, said that Qinghai Province, although economically underdeveloped, is full of promise for achieving the goal of quadrupling the annual output value of industry and agriculture by the end of this century if efforts are made to fully understand the situation of the province and develop it's superiority.

Liang Buting said: Situated in the vast northwest area of the motherland, Qinghai is endowed with rich mineral resources and vast grasslands. According to initial survey, reserves of 35 mineral deposits of the province rank among the top 10 in the country. Among these, 10 rank first. In addition, the province has 500 million mu of usable grasslands, a very good condition for animal husbandry development. Traffic of the Qinghai-Xizang railway has been extended to Golmud. The Longyangxia hydropower station, the largest one on the upper reaches of the Huang He, will begin generating power in 1985. Oil exploration in Qaidam is vigorously progressing. All these are also favorable conditions for developing Qinghai more rapidly.

Liang Buting said: During the next 20 years, we should proceed from the actual situation in Qinghai to give play to our superority in rich resources and to tap the potential in agriculture and animal husbandry so as to catch up with the construction of the country. In industry, in addition to fully developing our capacity, we should accelerate oil exploration, development of hydropower stations on the Huang He and the construction of national key projects, such as the Chaerhan potash fertilizer plant and Xitieshan lead-zinc mine, vigorously prepare for the construction of [words indistinct] aluminum plant, expand or establish building a material industry and a salt chemical industry and comprehensively utilize animal by-products.

In animal husbandry, we should partially change the backward situation in which herdsmen lead a nomadic life for a long period of time, establish stable bases for growing forage grass and fodder in winter-spring pastures, carry out intensive farming, strengthen the protection of natural grasslands and improve and utilize them rationally. In addition, focusing on achieving better economic results, we should improve animal mix, speed up animal turnover and raise the marketable rate of animals. In agriculture, the dredging of rivers, transformation of low-yielding farmlands in (Chuanshui) areas, utilization of the snow of Kunlun mountain and the water of the Longyangxia reservoir, harnessing of the Huang He, the improvement of the Huangshui basin, reform of the farming system in the warm eastern areas of the province, scientific farming and the development of various types of production should all be carried out in a planned way.

Liang Buting also sadi: Qinghai's economic development should be effected mainly by self-reliance and hard work. However, we should coordiate well our partial plans with the national plans, promote economic cooperation with other provinces and municipalities and help each other to develop the strong points and offset the weak ones.

SHAANXI MEETING STUDIES HU YAOBANG REPORT

HK091220 Xian Shaanxi Provincial Service in Mandarin 0500 GMT 9 Sep 82

[Text] Yesterday the Shaanxi Provincial CPC Committee held an enlarged meeting of its standing committee to seriously study and discuss the report made by Comrade Hu Yaobang at the 12th CPC Congress on behalf of the CPC Central Committee and the speeches delivered by Comrade Ye Jianying and Comrade Chen Yun at the 12th CPC Congress.

In their speeches, comrades unanimously held: Comrade Hu Yaobang's report is a programmatic document for our country to open up a new prospect of socialist modernization in an all-round way and a mobilization order for the whole party to strive for the great goal in the year 2000. The report sums up the historical victory won over the past 6 years since the smashing of the Jiang Qing counterrevolutionary clique, particularly since the 3d Plenary Session of the 11th CPC Central Committee. It puts forth the great task to open up a new prospect of socialist modernization in an all-round way and completely conforms to the desires of the whole party and the people throughout the country and to the actual situation of our province. Together with all party members and cadres and the masses throughout the province, we must bravely shoulder this great historical mission.

The comrades present at the meeting said: The core and basis of the party's line is the ideological line. Our party has been able to accomplish the arduous task of turning chaos into order in the guiding ideology, win an important victory in turning chaos into order in actual work and effect a historical and great change.

One of the especially important reasons is that we have resolutely broken through the dogmatism and serious shackles of the personality cult and have reestablished the Marxist ideological line of seeking truth from facts. Therefore, we must, in actual work, adhere from start to finish to the ideological line of proceeding from reality, linking theory with practice and seeking truth from facts so as to ensure the correct implementation of the political line and the organizational line.

The comrades present at the meeting also emphatically pointed out: To strive to make a fundamental improvement in our province's financial and economic situation, in the general mood of society and the work style of the party in the next 5 years, the most crucial and decisively significant work is to use communist ideology as a weapon, really rectify the work style of the party and leadership groups at all levels, do a good job of cooperation between new and veteran cadres and promote a large number of middle-aged and young cadres who have both ability and political integrity and are young and energetic to leadership posts so as to make the rank of cadres revolutionized, young, knowledgeable and professional.

The meeting held: The documents of the 12th CPC Congress are of great epoch-making significance. It demanded: Party organizations at all levels must strengthen leadership and study, publicize and implement well the spirit of the documents of the 12th CPC Congress.

XI ZHONGXUN GREETS SHAANXI THEATER ANNIVERSARY

[Text] Xian, September 1 (XINHUA) -- The 70th anniversary of the establishment of China's oldest theatrical organization, "Yi Shu She (Society To Change Old Customs)," was marked with a five-day celebration which closed here today. The society was founded by a group of intellectuals who, inspired by the 1911 revolution, wants to "change old customs and educate the society with new ideas." The society had the support of China's great man of letters Lu Xun who often visited the theater while he was teaching in Xian in 1924.

As part of the celebration, a collection of Qin Qiang, an opera popular in Shaanxi and its neighboring provinces, presented by "Yi Shu She" has been published by the Shaanxi people's publishing house. Jointly sponsored by the Chinese Dramatists Association and the Culture Bureau of Shaanxi Province, the opening meeting was attended by a thousand people. Xi Zhongxun, member of the secretariat of the party's Central Committee, He Jingzhi, deputy head of the party's Propaganda Department as well as noted writers and dramatists extended their congratulations to the society.

Before liberation, the society presented a large number of plays promoting patriotism, democracy and science and trained hundreds of Qin Qiang opera actors and actresses of the five northwestern provinces. Since 1949 the theater has won national and provincial awards for its performances. Two of its productions have been filmed. Its recent production of "Xian Incident" was awarded first national prize. In 1981 a Qin Qiang opera troupe with most of the members from "Yi Shu She" toured Japan.

PAI WAN-HSIANG ON COMMUNIST CHINESE TACTICS

OW090353 Taipei CNA in English 0254 GMT 9 Sep 82

[Text] Taipei, Sept. 9 (CNA) -- Pai Wan-hsiang, director of Mainland Operations Department of the Kuomintang Central Committee, Wednesday called on the people to cultivate a common understanding that communism can only bring disasters to China, and that only through the three principles of the people can China be unified and saved.

Pai made the remarks at a joint meeting of the KMT's Central Committee members and Central Advisory Committee members held at the armed forces officers club with Yang Lian-Kung, an advisory member, presiding.

He pointed out the present 12th National Congress of the Chinese Communist Party will continue to maintain the so-called Marxist-Leninist line. "It's not correct to say that the congress will deviate from the Maoist or leftist line because whether the Chinese Communists are adopting the rightist line or the leftist line, they are actually all Communist lines," Pai said.

Throughout the Chinese Communist Party history, the Communist leaders have been carrying out the continuing power struggles over the two line. Pai said, "they have never been able to get out of this vicious cycle of conflicts over the line of policies."

As to the united front tactics, Pai said, the Chinese Communists have been very consistent and they have set up organs at various levels of the "government" and the party to implement their tricks.

It is estimated that at least 110,000 "government" and party cadres are engaged in the united front tricks against the Republic of China, he said.

"These cadres are utilizing several times more of other people in attempting to seize Taiwan with peace offensive."

However, Pai said, after the Chinese Communists have failed to achieve their purpose through the united front tricks, they resorted to the attempts of trying to "isolate Taiwan externally and subvert it internally."

For example, the Peiping regime tried to pressurize the United States not to sell weapons to this country, while it is also using the so-called "Taiwan independence elements" to creat division within this nation.

Pai expects the Peiping regime will continue to use the united front tricks to try to take over Taiwan in the future.

SOUTH CHINA MORNING POST VIEWS THATCHER VISIT

HK090110 Hong Kong SOUTH CHINA MORNING POST in English 9 Sep 82 p 2

[By Political Editor David Choi: "Maggie's Visit Must Be Seen as a Beginning"]

[Excerpt] September 23 will be an eventful day for Hong Kong with two important items on its political diary.

On that day, the British prime minister, Mrs Margaret Thatcher, will be having talks with Chinese Government officials in Beijing, and the Hong Kong question will be on her agenda.

Locally, undemocratic Hong Kong will be going to the polls for the second time in six months, under a universal franchise -- this time to elect 74 district board members in the urban area.

Both events will be keenly watched to see what bearing they have on Hong Kong's political future.

Mrs Thatcher is expected to draw attention to the crucial issue of what happens to Hong Kong after the New Territories lease expires in 1997.

On the other hand, the urban district board elections mark another important step in the government's new-styled district administration scheme which is aimed at boosting public participation in running local affairs.

Given our people's increasing awareness of the uncertainty over their future, there is growing public hope that Mrs Thatcher will bring back good news from Beijing.

This is particularly so because the governor, Sir Edward Youde, has apparently decided that now is the time for all sides to initiate some serious dialogue on the subject.

Before Mrs Thatcher and her entourage arrive in China on September 22, she and key members of her Cabinet will have been briefed twice by Sir Edward on the Hong Kong situation -- the latest occasion being this week when Sir Edward also had five UMELCO [Unofficial Member of the Legislative Council] members with him.

It is proper, and not before time, that due weight is now being given to the issue by Sir Edward's administration and Mrs Thatcher's government.

But there is an important factor that people should be made fully aware of. It would be dangerous if people's hopes were to run unrealistically high and Mrs Thatcher be expected to produce quick and all-embracing results.

Hong Kong must avoid working itself up to a point where any letdown could cause another crisis in confidence, thus considerably weakening the territory's situation even before the lease expires.

Barring any surprise announcement, we should be prepared to accept that the best Mrs Thatcher can get from China is agreement that Beijing and London have decided to start some form of dialogue on Hong Kong's future.

In the meantime, the urban district board elections provide a good opportunity for people to show that they are positive about Hong Kong being their home.

IDA TO PROVIDE $7 BILLION TO POOR COUNTRIES

OW101726 Beijing XINHUA in English 1627 GMT 10 Sep 82

[Text] Beijing, September 10 (XINHUA) -- The International Development Association (IDA) will provide seven-billion dollars in 1983 and 1984 to commit to easy-term credits to low-income countries. Final agreement on that plan was reached in Toronto at the 37th meeting of the World Bank and International Monetary Fund.

The agreement also included additional two-billion dollars to be contributed to IDA, an affiliate of the World Bank, by 31 countries in 1984. The United States, one of the 32 countries who contributed funds to IDA in recent years, did not join the agreement this year.

The members of the World Bank reached an agreement in 1980 on additional funds for IDA. They agreed that the countries concerned would contribute an additional 12 billion dollars in 1981 to 1983 fiscal year, of that the United States would provide 3.24 billion dollars.

Because the United States has fallen behind on its contribution and will not complete its 1981-1983 contributions until 1984, programs were cut 35 percent, from 4.1 billion dollars to 2.7 billion in fiscal 1982.

The U.S. delegates pledged at the annual meeting that the U.S. Government will try its best to contribute the amount decided in the 1980 agreement.

At the annual meeting, which ended yesterday, the 32 countries agreed that they will soon start negotiations over contributions to IDA in 1985 to 1987.

GENEVA MEETING CONDEMNS HUMAN RIGHTS VIOLATIONS

OW121041 Beijing XINHUA in English 0801 GMT 12 Sep 82

[Text] Geneva, September 11 (XINHUA) -- The 35th session of the U.N. Sub-Commission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities ended here yesterday, with participants condemning the Japanese militarists for the bacteriological weapon tests in China during World War II. The session adopted two resolutions urging withdrawal of foreign troops from Afghanistan and Kampuchea, and respect for human rights in those countries.

During the 26-day meeting, British expert Benjamin Whitaker and American expert John Carey said thousands of innocent Chinese were killed by the Japanese invaders in their bacteriological weapon tests in Harbin, northeast China, during the war of aggression against China.

The Japanese authorities should bring to trial those responsible for the atrocities, the two experts said.

A Chinese observer presented the session with a written document on this issue on September 8, which was then circulated as an official document of the session, stating that "the aggressive war against China waged by the Japanese militarists brought tremendous disasters to numerous Chinese people and people in other countries including Japan."

"The Chinese people and people in other countries should never forget the disasters and sufferings brought about by the aggressive war, and strive to prevent a repetition of that unfortunate chapter of history," the document said.

The resolution on Afghan issue said that withdrawal of foreign forces from that country "is essential for restoring human rights" there.

It reaffirmed that the Afghan people have the right to "determine their own form of government and to choose their own economic, political and social system free from outside interference, subversion, coercion or constraint of any kind."

Calling for an immediate withdrawal of all foreign forces from Kampuchea, the session stated that a political solution should be based on self-determination for the Kampuchean people and respect for all other human rights.

The resolution on the Kampuchea issue said that all parties concerned should "take steps to ensure, following the withdrawal of foreign forces from Kampuchea, that the Kampuchean people choose their own representatives to a constitutional assembly without foreign interference, in an atmosphere of freedom and under United Nations supervision."

The session also adopted two other resolutions calling for respect for human rights in the Israeli-occupied Arab territories and in southern Africa.

PRC-U.S. JOINT VENTURE AIMS TO PRODUCE SEALS

OW121033 Beijing XINHUA in English 0709 GMT 12 Sep 82

[Text] Wuhan, September 12 (XINHUA) -- The Hubei-Parker seal maker, a Sino-U.S. joint venture now under construction in Wuhan, capital of Hubei Province, is scheduled to go into production in the first quarter of 1983, XINHUA learned today.

The seal maker, the first joint venture undertaken in Hubei, central China, involves participation of the Hubei motor vehicle industrial company and the Parker-Hannifin Corporation of Ohio, U.S.A. Under terms of the contract signed in November last year, the projected factory will be equipped with more than 100 imported key machines and testing apparatus, complete with home-made maintenance facilities.

In the five years following its completion, the factory is expected to produce 198.24 million pieces of oil-proof, gas-proof and leakproof rubber sealings for motor vehicles, ships and trains. An estimated 65 percent of the products will be for export.

The factory area now covers 2,090 square meters, nearly half of which is devoted to workshops. Plastering, installation and testing of equipment are now well under way.

Lu Fengming, chairman of the board of directors of the joint venture, told XINHUA that the effort is aimed at producing top-quality products for home and overseas markets by effectively using China's raw materials and manpower, and the Parker-Hannifin Corporation's up-to-date technologies. The Chinese side will contribute 51 percent of the 990,000 U.S. dollars investment involved in the first year, while the remainder will come from the U.S. side, Lu Fengming said.

FENG YUOLAN HONORED BY COLUMBIA UNIVERSITY

OW111903 Beijing XINHUA in English 1538 GMT 11 Sep 82

[Text] New York, September 10 (XINHUA) -- Noted Chinese philosopher Feng Youlan was awarded this afternoon an honorary doctor of letters degree by Columbia University, his alma mater, for his "long tradition of Chinese humanistic scholarship which has sought to learn from the present as well as the past."

Professor Feng earned his PH.d degree at Columbia University under famous philosopher John Dewey in 1923.

At an academic convocation in the university, the 87-year-old Chinese philosopher said the honor conferred on him is not a personal honor. "It is a token of the appreciation of the American scholarly world for the scholarship of the Chinese nation. It is a token of the continuing development of the traditional friendly relations between the Chinese and American peoples," he said.

He made a lengthy statement on development of philosophy in China over the past several decades and his own philosophical ideas. He cited a verse from the Chinese classic "Book of Poetry" which says "although Chou is an old nation, it has a new mission." Then he declared "the ancient nation of China now has a new mission, and that mission is modernization. I'll work to preserve the identity and individuality of the ancient nation and yet, at the same time, to promote the fulfillment of this new mission."

Columbia University President Michael I. Sovern also spoke at the ceremony.

Several hundred scholars, students, members of the university's faculty and Chinese-American scholars from eastern area of America attended the convocation.

KYODO CITES OFFICIAL ON JAPANESE CENOTAPH

OW120441 Tokyo KYODO in English 0422 GMT 12 Sep 82

[Text] Beijing, Sept 12 KYODO -- A senior Chinese Government official has said the planned construction of a cenotaph in memory of Japan-created Manchukuo in northeastern China may damage Tokyo-Beijing relations.

"Construction of such a monument will hurt the sentiment of the Chinese people," State Councillor Ji Pengfei said Saturday when he met here with Japan Socialist Party Vice Chairman Makoto Tanabe.

"We would respond to this by putting up a monument in memory of the Japanese invaders," he was quoted as saying. "Then what will happen to China-Japan relations?"

The cenotaph construction plan, being promoted by former Japanese Prime Minister Nobusuke Kishi, has outraged people living in northeastern China.

Kishi was a senior government official of Manchukuo, which was established by the Japanese military in 1932 and collasped in 1945 at the end of World War II.

Ji also referred to the just-settled school textbook dispute and said: "We are certain that the Japanese Government will take concrete action as promised (in defusing the two-month-long diplomatic crisis)."

"We only hope such a problem will not arise again," he was quoted as telling Tanabe.

Ji, a former vice premier, is now a member of the 10-member State Council created earlier this year.

[Text] Beijing, Sept 12 KYODO -- Chinese Vice Premier Wan Li said China will welcome a visit by Japanese Prime Minister Zenko Suzuki to China late this month while stating the textbook controversy was settled, Japanese Agriculture, Forestry and Fisheries Minister Kichiro Tazawa said Sunday.

In a meeting with Tazawa at the Great Hall of the People here, Wan asked Tazawa to convey a hearty welcome of Wan and Premier Zhao Ziyang to Suzuki, Tazawa later told reporters.

Wan also proposed talks on development of the Sanjiang Plains in Heilongjiang Province, northeastern China, under way with Japan's technical cooperation, during Suzuki's visit to China starting September 26.

Tazawa told reporters Japan will send experts or conduct talks through diplomatic channels on economic aid in addition to the technical cooperation for the project.

Japan has been carrying out a three-year development survey at a 40,000-hectare model area in the 10-million-hectare Sanjiang Plains, most of it undeveloped, at a cost of yen 1 billion since last year at China's request for Japan's technical cooperation.

Tazawa will leave here Monday for home.

[Text] Tokyo, September 3 (XINHUA) -- More than 2,000 Japanese attended a rally here today, sponsored by the Liberal Democratic Party and pressing for the return of Japan's northern territories from the Soviet Union.

The northern territories involved are the four islands of Habomai, Shikotan, Kunashiri and Etorofu, which were occupied by the Soviet Union during the Second World War.

A resolution passed at the rally called on people "to unite as one and determinedly carry on the struggle for the return of the territories until this goal is attained."

The resolution voiced "strong opposition to the conclusion of a good neighbour and friendship treaty with the Soviet Union at the expense of shelving the territory problem." In addition, the resolution demanded that "a peace treaty with the Soviet Union only be signed under the precondition of the solution" of the dispute.

The rally was the second one of its kind organized by the Liberal Democratic Party with the first one held Sept. 3 last year.

Susumo Nikaido, secretary general, and other leaders of the party spoke at the rally.

[Text] Beijing, September 12 (XINHUA) -- The Foreign Ministry of the People's Republic of China today sent a note to the Vietnamese Embassy to China, strongly protesting against the intrusion into China's airspace by Vietnamese war planes.

The note points out that at 11:46 to 11:48 A.M. on September 10, two MIG-21's of the Vietnamese Air Force intruded into China's airspace on reconnaissance missions over the city of Ping Xiang and Ningming County of China's Guangxi Zhuang Autonomous Region. "This is a grave provocative incident purposely created by the Vietnamese authorities. It once again proves that the Vietnamese Foreign Ministry was hypocritical when it proposed on August 14 that hostile acts be suspended along the border area during National Day celebrations of both countries. This proposal is but a smoke screen put up by the Vietnamese authorities to cover up their intensified creation of tension along the Sino-Vietnamese border area," the note says.

"The Chinese Government hereby lodges a strong protest against the dispatching of airforce planes by the Vietnamese authorities to intrude into China's airspace, and solemnly demands that the Vietnamese side immediately stop all its activities of provocation on and intrusion into the Chinese border, or the Vietnamese authorities must bear full responsibility for any consequences arising therefrom," the note stresses.

[Text] Paris, September 11 (XINHUA) -- Samdech Norodom Sihanouk, chairman of Democratic Kampuchea, said here today that the only way for Kampuchea to regain its independence is to fight a national war of resistance against Vietnam.

In an interview with AFP today, Sihanouk said: "Any ways and means to solve the problem with Hanoi must be through waging a war of resistance. The Vietnamese Government will only understand the language of arms."

"Since Vietnam's rejection of independence to Kampuchea, our responsibility has been to fight," Sihonouk stressed.

Sihanouk arrived here on September 8 on a private visit. He will leave for Conakry, captial of Guinea, this afternoon before he goes to New York to attend the forthcoming U.N. General Assembly session.

THAI MINISTER SEES 'MASSIVE' SRV DEPLOYMENT

OW111854 Beijing XINHUA in English 1838 GMT 11 Sep 82

[Text] Bangkok, September 11 (XINHUA) -- The recent massing of Vietnamese troops along Kampuchea's western border gives the lie to Hanoi's proclamation of "partial withdrawal of troops", said Thai Foreign Minister Sitthi Sawetsila today.

Sitthi, who is the current chairman of the ASEAN standing committee, was speaking to reporters at the airport here upon his return from a three-day visit to Singapore and Malaysia.

Vietnam's massive military deployment on the border and introduction of large numbers of tanks and other heavy weapons into Kampuchea may be part of its preparations for an offensive in the coming dry season, and Thailand has to follow this closely, he said.

He said he had exchanged views with leaders of Singapore and Malaysia about the seat of Democratic Kampuchea in the United Nations. "We believe that our stand on this problem is likely to receive wider support," he said.

The tripartite Coalition Government of Democratic Kampuchea, he said, "is a success and has the support of the majority of the people. At present, it is seeking wider support and ASEAN is also working systematically to help bring about this."

THAI-KAMPUCHEAN AIR RELIEF ROUTE CLOSED

OW101431 Beijing XINHUA in English 1208 GMT 10 Sep 82

[Text] Bangkok, September 10 (XINHUA) -- The direct air route between Bangkok and Phnom Penh for transporting International Red Cross (IRC) relief goods to Phnom Penh has been cancelled following consultations between the Thai Government and IRC officials early last month.

This is revealed by Thai authoritative sources to the NATION REVIEW here yesterday.

The Bangkok-Phnom Penh air route was opened in October, 1979. The IRC and the UNHCR (Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees) had two chartered flights to Phnom Penh every week, carrying relief goods meant for the villagers and children in the areas under the control of the Heng Samrin regime.

The opening of this air route had earlier caused controversy which led to the suspension for a time of the air link. Thai Government security officials complained that those relief goods were actually delivered to the Vietnamese occupation troops in Phnom Penh.

The termination of the air route will leave IRC to seek other ways for delivering its relief goods to Phnom Penh.

U.S.-WEST EUROPE PIPELINE DISPUTE EXAMINED

OW130527 Beijing Domestic Service in Mandarin 1100 GMT 6 Sep 82

[Commentary on current events: "The Controversy Between the United States and Western Europe as Demonstrated in the Natural Gas Dispute"]

[Text] Recently, the United States and Western Europe have been locked in open dispute over Western Europe's insistence on supplying capital and equipment to, and buying natural gas from, the Soviet Union. Neither side will give in. Both sides have taken legal and administrative measures to impose sanctions or taken countersanction measures. The controversy has intensified with time. Mounting tension in relations between the Western allies has rarely been seen in post-war years. Western public pinion has widely expressed its serious concern over the repercussions the widening rift between the United States and Western Europe might bring to present and future international relations.

The natural gas dispute is of long standing. As early as the mid-1970's, Western European countries and the Soviet Union had already negotiated on the long-term supply of natural gas. After repeated bargaining, agreement was reached among West Germany, France and Italy and the Soviet Union at the end of last year and the beginning of this. The agreement called for the construction of a large natural gas pipeline from Siberia to Western Europe, with Western European assistance, in exchange for long-term supply of Soviet natural gas to Western Europe. According to the agreement, the Western European countries are to provide the Soviet Union with approximately U.S. $10 to 15 billion of badly needed loans for buying large steel pipes and technology from the West for the construction of this 5,000-kilometer pipeline. And, under the agreement, the Soviet Union would provide Western Europe with an annual supply of 40 billion cubic meters of natural gas for 25 years, beginning in 1984.

It is obvious that the deal has greatly benefitted the Soviet Uion. The Soviet Union can use Western Europe's financial and material resources to accelerate its exploration and utilization of domestic energy and complete the construction of oil and gas fields in Siberia in a relatively short period. At the same time, being Western Europe's major energy supplier, the Soviet Union can use it as leverage for applying pressure and exerting influence on Western Europe, thereby driving a wedge between Western Europe and the United States. For this reason, the United States has always opposed the deal and has emphatically pointed out that the huge loans and advanced technology and equipment provided by Western Europe will beef up the Soviet Union's strength and strengthen its arms expansion to seek military superiority. The United States is also worried that Western Europe's over dependence on the Soviet Union for energy supply will lead to the weakening of the West's overall strategy against the Soviet Union.

President Reagan has repeatedly put pressure on the Western European allies and asked them to abandon, or at least postpone the deal. However, the Western European countries, because of their own political needs and economic interests, have defied U.S. opposition and decided to sign agreements with the Soviet Union. Thus, the dispute between the United States and its Western European allies over the natural gas issue has become more open and intense daily.

At the end of last year, the Reagan administration announced U.S. economic sanctions against the Soviet Union and banned domestic U.S. firms and enterprises from providing technology and equipment for the construction of the Siberian natural gas pipeline. In June this year, the Reagan administration again announced the extension of the ban on the export of energy equipment to the Soviet Union by U.S. firms, to include U.S. subsidiaries in Western Europe and European firms producing pipeline equipment under U.S. license. Thus, the United States has attempted to obstruct the construction of the Siberian gas pipeline project by hardline measures.

But the results have turned out counter to U.S. wishes. The Western European countries have expressed their strong reaction to the U.S. strong measures, pointing out that these measures are unjust and dangerous, and asking the United States to abolish the export ban. At the same time, they have reasserted that Western Europe will honor agreements already signed with the Soviet Union and will carry out the natural gas pipeline project. They have also taken legal and administrative action to order foreign subsidiaries in their countries and domestic firms producing equipment under U.S. license to defy the U.S. ban.

By the end of August, shipments of compressors and steam turbines manufactured in France and Britain for the Siberian gas pipeline were already on their way to the Soviet Union. Meanwhile, the natural gas pipeline dispute is still going on.

The U.S.-Western European conflict is a concrete reflection of the long political and economic contradictions among the Western allies. First, following Western Europe's growing economic might, Western European countries are demanding a more equal role in their partnership with the United States. Currently, both the EEC's combined GNP and its share in international trade surpass those of the United States. Western European countries have grumbled about their subordinate role in the U.S.-EEC partnership. They are fed up with the U.S. superpower role as a self-styled leader of the league. In the natural gas dispute, the United States, styling itself as the Free World's leader, suddenly announced the extension of the export ban, without consulting its allies beforehand, and has arbitrarily demanded U.S. subsidiaries in other countries and European firms having close relations with U.S. firms to comply with the U.S. ban. This crude behavior has aroused the Western European countries' anger. Not only are France and West Germany opposed to the U.S. ban, but Britain and Italy have also taken countermeasures. The concerted actions taken by the Western European nations in the natural gas conflict have rarely been seen in the past.

Second, there are also differences between the United States and Western Europe in devising their strategy against the Soviet Union. Proceeding from the desire to struggle against the Soviet Union for hegemony, the United States seeks to check the Soviet Union in the diplomatic, economic and military fields. It asks its allies to follow this strategy and sacrifice certain economic interests. Although Western Europe feels uneasy about Soviet expansion and aggression and keeps a wary eye on the Soviet Union, it still stresses the need to maintain dialogue with the Soviet Union, due to its own position. It continues to develop trade with the Soviet Union in an effort to ease the tense situation in Europe.

From this natural gas deal, the Western European countries will not only obtain a steady supply of energy in the next supply in Europe, but will also fill orders amounting to billions of U.S. dollars from such a huge project. This will provide the Western European countries with a golden opportunity to extricate themselves from economic depression, increase employment and enliven their foreign trade.

The U.S. strategy against the Soviet Union is also contradictory in some aspects. While the United States is trying hard to oppose the natural gas pipeline deal between the Soviet Union and Western Europe, the United States itself has decided to extend its grain agreement with the Soviet Union, providing the Soviet Union with a huge amount of grain for its own gain. The French minister of agriculture made an ironic remark about the United States, saying: Reagan's motto may be "one may steal a horse while another may not look over the hedge."

In spite of the fierce dispute between the United States and Western Europe, they still share a unified strategic goal in resisting Soviet expansion. Neither side will pass the point of no return. At present, both the United States and Western Europe are looking for a compromise to reconcile the controversy over the natural gas deal.

U.S. IMPOSES SANCTIONS ON BRITISH COMPANY

OW101056 Beijing XINHUA in English 0826 GMT 10 Sep 82

[Text] Washington, September 9 (XINHUA) -- The U.S. Government today imposed sanctions on a British company which defied the U.S. embargo on the equipment for a Soviet gas pipeline project. The sanctions came immediately after a Soviet freighter left Glasgow, Scotland, with turbines made by John Brown Engineering Ltd., which uses U.S. General Electric rotors.

The sanctions prohibit John Brown Engineering from exporting U.S.-licensed oil and gas related products, services and technology.

The British company was the fourth European company penalized by the U.S. Government. Similar sanctions were imposed on two French companies and an Italian firm in the past two weeks.

It was reported that U.S. Defense Secretary Caspar Weinberger, who returned to Washington today after a three-day visit in London, had talked with British Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher over the pipeline issue, but both sides made no concessions from their positions.

U.S. Commerce Secretary Malcolm Baldrige said today the U.S. hopes that negotiations will resolve differences with the European countries over how to deal with the Soviet Union.

UK 'Regrets' Sanctions

OW102007 Beijing XINHUA in English 1940 GMT 10 Sep 82

[Text] London, September 10 (XINHUA) -- The British Government "very much regrets" the U.S. decision to impose sanctions on a British firm, the John Brown Engineering, for supplying turbines to the Siberian gas pipeline, a spokesman for the British prime minister's office said here today.

According to well-informed sources here, Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher was enraged by the U.S. sanctions. She is against any U.S. attempt to interfere in Britain's commerce and has publicly noted that Washington is continuing to sell wheat to Moscow, the sources added.

The British Trade Department also issued a statement today saying that Britain had no wish to escalate the row over President Reagan's embargo policy but was determined to defend its national interests. "It will endeavour to persuade the U.S. Government to rescind the order," the Trade Department said.

It was reported here that Britain today ordered two more firms to defy the U.S. embargo on equipment for the Siberian pipeline only hours after the U.S. Government announced sanctions against the John Brown Engineering. The two companies have contracts worth over 18 million dollars to supply the pipeline with fire-fighting gear and radio antennae.

POLAND SEEKS TRADE EXPANSION WITH USSR

OW111238 Beijing XINHUA in English 1227 GMT 11 Sep 82

[Text] Moscow, September 11 (XINHUA) -- Poland is seeking to expand its trade with the Soviet Union and the East European countries because of the U.S. and Western economic sanctions against it.

Polish Foreign Trade Minister Tadeusz Nestorowic revealed this in a press interview published in the latest issue of the Soviet weekly NEW TIMES. The sanctions imposed by the U.S. and other Western traders have aggravated Poland's economic troubles, he declared.

Last year the Western traders cut their exports of industrial raw material and products by 30.4 percent while Poland depended on the West for 40 percent of its imports, Nestorowic said.

Polish exports to the West last year decreased by 20 percent, contributing a 13 percent fall of the national income. Last year's total volume of Polish exports to the West could not even meet the payments of interests and outstanding foreign loans, he disclosed.

The situation became worse in the first four months of this year as the West further cut their exports to Poland by 43 percent, he said.

Meanwhile, imports from the Soviet Union increased 11 percent last year, boosting the total volume of Polish-Soviet trade to more than 8.1 billion rubles (5.7 billion dollars). The volume of barter trade with the Comecon (Council of Mutual Economic Assistance) countries, had also been on the increase in the 1970's Nestorowic recalled.

Now Poland is seeking help from the Comecon partners to make full use of its industrial potentials and complete its key projects, the minister said.

The Soviet Union had agreed to provide long-term loans to Poland and the East European countries had also agreed to reschedule Poland's repayments, he added.

SHULTZ DISCUSSES REAGAN'S MIDEAST PEACE PLAN

House Committee Testimony

OW101052 Beijing XINHUA in English 0706 GMT 10 Sep 82

[Text] Washington, September 9 (XINHUA) -- Secretary of State George Shultz said today that it is time to address the Palestinian issues "forcefully and directly" and that negotiations should be broadened to include Egypt, Israel, Jordan and the representatives of the Palestinian people.

Testifying before the House Foreign Affairs Committee on the Middle East question, Shultz asked for congressional support of President Reagan's plan which "offers a reasonable basis for a negotiated compromise among the parties."

In his proposals made on September first for what he called a "durable, just and lasting peace" in the area, Reagan called for Israeli withdrawal from the West Bank and Gaza and the final association of these territories with Jordan. But he refused to support the establishment of a Palestinian state and did not mention the PLO's role in the process.

Shultz told the committee today that he believed the withdrawal of Israeli armed forces from occupied territories and the right of all states in the Middle East to live in peace within secure and recognized boundaries are the two key principles in U.N. Security Council Resolution 242 which should "apply on all fronts."

He said the Palestinian problem "cannot be resolved through Israeli sovereignty or control over the West Bank and Gaza," but "we will also not support the formation of a Palestinian state," he added. He expressed support for "full autonomy giving the Palestinian inhabitants real authority over themselves."

He stressed his belief that the Camp David framework has the "necessary room for negotiations to fulfill the legitimate rights of the Palestinian people" and "to reach peace treaties between Israel and her neighbors."

Shultz said the United States wants a freeze on Israeli settlements in the occupied territories and will "not support their continuation as extraterritorial outposts," but neither will it support "efforts to deny Jews the opportunity to live in the West Bank and Gaza under the duly constituted governmental authority there, as Arabs live in Israel."

Shultz supported participation by the Palestinian inhabitants of east Jerusalem as well as those of the West Bank and Gaza Strip in elections under the self-government plan.

On Jerusalem's future status, he said that the United States does not recognize "unilateral acts with respect to final status issues." Jerusalem must be undivided and its status determined through negotiations, he added. He stressed the Reagan administration remains committed to Israel's security despite differences over the Reagan peace plan.

United Jewish Appeal Speech

OW130908 Beijing XINHUA in English 0809 GMT 13 Sep 82

[Text] New York, September 12 (XINHUA) -- U.S. Secretary of State George P. Shultz made a strong appeal here today to Israelis and Arabs to "come together at the bargaining table" to "talk about peace."

Making his first public appearance since assuming office tonight at the United Jewish Appeal National Hineni leadership meeting -- a group of wealthy Jewish Americans each of whom donates over 100,000 dollars annually to the United Jewish Appeal (UJA) campaigns, Shultz said "there is no need now to agree on any principle but one -- that is the need to come together at the bargaining table to talk. To talk about differences; to talk about aspirations; to talk about peace."

Shultz cited the U.N. Security Council Resolution 242, the Camp David accords and the U.S. President's speech of September 1 as the three basic documents to establish peace in the Middle East.

However, the U.S. position on the Middle East problem as elaborated by its secretary of state today is heavily biased in favour of Israel. The U.S. commitment to Israeli security and to "genuine peace", Shultz said, "grows out of a sense of moral obligation but also out of strategic interest." "A strong, secure Israel is in our interests and the interests of peace," he asserted.

Ignoring the aspirations of the Arabs for the restoration of the Palestinian rights to self-determination, Shultz reassured Israel that the United States "will not support an independent Palestinian state." "There is nothing that says that Palestinian self-government in association with Jordan must lead inevitably to a Palestinian state," he said.

Shultz warned the Arabs who fail to join the peace process not to miss the present opportunity. "An opportunity for peace that may not come again soon," he said.

He specially called on Jordan and representatives of the "Palestinian inhabitants of the occupied territories" to come to negotiate with Israel. He did not mention the PLO as a full partner to the peace process, although it has been widely recognized as the sole legal representative of the Palestinian people.

Committing the United States to be a full partner in the negotiations, Shultz noted: "The President's initiative contains firm American principles; we will not depart from them."

FURTHER MATERIALS ON 12TH ARAB LEAGUE SUMMIT

Conference Concludes

OW101405 Beijing XINHUA in English 1250 GMT 10 Sep 82

[Text] Fez, Morocco, September 9 (XINHUA) -- The 12th Arab League summit came to a successful close this evening (23 pm local time).

At the closing ceremony presided over by Moroccan King Hassan II, Moroccan Minister of State in Charge of Foreign Affairs Mihammed Bou'cetta (spokesman of the summit) read out the final declaration which consists of four parts concerning the Arab-Israeli conflict, Israel's aggression against Lebanon, the Arab stand on the Gulf war and the issue in the Horn of Africa.

The declaration said that in view of the grave and delicate situation the Arab nation faces and its historical responsibility, the participating Arab leaders discussed all important topics proposed by the summit.

The summit extended respect to the struggle against Israeli aggression waged by the Palestinian, Lebanese and Syrian people. It reiterated support for the Palestinian people's struggle for their inalienable national rights.

The declaration said that the summit had adopted following principles in accordance with the Middle East peace plans proposed by Tunisian President Habib Bourguiba and Saudi King Fahd:

1 -- Israeli withdrawal from all territories occupied in the six-day war of June 1967, including the holy city of Jerusalem;

2 -- Dismantlement of Jewish settlements built on those territories since 1967;

3 -- Guaranteed freedom of worship for all religious faiths in Jerusalem's holy places;

4 -- Reaffirmation of "the Palestinian people's national and inalienable rights under the leadership of the Palestine Liberation Organization, its sole and legitimate representative." Compensation for the losses of all Palestinians unwilling to return to their homeland;

5 -- The West Bank and Gaza Strip shall be placed under United Nations' trusteeship for an interim period not exceeding several months;

6 -- The creation of an independent Palestinian state with Jerusalem as its capital;

7 -- The U.N. Security Council shall guarantee peace for all states in the region, including the independent Palestinian state;

8 -- The Security Council shall guarantee the observance of these principles.

The declaration said that the summit strongly denounced Israel's aggression against Lebanon and asked withdrawal of the Israeli troops from Lebanon. The summit reaffirmed Arab countries' determination to provide Lebanon with all assistance it needed.

The declaration said that the summit "took note of the decision of the Lebanese Government to end the mission of the Arab deterrent force in Lebanon" and called on the Lebanese and Syrian Governments to "undertake negotiations in order to take new dispositions, in the light of the Israeli withdrawal from Lebanon."

The declaration said the summit regretted the continuation of the Iran-Iraq war despite efforts by various parties for a ceasefire.

The summit reiterated the "commitment to defend all Arab territories" and said "any aggression against any Arab state is an aggression against all Arab states." It urged Iran and Iraq to respect U.N. Security Council Resolutions 479 and 514 calling for a ceasefire. It appealed that other countries do nothing, directly or indirectly, to help the gulf war go on.

On the Horn of Africa, the Arab leaders decided to support Somalia's demand to preserve its territorial integrity and obtain the withdrawal of Ethiopian troops from its territory.

Praising the success of the summit, Moroccan King Hassan II said that decisions adopted by the summit showed that "we are only demanding our legitimate rights."

According to the final declaration, the summit decided to name a four-member committee of Arab leaders to contact permanent members of the U.N. Security Council to determine their position on the Arab-Israeli conflict and on the latest U.S. Middle East plan.

The committee will regularly report the results of its contacts and endeavors to Arab leaders.

At the closing session of the summit, King Husayn of Jordan, on behalf of all the participants, expressed thanks to the host country. Sudanese President Ja'far Numayri, Tunisian Prime Minister Mohamed Mzali and Secretary General of the Arab League Chedli Klibi also spoke on the occasion. The next Arab summit will be held in Riyadh, Saudi Arabia.

Commentator's Article

HK120752 Beijing RENMIN RIBAQ in Chinese 12 Sep 82 p 6

[Commentator's Article: "Strengthen Unity, Have Firm Orientation, Advance Bravely"]

[Text] The 12th Arab summit meeting victoriously concluded in Fez, capital of Morocco, on 9 September. The meeting achieved major positive results as a result of its consultations. The meeting approved an Arab plan for solving the Palestinian and Middle East problems, stressing that Israel must withdraw from occupied Arab territory, reiterating that the PLO is the sole legitimate representative of the Palestinian people and that the Palestinian people have the national right to establish a Palestinian state, and demanding that the UN Security Council guarantee the peace for the countries in the region (including an independent Palestine). This is the first constructive and relatively realistic plan for solving the Middle East problem to be jointly put forward by the Arab countries since the outbreak of the Arab-Israeli conflict in 1948. It is a clear expression of the desires of the Palestinian people and the Arab people. It can be predicted that the positive results of this meeting will greatly help toward a just, peaceful and comprehensive solution to the Palestinian and Middle East problems, and are bound to have a far-reaching effect on Middle East developments.

This Arab summit was held at a time when the Palestinian armed forces had withdrawn from Beirut, the Israeli aggressor army was still playing the tyrant in Lebanon and the United States had put forward a new plan for solving the Middle East problem. The tense situation and complex circumstances required that the Arab states rapidly give a clear-cut answer. The results of the meeting are undoubtedly a heavy blow at the Begin expansionist authorities. The Begin authorities launched an invasion of Lebanon in a vain attempt to wipe out the PLO's military forces and strangle the Palestinian people's just cause of returning to their homes. However, far from the Palestinian people's just struggle being extinguished -- and it could never be extinguished -- the results of the fes meeting prove that the Palestinian people have gained still more extensive and effective support from the Arab people and from nations in the world who love peace and uphold justice. Today, the Arab heads of state have spoken in a single voice in Fez; this shows that, when faced with grave challenges, the Arab countries are capable of uniting and advancing in step.

The results of the Fez summit are also a forceful reply to the new U.S. plan for the Middle East. Although the new U.S. plan differs in some respects from plans put forward in the past, there is no change at all in its fundamental pro-Israeli stand. In particular, it refuses to recognize the PLO as the sole legitimate representative of the Palestinian people and rejects the establishment of a Palestinian state. This is a violation of the relevant UN resolutions and lacks a sense of reality. On the eve of the Fez meeting, the Reagan administration attempted to take advantage of the temporary difficulties of the PLO and the Arab states to suddenly propose its new plan, obviously with the aim of influencing the meeting's oreintation. At the Fez meeting, however, the Arab states maintained their principled stand and attacked the plot to impose U.S. decisions on the Arab people. The U.S. Government's attitude toward the eight principles put forward by the Fez meeting will be a touchstone for judging whether it is continuing to favor the Begin authorities and is sincere about solving the Palestinian problem.

The results of this meeting also clearly showed that so long as the Arab states rely on their own strength, seek common ground while reserving difficulties and unite to become strong, they are able to bring tremendous strength into play. As is common knowledge, the Middle East is a focal region in the rivalry between the two hegemonists. The failure to solve the Middle East problem for so long is inseparably linked to the rivalry between the two hegemonists and Israel's aggression and expansion. History has repeatedly proven that in the final analysis the solution of the Palestinian and Middle East problems depends on the unity for battle of the Palestinian people and the Arab people. Unity is not only the requirement of the situation. It is also the fundamental interest of the Palestinian and Arab people. The principled stand shown by this Arab summit will undoubtedly be supported by the Arab millions, and is also bound to gain broad international sympathy and support. No matter how long and tortuous the road, and no matter how Israel stubbornly stands in the way, the just cause of the Arab people and the Palestinian people is sure to triumph in the end.

U.S. Response

OW110726 Beijing XINHUA in English 0700 GMT 11 Sep 82

[Text] Washington, September 10 (XINHUA) -- Secretary of State George Shultz, in a reaction to the Arab League summit proposal, said today that President Reagan "stands firmly behind his proposals" which offer a better chance for a durable Israeli-Arab settlement.

He pointed out that the eight-point proposal of the Fez summit differs from the Reagan initiative "on key and important issues." This was the first official U.S. reaction to the Arab summit proposal adopted Thursday night.

Testifying before the Senate Foreign Relations Committee on Reagan's peace initiative today, Shultz said Israel has also opposed the U.S. proposals. The reactions of the Israeli Government and of the Arab League are "clear, graphic evidence that the position of both sides must be negotiated if we are to bring genuine peace and security to this troubled region," he said.

On the question of whether the Arab League summit proposal provides for an "implicit Arab recognition of Israel," Shultz said, it would be "a real breakthrough" if it was confirmed that the summit recognized "Israel's right to exist."

He told the Senate committee that "now is the time for quiet diplomacy to pursue the President's initiative and bring it to fruition." He expressed the hope that Jordan will join in the peace process beyond those who have participated.

He disclosed that a program will be worked out for the "synchronized withdrawal of Syrian and Israeli forces" from Lebanon.

Israel Blasts Plan

OW111856 Beijing XINHUA in English 1501 GMT 11 Sep 82

[Text] Beijing, September 11 (XINHUA) -- Israeli Foreign Minister Yitzhaq Shamir yesterday totally rejected the new Arab Middle East peace plan as "a call for war against Israel", but urged Arab countries to enter direct negotiations with Israel, according to reports from Tel Aviv.

The Arab Middle East peace plan, which was worked out by Arab leaders at the summit in Fez, calls for establishment of an independent Palestinian state in the occupied West Bank with east Jerusalem as its capital and urges U.N. guarantees on the rights of the states in the region to live in peace.

Yitzhaq Shamir attacked the plan as "a plan to bring about the destruction of Israel." He said the Fez plan was "even worse than the Saudi plan" because it called for a Palestinian state which would be a threat to Israel's existence. He said that Israel will continue its struggle against the Palestine Liberation Organization "until it has been totally destroyed."

He reaffirmed Israel's refusal of U.S. President Reagan's Middle East peace plan, which calls for a Palestinian self-government in the occupied West Bank and Gaza strip.

Mubarak's Comments

OW121522 Beijing XINHUA in English 1502 GMT 12 Sep 82

[Text] Paris, September 11 (XINHUA) -- Egyptian President Husni Mubarak said here today the plan of the Fez Arab summit was "very good for the cause of the Middle East, but lacks the means of application."

After his talks with French President Francois Mitterrand, the Egyptian president said the U.S. Middle East proposals "contain positive points but we have remarks to make which we will raise with the Americans." "I think it is better to support Reagan's proposals and encourage as much as we can the United States to move forward," he added.

Mubarak was in Paris for a brief stopover en route home after his visits to Yugoslavia and Romania.

French Minister of Foreign Relations Claude Cheysson and Egyptian Foreign Minister Kamal Hassan 'Ali also held talks. Cheysson said after the meeting that the French-Egyptian July initiative on the Middle East, which supported the right of self-determination of the Palestinian people and mentioned the status of the Palestine Liberation Organization, proved better than the plans of Reagan and the Fez summit.

Discipline Commission's Report

OW122025 Beijing XINHUA Domestic Service in Chinese 1131 GMT 11 Sep 82

[Text] Beijing, 11 Sep (XINHUA) -- In its work report submitted to the 12th CPC National Congress, the Central Commission for Discipline Inspection recalls its main work and basic experiences during the past 3 years and more, and puts forward proposals for future work.

The report says that the commission, under the leadership of the party Central Committee, has mainly done the following work, centering on the improvement of party style, since its founding over 3 years ago.

1. It worked out and implemented the "Guiding Principles for Inner-Party Political Life" for improving party style.

Facts in the past 3 years prove that these principles have helped to educate the party members and correct the mistakes of those party organizations and party members that violated the party's organizational principles and have beome a powerful weapon for improving party style. In dealing with certain trends, the commission and many other local discipline inspection commissions have, in the light of the guiding principles, seriously handled a number of cases concerning the breaching of party style and violation of party discipline.

The commission also drafted the "Stipulations Concerning Amenities for High-Ranking Cadres," which have been put into practice after approval by the Central Committee. This, too, has helped to improve party style and the party's relations with the masses.

2. It has resolutely upheld the four cardinal principles and helped to keep the whole party politically in step with the Central Committee.

In 1979 and 1980, the commissions for discipline inspection at various levels focused their attention on investigating and handling those cases of resisting the implementation of the policy on cadres, and cases of rejecting the lines, principles and policies set by the 3d Plenary Session of the 11th CPC Central Committee. In 1981, the work of the commissions for discipline inspection at various levels mainly involved assisting various party committees to ensure the implementation of the Central Committee's principle of continuing to carry out economic readjustment and further promoting political stability. Shortly before and after the 6th Plenary Session of the 11th CPC Central Committee, they carried out struggles on two fronts against erroneous words and deeds of opposing the lines followed by the party Central Committee since its 3d plenary session.

3. It has redressed wrong, false and unjustifiable cases and implemented the party's policy on cadres.

Under the leadership of the party Central Committee and in accordance with the principle of seeking truth from facts, the Central Commission for Discipline Inspection reexamined some cases which had great impact on the party and the country. For example, the major frame-ups against Comrades Liu Shaoqi, Qu Qiubai and Pan Hannian were reversed. A number of comrades who were wrongly labeled as right opportunists or as having committed right deviationist mistakes in 1959 were rehabilitated. Reexamination was also made of great numbers of other wrong, false and unjustifiable cases brought up during the "Cultural Revolution" and cases left over from an earlier period.

4. It has participated in examining the cases of the Lin Biao and Jiang Qing counterrevolutionary cliques.

Under the leadership of the party Central Committee, the Central Commission for Discipline Inspection and commissions at various levels have worked together with other departments concerned in examining the cases of those who were linked to the Lin Biao and Jiang Qing counterrevolutionary cliques, further exposing the criminal activities of Lin Biao, Jiang Qing and their followers in the decade of turmoil and drawing conclusions on the important members who had connections with the two counterrevolutionary cliques.

5. It has corrected the unhealthy tendencies in the economic spheres and rebuffed the serious economic crimes.

From the second half of 1979, the Central Commission for Discipline Inspection began to present the issue of correcting the unhealthy tendencies in the economic sphere. In 1981, this issue was regarded as one of the major tasks that needed to be done to improve party style. After the Central Committee issued an "emergency notice" on cracking down on criminal activities in the economic field in January 1982, the discipline inspection commissions at all levels, acting as organs under various party committees to lead this struggle, made all-out efforts to crack down on serious economic crimes. Their initial successes in this regard have thwarted the unhealthy tendencies and effectively educated the broad masses of cadres and people on the need to struggle against the inroads of bourgeois ideas.

On the whole, the discipline inspection commissions at all levels have done a great deal of work in the past 3 years or so, which has facilitated the efforts to set things to rights, revive and carry forward the party's fine traditions and work style, strengthen party building and ensure the implementation of the party's line.

The report also summarizes the basic experiences gained in inspection of discipline. The report says: After more than 3 years of actual work, we think the following several issues are important:

1. The issue of the ruling party's work style is an issue which concerns the party's survival or demise.

The issue of the ruling party's work style, in the final analysis, is an issue concerning whether or not our party can maintain the nature of the vanguard of the working class and maintain a close relationship with the masses. The most dangerous aspect of unhealthy party work style is its detachment from the masses. Thanks to the efforts exerted by the whole party after the 3d Plenary Session of the 11th CPC Central Committee, the party's work style has improved and the party's prestige has heightened. Today the main trend of the party's contingents is still good and the party's work style is continuing to improve.

However, we must soberly realize that such problems as ideological impurity, unhealthy work style and undesirable elements can actually be found within our party; the party's work style has not been fundamentally improved; and unhealthy tendencies and violations of the law and discipline are still quite serious among a small number of party members and cadres. Comrades of the whole party must heighten their awareness and resolutely stop and combat these serious problems.

2. It is a principle of the party's political discipline that the whole party must keep in step with the Central Committee.

The key to realizing the historic task of achieving socialist modernization lies in upholding the party's leadership. Facts over the last 3 years and more prove that the party Central Committee's leadership; lines -- including the Marxist line set by its 3d plenary session -- principles and policies are correct. The issue now is to make sure that the whole party is politically at one with the Central Committee, and will resolutely implement the Central Committee's lines, principles and policies. No one is allowed to go his own way. All Communist Party members, especially the leading cadres at all levels, must keep in step with the Central Committee politically. This is the most important point of political discipline. Violating political discipline and boycotting and opposing the implementation of the party's lines, principles and policies are the most harmful and the most serious violation of party discipline. To make sure that the whole party will keep in step politically with the Central Committee, the whole party must, first of all, be unanimous on the fundamental issue of upholding the four cardinal principles. The harmful effects caused by the trend toward bourgeois liberalism and by upholding "left" mistakes should not be underestimated. From now on, as the party's organs to inspect discipline, we must work conscientiously to deal with cases concerning serious violations of the party's political discipline.

3. The struggle against inroads of bourgeois ideology is an important step to consolidate the party.

The struggle between corrosion by capitalist ideas and opposing corrosion with socialist ideas will inevitably continue for a long time to come during the stage of our country's socialist development. How to prevent our party members from degenerating under the corrosion and influence of capitalist ideas has become an important task of our ruling party under new historical conditions. All Communist Party members, particularly the party's leading cadres, must exert unremitting efforts to carry out the struggle against corrosion through to the end.

Dwelling on the future work of the commission, the report says that after the 12th CPC National Congress, the commission for discipline inspection at various levels should -- on the basis of educating party members on the new party constitution and the report of the 12th CPC National Congress and under the unified leadership of the party committees -- concentrate their efforts on rectifying party style, consolidating the party organizations, enforcing party discipline and fighting against all unhealthy tendencies inside the party and offenses committed by party members against law and discipline.

The report emphasizes that the first and foremost issue for effecting a fundamental turn for the better in party style is to uphold the party's political discipline, adhere to the four cardinal principles, endeavor to build socialist spiritual civilization with communist ideology as its core, and guarantee that the whole party is politically at one with the Central Committee. The commissions for discipline inspection at all levels must regard this as the focal point of their work.

To crack down on serious criminal activities in the economic sphere will be a fighting task of the party for a long period to come. The discipline inspection commissions at all levels should sum up experience, reinforce their strength and -- in coordination with other departments concerned -- adopt effective measures to overcome all obstacles and carry this struggle through to the end.

Doing a good job in party consolidation under the party's unified leadership not only is the commission's central task for the next 5 years, but also for a much longer period to come.

The report also emphatically explains how to strengthen leadership over discipline inspection and further improve the discipline inspectors' fighting capabilities in accordance with the stipulations of the new party constitution.

Li Xiannian's Address

OW110856 Beijing XINHUA in English 0842 GMT 11 Sep 82

[Text] Beijing, September 11 (XINHUA) -- Following is the full text of the closing speech delivered by Vice-Chairman Li Xiannian at the 12th National Congress of the Communist Party of China here this morning:

The twelfth national congress of our party has now successfully fulfilled its historic mission, thanks to the common effort of all the delegates.

This congress, after fully democratic discussions, has unanimously endorsed the report delivered by Comrade Hu Yaobang on behalf of the eleventh Central Committee of the party and adopted a resolution to this effect. Applying the basic principles of Marxism-Leninism and Mao Zedong Thought, the report of the Central Committee sums up the great successes we have achieved in setting things to rights in all fields of endeavour in the past six years, particularly since the third plenary session of the eleventh Central Committee, analyses the current political and economic situation in our country and puts forth the tasks and principles for creating a new situation in all fields of socialist modernization. We believe that, by firmly advancing in the direction indicated by the twelfth congress, the Chinese people, led by our party, will certainly win great new victories in the socialist cause.

After careful discussion by all the delegates, this congress has unanimously adopted the new constitution of the party, which has removed the "left" mistakes in the constitution adopted by the eleventh congress and which inherits and develops the strong points of the constitutions adopted by the seventh and eighth congresses. The new constitution is a crystallization of the party's historical experience and collective wisdom, and a powerful weapon for building a stronger party, both ideologically and organizationally, in the new historical period.

It should be pointed out that, while it has been relatively easy to formulate the new party constitution, it will not be as easy to implement it strictly throughout the party. We must carry on ideological education and organizational work in real earnest, resolutely rectify the party style and consolidate all party organizations as the constitution requires and fight against all words and actions that contravene the constitution, so that members of our party may truly act as good examples to the masses and that our party may truly become a strong leading core for the cause of socialist modernization.

After full deliberations and democratic election at this congress a new Central Committee and also a Central Advisory Commission and a Central Commission for Discipline Inspection have come into being. Thus a major organizational guarantee is provided for the realization of the principles and tasks set forth by the twelfth congress. The new Central Committee consists both of old and long-tested comrades and of a great number of younger comrades. They will assuredly work together in close unity and cooperation and make the new Central Committee an even stronger command headquarters than its predecessor. The newly formed Central Advisory Commission consists of many old comrades of high integrity and prestige. It will assuredly serve as a good political assistant and consultant to the Central Committee and contribute to the cause of the party by helping and guiding younger comrades and passing on experience to them. The Central Commission for Discipline Inspection, now elected by the national congress of the party, is entrusted with greater responsibilities than its predecessor. It will play an important role in ensuring implementation of the new party constitution, upholding party discipline and maintaining the communist purity of the party. Here, on behalf of the presidium of this congress, and the old comrades on it in particular, I would like to express our warm welcome to the young and middle-aged comrades who have been elected to the central leading organs. We hope that they will guard against conceit and impetuosity, be modest and prudent, study diligently, shoulder with courage the tasks assigned them by the party and achieve outstanding results in their work.

Comrades! How well our party will do its work in the five years between the present congress and the next will be a matter of key importance to the realization of the general task set for the new period. This congress has proposed that we should, in these five years, bring about a fundamental turn for the better in three spheres, namely, the financial and economic situation of our country, the standards of social conduct, and the style of our party. At the same time, we must work together with our compatriots in Taiwan, Xianggang (Hong Kong) and Aomen (Macao) and Chinese nationals residing abroad to promote the reunification of our motherland. And we must wage a common struggle with the people of all countries to safeguard world peace. These are great, solemn and arduous fighting tasks, and we must not in the least slacken our effort. As soon as this congress is over, we must bestir ourselves and intensively propagate the spirit of the congress throughout the party and among the people of all nationalities. We will organize all party members, Communist Youth League members, workers, peasants, intellectuals, Liberation Army commanders and fighters, cadres and all other patriotic citizens to conscientiously study the report of the Central Committee to this congress, the new party constitution, Comrade Deng Xiaoping's opening speech and the important speeches made by Comrades Yi Jianying and Chen Yun, so that the principles and tasks set forth by the congress will be made known to everybody and will strike root in the hearts of the people. In the meantime, we must, in the light of the specific conditions in different localities and departments, adopt practical and effective measures for the full realization of these principles and tasks.

Comrades! While striving to accomplish the various fighting tasks set by the twelfth party congress, we must further strengthen the great unity of the whole party and of the people of all nationalities in our country. Our great socialist cause is advancing victoriously along the correct path of Marxism. We are convinced that, so long as we rally closely round the Central Committee, rouse ourselves and work assiduously, we shall be able to steer the great ship of our revolution and construction steadily towards our great goal.

Throughout the congress, all the comrades working for it, including the secretarial staff, those in charge of general affairs and those engaged in security, medical care and other daily services, in drafting and translating the documents and covering the congress, in communications and liaison services, and in printing the documents -- all these comrades have been working hard day and night to help make the congress a success. People of the Beijing Municipality have also made their contributions. Here, on behalf of the presidium of the congress, I would like to convey our heartfelt thanks to them.

Now, I declare the successful conclusion of the Twelfth National Congress of the Communist Party of China.

Zhu Muzhi's Press Conference

OW111212 Beijing XINHUA in English 1201 GMT 11 Sep 82

[Text] Beijing, September 11 (XINHUA) -- Zhu Muzhi, spokesman of the 12th National Congress of the Communist Party of China, briefed Chinese and foreign correspondents in Beijing this afternoon on the results of election of the central leading bodies of the party.

He made a brief analysis of the composition of the new Central Committee, the Central Advisory Commission and the Central Commission for Discipline Inspection elected at the congress, which closed here this morning.

Quoting from Comrade Li Xiannian's closing address, he pointed out that the congress has successfully fulfilled its historic mission.

"It can well be said that the new Central Committee has been elected in line with the principle of assimilating younger, better educated and professionally competent comrades who possess political integrity," Zhu Muzhi said.

As its composition shows, he said, the new Central Committee embodies the cooperation between old and new cadres and the succession of the new to the old.

This will ensure the continuity of the party's correct line, which has been followed since the Third Plenary Session of the 11th Central Committee. It will also strengthen party unity and consolidate political stability and solidarity throughout the country, he said.

The new Central Committee, Zhu Muzhi said, will serve as the strong command headquarters in leading the whole party and the people of all nationalities in the country in the struggle to create a new situation in all fields of socialist modernization.

Stressing the historic significance of the 12th party congress, Zhu Muzhi said the congress specified the basic conclusion the party had drawn from long years of struggle, that is, to integrate the universal truth of Marxism with the concrete realities of China, blaze a path of her own and build socialism with Chinese characteristics. The congress laid down the principles and tasks for the new historic period, and endorsed a party constitution that will turn the party into a strong leading core for the cause of socialist modernization.

All this, he said, will have a tremendous impact on China's advance.

Zhu Muzhi answered questions at the press conference.

New Members Prevail

[Text] Beijing, September 11 (XINHUA) -- With the election of a new Central Committee by the 12th National Congress of the Chinese Communist Party, the cooperation between old and new cadres and the succession of the new to the old has been realized organizationally in the highest leading body of the party.

Large numbers of fine and younger cadres who possess both political integrity and ability have entered the Central Committee.

Two hundred and eleven of the 348 members and alternate members of the new Central Committee are elected for the first time. They account for over 60 percent of the total.

Of those new members, more than 140, or over two-thirds of the total, are less than 60 years old, the youngest being 38. They come from all parts of the country. A large portion of them are specialized cadres who have distinguished themselves on the economic front. Others include outstanding representatives from the cultural and educational fields, and leading party, government and army cadres at various levels.

A dozen highly esteemed proletarian revolutionaries of the older generation who are above the age of 70 and enjoy high prestige at home and abroad remain on the Central Committee. Of the other old comrades on the 11th Central Committee, many have been elected to the Central Advisory Commission and the Central Commission for Discipline Inspection.

During the election of the new Central Committee, attention was also paid to assimilating better educated and professionally competent comrades, who are politically qualified. Compared with the 11th Central Committee, the number of specialized personnel has increased from nine to 59, that is, from 2.7 percent to 17 percent.

On the Central Committee are 31 members of minority nationalities (8.9 percent of the total) and 24 women members (6.9 percent).

Congress' 'Fine Meeting Style'

[Article by XINHUA reporter Zou Aiguo: "The New Style of Meeting -- Sidelights on the 12th National CPC Congress"]

[Excerpts] Beijing, 9 Sep (XINHUA) -- The 12th National CPC Congress has been held in a solemn and lively manner. The working personnel at the congress secretariat have been very much impressed with the fine meeting style manifested at this congress.

Many leading cadres are attending this congress, but they have very few personal attendants and the number of automobiles they use is far less than originally planned. The secretariat gave me the following figures:

The number of working personnel and personal attendants at this congress is 2/3 the number originally planned and the congress' expenditures are about 20 percent less than originally planned.

Delegates from all parts of the nation have taken an active part in the activities of the congress and have set strict demands for themselves in their daily lives. At a reception center for artillery troops, I learned that the delegations from Beijing, Henan and Shanxi had each offered to concede rooms to others out of courtesy.

Participants at this congress have all been assigned to stay at the reception centers inside government organs. The delegations from Beijing, Henan and Shanxi were assigned to stay at the reception center for artillery troops where there were fewer rooms and the conditions were less than satisfactory. There were only a dozen rooms with toilets. To whom should these rooms be assigned?

On learning of this matter, the leading comrades of the party committees of Beijing Municipality and Henan and Shanxi Provinces respectively instructed their advance parties what to do.

Duan Junyi, first secretary of the Beijing Municipal CPC Committee, said: "As delegates from the capital, we must yield the good rooms to delegates from other places."

Liv Jie, first secretary of the Henan Provincial CPC Committee, said: "Good rooms should be reserved for the Beijing delegation which has many elderly comrades."

Huo Shilian, first secretary of the Shanxi Provincial CPC Committee, said: "The delegations from Beijing and Henan deserve the good rooms because they have more people."

The receptionist group for the congress was deeply impressed with the fine style manifested by the three delegations. During the actual consultations on alloting the rooms, their rooms for one another and they all felt relieved at heart.

While at the residence of the PLA delegation to gather news, the working personnel there told me that when the PLA delegation was first formed, delegation leader Yang Shangkun asked all members to play an exemplary role in carrying forward the glorious traditions of the party and the army. In the course of the congress, it became evident that the PLA delegation did bring out its exemplary role in a prominent manner.

[Station commentary: "Advance Bravely Along the Course Charted by the 12th Party National Congress -- Warmly Congratulating the CPC on the Successful Conclusion of its 12th National Congress"]

[Text] The 12th CPC National Congress has fulfilled its predetermined tasks and come to a victorious close. This congress was a most important meeting since our party's seventh national congress, a milestone of most epochal significance in the course of developing our country's socialist moderization. Its great merits and achievements are concentratedly manifested in the following three aspects:

First, it has scientifically summed up the historical experience gained in China's socialist revolution and construction and made a profound analysis of the present actual conditions in the country. By so doing, it has fully confirmed and developed the correct line, principles and policies formulated at the 3d plenary session of the 11th party Central Committee, pointed out the correct road of continuous advance and put forward the strategic goals for thoroughly eliminating the negative effects of the 10 years of internal chaos and creating a new situation in the country's all-round socialist modernization, thereby charting a course of continuous victory and advance for the entire party, the whole army and the people of all nationalities in the country.

Second, to suit the salient features of the new historical period and to meet the requirements of this perod, it has pooled the entire party's wisdom and formulated a new party constitution which is richer and more sound in contents than previous party constitutions, thus providing a brilliant guidance for raising party membership criteria, enhancing the fighting strength of party organizations, strengthening and improving party leadership and building the party into a staunch core leading the cause of socialist modernization.

Third, it has elected a new party Central Committee, a Central Advisory Commission and a Central Discipline Inspection Commission. Elected to the new central leading bodies of the party are time-tested proletarian revolutionaries and large numbers of middle-aged and young cadres who have both ability and political integrity and are in the prime of life. With the cooperation between old and new cadres and the succession of the new to the old, these new central leading organs of the party will be a more vigorous, strong fighting command headquarters.

The party's general task in the new historical period as defined by its 12th national congress is to unite the people of all nationalities in the country to rely on their own efforts and wage hard struggle to modernize China's industry, agriculture, national defense, science and technology step by step and to build China into a socialist country which is highly cultured and highly democratic.

Acting in line with the general task, the 12th party national congress has put forward the requirements in work for the next 5 years. Generally these requirements can be summarized into one central task, four important areas of work and three improvements. The central task is to concentrate our strength on economic construction aimed at materializing socialist modernization and to work hard to attain the great goal of quadrupling the country's total industrial and agricultural output value by the end of this century. Failure or success of our economic construction will, in the final analysis, decide the outcome of our work in all other fields or, in other words, our country's future and destiny. The four important areas of work are: 1) to continuously restructure the state administration and the economic set-up and gradually make the ranks of cadres more revolutionary, younger in average age, better educated and professionally more competent; 2) to vigorously build a socialist spiritual civilization centered on communist ideology; 3) to resolutely strike at criminal activities in the economic, political and cultural fields that seriously undermine socialism; and 4) to earnestly rectify party style and consolidate the party organization. These four areas of work are the political guarantee for our adherence to the socialist road and for the realization of our socialist modernization. We should firmly grasp the central task and step up efforts in these four areas of work, for our aim is to fundamentally improve the country's financial and economic situation, improve our social practice and improve our party style.

At the same time, we should strive for the reunification of our motherland. This is the fighting call issued by the 12th party national congress to the entire party, the whole army and the people of all nationalities throughout the country. They concentratedly reflect the will and aspiration of the party and the people.

The task we are facing is glorious and arduous and we are fully confident of fulfilling it. History has proved that our party is capable of surmounting all kinds of difficulties and hardships, dealing with various complex situations and leading the people to victory from any setbacks and from victory to victory. Our people have tremendous, inexhaustible and invincible strength. With such a great party as the CPC and with such a great people as our's, we are confident of victory in the future.

We should conscientiously study the report delivered to the congress by Comrade Hu Yaobang on behalf of the party Central Committee and study the new party constitution and all other documents of the 12th party national congress so that the guidelines of this congress are clearly understood by every household and take root in the hearts of the people.

The party organization of every unit and department, all Communist Party members and all CYL members, workers, peasants, PLA commanders and fighters, and intellectuals should deeply understand, enthusiastically propagate, and earnestly implement all the principles and policies as well as the requirements in work put forward by the 12th party national congress. They should strive to win new merits and create a new situation in their units or organizations and on their posts.

The brilliant achievements of the 12th party national congress have greatly educated and encouraged the entire party, the whole army and the people of all nationalities throughout the country. Let us rally more closely around the party Central Committee and unswervingly and bravely advance along the course charted by this congress.
